The work of preparing the records of the war for public use was begun, under the resolution of Congress of May 19, 1864, by Col. E. D. Townsend, assistant adjutant-general, U. S. Army (then in charge of the Adjutant-General's Office, and subsequently the Adjutant-General), who caused copies to be made of reports of battles on file in his office and steps to be taken to collect missing records.

Under the provisions of joint resolution of July 27, 1866, Hon. Peter H. Watson was appointed to supervise the preparation of the records and to formulate a plan for their publication, but he performed no service under this appointment, which expired July 27, 1868, by limitation. This resolution having also repealed the former one, the project was suspended for the time being.

The first decisive step taken was the act of June 23, 1874, providing the necessary means "to enable the Secretary of War to begin the publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, both of the Union and Confederate Armies," and directing him "to have copied for the Public Printer all reports, letters, telegrams, and general orders, not heretofore copied or printed, and properly arranged in chronological order." Appropriations have been made from time to time for continuing such preparation. Under this act the preliminary work was resumed by General Townsend.

Subsequently, under meager appropriations, it was prosecuted in a somewhat desultory manner by various subordinates of the War Department until December 14, 1877, when the Secretary of War, perceiving that the undertaking needed the undivided attention of a single head, detailed Capt. Robert N. Scott, Third U. S. Artillery (subsequently major and lieutenant-colonel same regiment), to take charge of the office.

The act of June 23, 1874, enlarged upon the first scheme of publication. On this more comprehensive basis it was determined that the volumes should include not only the battle reports, correspondence, etc., in possession of the War Department, but also "all official documents that can be obtained by the compiler, and that appear to be of any historical value." Colonel Scott systematized the work, and, upon his recommendation, the Secretary of War approved the following order of publication:

The first series will embrace the formal reports, both Union and Confederate, of the first seizures of United States property in the Southern States, and of all military operations in the field, with the correspondence, orders, and returns relating specially thereto, and, as proposed, is to be accompanied by an Atlas.

In this series the reports will be arranged according to the campaigns and several theaters of operations (in the chronological order of events), and the Union reports of any event will, as a rule, be immediately followed by the Confederate accounts. The correspondence, etc., not embraced in the "reports" proper will follow (first Union and next Confederate) in chronological order.

The second series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns, Union and Confederate, relating to prisoners of war, and (so far as the military authorities were concerned) to state or political prisoners.

The third series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the Union authorities (embracing their correspondence with the Confederate officials) not relating specially to the subjects of the first and second series. It will set forth the annual and special reports of the Secretary of War, of the General-in-Chief, and of the chiefs of the several staff corps and departments; the calls for troops, and the correspondence between the National and the several State authorities.

The fourth series will exhibit the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the Confederate authorities, similar to that indicated for the Union officials, as of the third series, but excluding the correspondence between the Union and Confederate authorities given in that series.

The first volume of the records was issued in the early fall of 1880. The act approved June 16, 1880, provided "for the printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of 10,000 copies of a compilation of the Official Records (Union and Confederate) of the War of the Rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication, during the fiscal year;" and that "of said number 7,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Executive Departments." Under this act Colonel Scott proceeded to publish the first five volumes of the records.*

*All subsequent volumes have been distributed under the act approved August 7, 1882, which provides that:

"The volumes of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion shall be distributed as follows: One thousand copies to the Executive Departments, as now provided by law. One thousand copies for distribution by the Secretary of War among officers of the Army and contributors to the work. Eight thousand three hundred copies shall be sent by the Secretary of War to such libraries, organizations, and individuals as may be designated by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the Forty-seventh Congress. Each Senator shall designate not exceeding twenty-six, and each Representative and Delegate not exceeding twenty-one, of such addresses, and the volumes shall be sent thereto from time to time as they are published, until the publication is completed. Senators, Representatives, and Delegates shall inform the Secretary of War in each case how many volumes of those heretofore published they have forwarded to such addresses. The remaining copies of the eleven thousand to be published, and all sets that may not be ordered to be distributed as provided herein, shall be sold by the Secretary of War for cost of publication with ten per cent. added thereto, and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury. If two or more sets of said volumes are ordered to the same address, the Secretary of War shall inform the Senators, Representatives, or Delegates who have designated the same, who thereupon may designate other libraries, organizations, or individuals. The Secretary of War shall report to the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress what volumes of the series heretofore published have not been furnished to such libraries, organizations, and individuals. He shall also inform distributees at whose instance the volumes are sent."

Colonel Scott died March 5, 1887. At his death some twenty-six books only had been issued, but he had compiled a large amount of matter for forthcoming volumes; consequently his name as compiler was retained in all the books up to and including Vol. XXXVI, although his successors had added largely to his compilations from new material found after his demise.

The Secretary of War, May 7, 1887, assigned Lieut. Col. H. M. Lazelle, Twenty-third U. S. Infantry, to duty as the successor of Colonel Scott. He had continued in charge about two years, when, in the act approved March 2, 1889, it was provided—

That hereafter the preparation and publication of said records shall be conducted, under the Secretary of War, by a board of three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Army, and two civilian experts, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, the compensation of said civilian experts to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

The Secretary of War appointed Maj. George B. Davis, judge-advocate, U. S. Army, as the military member, and Leslie J. Perry, of Kansas, and Joseph W. Kirkley, of Maryland, as the civilian expert members of said board. The board assumed direction of the publication at the commencement of the fiscal year 1889, its first work beginning with Serial No. 36 of Vol. XXIV.

July 1, 1895, by direction of the Secretary of War, Maj. George W. Davis, Eleventh U. S. Infantry (subsequently lieutenant-colonel Fourteenth U. S. Infantry), relieved Maj. George B. Davis as the military member and president of the Board of Publication. Subsequently Col. Fred C. Ainsworth, Chief of the Record and Pension Office, War Department, was appointed the military member and president of the board, relieving Lieut. Col. George W. Davis June 1, 1898.

December 1, 1898, under the provision of the sundry civil act of July 1, 1898, relative to the War Records Office, the Board of Publication was dissolved, whereupon, by direction of the Secretary of War, the continuance of the work, beginning with Vol. VI, Series II, devolved on Colonel (now Brigadier-General) Ainsworth.

By operation of law (contained in "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900," approved February 24, 1899), the War Records Office was merged into the Record and Pension Office, July 1, 1899, and since that date the work of publication has been conducted under the supervision of the chief of that office.

Each volume includes a copious index, and for the further convenience of investigators there will be, in addition, a separate general index to the entire set.

Nothing is printed in these volumes except duly authenticated contemporaneous records of the war. The scope of the compiler's work is to decide upon and arrange the matter to be published; to correct and verify the orthography of the papers used, and, wherever deemed necessary, to add a foot-note of explanation.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 1. } Richmond, January 4, 1864.

I. If immediately after the death of an officer there be no family connection or legal representative present to whom the officer charged by the Ninety-fourth Article of War with securing his effects may deliver them, he will turn them over, under the provisions of paragraph III, General Orders, No. 67, 1863, to the quartermaster of the regiment or post, as the circumstances may indicate to be proper.

II. Surgeons or assistant surgeons in charge of hospitals will, upon the death of a soldier in hospital, furnish the Second Auditor of the Treasury a statement from their rolls showing the last payment preceding his death made to such soldier.

The PRESIDENT OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

SIR: The letter of His Excellency Governor Brown,* transmitting to you the resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Georgia, declaring—

That believing it to be the constitutional right of all soldiers who went from Georgia through the agency of the State to elect their regimental, battalion, and company officers, we request our Representatives in Congress, as a proper appreciation of the patriotic devotion, patience, and toil of our gallant soldiers in this sanguinary struggle for independence, to use their zealous efforts to procure, at the earliest practicable day, such a change in existing Confederate laws as shall secure the right of all regiments, battalions, and companies in the Confederate service from this State to elect all their regimental, battalion, and company officers, has been referred by you to this Department, and has been respectfully considered. This claim was presented by His Excellency to this Department in several communications, which are submitted, together with the response of the Department to the claim as made by him.

His Excellency does not deny that the action of this Department has been in accordance with the legislation of Congress, and this Department has not considered it to be its duty to vindicate to him at large that legislation as being in accordance with the Constitution. It is proper, however, for it to say that it did not entertain doubt on the subject, and had no scruple in conforming its administration to the will of Congress.

Very respectfully,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., January 4, 1864.

His Excellency Z. B. VANCE,
Governor of North Carolina, Raleigh, N. C.:

SIR: Your letter of the 29th ultimo, with the resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina relative to impressments in that State, has been received.* The Department has taken the utmost care, by its general orders and by its instructions in writing and otherwise, to mitigate as far as practicable the evils consequent upon the execution of the law relative to impressment. These orders provide that necessary supplies which any person may have for the consumption of himself, his family, employés, slaves, or to carry on his ordinary mechanical, manufacturing, or agricultural employments, shall not be impressed, and until further orders, which will not be given unless under imperative exigencies for the supply of the Army, not to impress necessities of subsistence to man owned by producers in transitu to market, or after arrival at market, unless retained an unreasonable time from sale to consumer. The seventh section of the act of Congress of 26th of March last, which has been published as a part of the instructions, requires that the supplies to be exempt as family supplies shall be ascertained by appraisers, and that the judgment of the appraisers is to be conclusive on the impressing officer. Each citizen claiming to hold the property impressed for his family supply is entitled to claim the benefit of an appraisement and to designate one of the appraisers who shall act with an appraiser to be appointed by the impressing officer, and who is entitled to aid in the selection of an umpire in case of their disagreement. The Department has enjoined upon the Commissary Department that the power intrusted to it should be employed with discrimination and care, and that all the directions of the act of Congress and of this Department for the execution of the act should be scrupulously fulfilled. This Department is constantly employed in correcting irregularities in the execution of these regulations, and the eleventh section of the act furnished a remedy to every citizen aggrieved. In the report from this Department which has been submitted to Congress, a copy of which is sent to Your Excellency with this letter, you will find a statement of the difficulties under which the Government labors in providing for the subsistence of the Army, and how much of the evils complained of is the result of inexorable necessity.* The Department has heretofore, and will in the future exert itself to confine these evils within the exact limits of that necessity.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

GENERAL ORDERS, }      ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 2.                                 Richmond, January 5, 1864.

For the information of all concerned, and to correct prevalent misapprehension, it is announced that there exists no mandatory provision of law securing to enrolled conscripts the right to choose in what company or regiment they will serve. They cannot be assigned to companies from other States, and in general their wishes are to be consulted as to the choice of companies, where no considerations for the good of the service intervene to prevent compliance. Assignments once made by commandants of conscripts in good faith, in the exercise of their discretion, will not be considered as fit subjects for complaints.

By order:

AN ACT to continue in force an act entitled "An act to provide for the compensation of certain persons therein named," approved May the first, eighteen hundred and sixty-three.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the act entitled "An act to provide for the compensation of certain persons therein named," approved May the first, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, which, by its own limitation, would expire on the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be, and the same is hereby, continued in force until the first of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OF ALABAMA,
Montgomery, January 6, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: Unless the planting interest in the South can be carried on successfully the armies of the Confederacy cannot be supported. Without iron the planting interests cannot be profitably carried on.

* See Vol. II, this series, p. 990.

Alabama has an immense quantity of iron ore, and many of her people are making iron, but all or nearly all have contracts with the Confederate Government to deliver all they make to the Government authorities. The consequence is that the planters, even in the best iron regions of the State, cannot get enough iron to make and repair their agricultural implements. Now, sir, the object of this communication is to ask that the contractors be authorized to sell to planters some of the iron they make. I have numbers of letters showing the necessity for such instructions to your contractors and agents. It is useless to enlarge on a subject which must be fully appreciated at a glance by the Secretary of War. Will you grant this right?

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

T. H. WATTS,
Governor of Alabama.

Governor VANCE:

I regret to learn that because of an interest of your State in the steamer Don, objection is made to its conforming to the regulation about taking out Government cotton. The necessities of the Government really require adherence to this regulation, and I earnestly hope that you will not encourage or allow in your name the infringement of it.

J. A. SEDDON,

RICHMOND HOUSE,

President Confederate States of America:

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to a weak point in the enemy's lines to which your mind may not have been directed. I allude to the Irish element in the Northern population. A resident of twenty years in Philadelphia, seventeen of which I was a wholesale bookseller, publisher, &c., and having quite a number of that class in my employment in binding, printing-office, and store, coupled with the fact that my parents were natives of Ireland, naturally created in my mind a sympathy for them, more especially as they were, about the time of my going to Philadelphia, objects of bitter and most intense persecution by an ignorant band of bigots. The interest I felt and manifested for them soon gave me quite an extensive acquaintance among them. I merely mention this fact to show you that my estimate of their character and knowledge of their views upon our question is not based upon superficial information. As soon as civil war seemed inevitable I began the tedious task of selling out and collecting, in order that I might hasten to this my native place. The regular routine of business broken up, I had much leisure time, which I used to the best advantage for the furtherance of our cause. Partly from the calls of business, together with a desire to see and converse with the Irish operatives in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, I visited during the summer of 1861 the counties of Lehigh, Carbon, Schuylkill, Berks, &c. I asserted that the native American and Know-Nothing were identical with the Black Republican party. I reminded them that the former had burned their churches in 1844; the Know-Nothing party had proscribed every man who had a Mc or an O to his name during the winter of 1857 and 1858, driving many thousands of families into starvation during the continuance of that short but certainly most severe financial storm which raged throughout the North at that period. Failing to accomplish their full purpose at each of these times by reason of the steady opposition of the South, and especially Virginia, where Know-Nothingism met its death, they changed their name and tactics, and by a loud outcry for the negro, for whom they had no real sympathy, but used him as a weapon against both the Irish and the South—their chief aim and object being to free the negro as far as they could, bring him North, put him in competition with the white labor, believing that they would work cheaper than the Irish, and, above all, they would not be permitted to vote. The effect of these short conversations, I can assure you, were most happy, and what added point to my argument was that many of these men had been driven from places of public employment during the winter of 1857 and 1858 by the Know-Nothing party, which was then in power in the select and common councils of Philadelphia. After the first battle of Manassas, T. F. Meagher came to Philadelphia to drum up recruits for his Irish Brigade. He made a capital speech; I feared a telling one. I worked night and day to neutralize his speech. His treatment of the Irish girl who aided him in making his escape from Australia, and his subsequent marriage with a Yankee girl, was an admirable argument against him, which I failed not to use on every occasion. The result was he obtained but few recruits in Philadelphia—not more than a corporal's guard. I mention these circumstances to show you that the great body of Irish at the North feel a deep interest in our success, more especially in Pennsylvania, where they have been subjected to bitter persecution. Although I am an elder in the Presbyterian Church, yet I had conversations with quite a number of Roman Catholic priests at the North, all of whom, with one exception, expressed the utmost confidence and sympathy in our success. Private letters which I received from James A. McMaster, editor of the Freeman's Journal, allude to the efforts which the North were making most cunningly to identify the South with these objectionable parties; a fact that I had noticed such artists, with those who had any knowledge of the subject, would awake only a feeling of indignation and contempt; but we know there are many Irish (those but recently arrived) who would believe the statement; and I have no doubt that the burning of the convent at Charlestown, Mass., by a mob has ere this been located at Charleston, S. C.

I owe you an apology for thus troubling you with this communication, but I do it from the best motives for our good. The views generally met the cordial approval of Hon. James A. Bayard, of Delaware, and Hon. Charles Brown, of Philadelphia, with the latter of whom I had frequent interviews before I left, March, 1862. In your judgment you may see some plan by which this party might be strengthened and encouraged by some complimentary allusion to the Irish in our Confederacy.

Begging pardon for the liberty I take, I remain, dear sir, yours, very respectfully,

S. C. HAYES,
C. S. Register's Office.

After writing the above my attention was attracted by a letter from Mr. Smith O'Brien in the Sentinel, which I concluded to read before I sent this, thinking possibly that the same suggestions I make might meet your eye in a more agreeable form. I see nothing, however, in the letter or the editorial but additional evidence to my mind that we ought now to have the very best writers in the Confederacy engaged either as editors or regular contributors to the press. I have seen the evil effects flowing from the editorial attacks upon Mr. Benjamin in the Richmond papers. Mr. Chase, I have no doubt, had much cause to thank the Richmond editors for applying the name Jew as a term of contemptuous reproach to our Secretary of State, for large subscription to his 7.30 stock was made immediately by this very class at the North, some of whom remarked to me in the streets of Philadelphia, "Puritanism is worse at the South than in New England." Hon. James A. Bayard, of Delaware, in a conversation I had with him in February, 1862, remarked that if President Davis could obtain the cordial support of all the papers of the South, which he richly deserved, the war would close in six months, but that the silly attacks in the Richmond press tended to prolong the struggle, as it gave point to the abolitionists, who claim that there is a large Union element at the South. I feel very great hesitation in sending this to you, but I think it can certainly do no harm, except it be adding additional trouble to you in reading it.

Yours, very respectfully,

S. C. HAYES,
Register's Office, Richmond House.

HDQRS. ARMIES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES,
August 22, 1864.

Respectfully returned to His Excellency the President.

This paper contains suggestions which I deem valuable and practicable. The employment of some judicious person to operate on this class of people through our own press and that of the North would no doubt be attended with good results. In this connection I suggest the printing in English, German, and French a large number of the recent general orders inviting foreigners in the Federal ranks to come to us and offering them protection. With care many of these papers could be introduced into the enemy's lines.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., January 6, 1864.

Hon. C. J. MCRAE,
Burlington Hotel, London, England:

SIR: Hon. J. E. Ward, of Georgia, has submitted to the Department plans suggested by certain capitalists in London, who are large holders of cotton bonds, to which he has sought my approval. The plan contemplates in substance that the bondholders subscribe 10 per cent. of the amount held by them, to be appropriated to the purchase or construction of steamers, which are to be turned over to the Confederate Government on condition that, being sailed at the expense of the Government, they shall be employed in transporting cotton to England, which shall there be sold and the proceeds applied, one-fourth to the payment of the cost of the steamers; one-fourth to be applied to keeping up the number of steamers, and the residue to the payment of the bonds held by the subscribers to the fund. The Government running the boats is to have the control and use of them for return cargoes. These are the leading features.

There are some stipulations of minor character to the approval of Messrs. De Vaux & Co., the parties selected as the consignees of the cotton and the agents of the subscribers, which would require modification, as the dignity of the Government would require such matters to be left to its own control and good faith. The general scheme, as you will perceive, is addressed rather to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who must determine the time and mode of discharging the cotton bonds, than to myself, from whom only an expression of opinion has been sought by Mr. Ward. I have no hesitation in saying that such a plan would be beneficial, in my judgment, and I deem it probable you have received, or will receive, from the Secretary of the Treasury some expression of like general approval. It would, of course, be even more acceptable if some portion of the proceeds of the cotton sent out in these vessels could be appropriated to the more immediate and pressing necessities of the Government; but as the vessels would be furnished without expense to us, and an adequate return for the charge of running them would be afforded by the return cargo, and as, moreover, the whole proceeds of the cotton would in one form or another inure to the benefit of the Government, it does not appear to me that the point could in equity be insisted on. You will, of course, endeavor to obtain it if practicable.

On another point, however, there should be a clear understanding, and that is, that while the Government will use all reasonable efforts to supply the cotton to these vessels promptly and regularly, if, through deficiency of transportation or otherwise it should be unable to provide at our ports the cotton which it has the means of sending out directly for its immediate necessities, and likewise the cotton required for these steamers, preference will be given to the export of the former. The reasonableness of this, it is expected, will be seen and acquiesced in. These are at best but opinions expressed in a matter not strictly subject to my direction, but only collaterally connected with the business which has been thrown on this Department. They will, of course, not be regarded by you as instructions. So far as I am concerned, the matter is cheerfully left to your discretion, acting under the more direct instructions, whatever they may be, which may be given by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

HEADQUARTERS CHALMERS' CAVALRY,
Near Como, January 7, 1864.

Hon. CHARLES CLARK,
Governor of Mississippi:

DEAR SIR: I hear of several persons here who profess to have authority from you to raise regiments for service of the State of Mississippi, and they claim the right to enlist conscripts in their command. Col. John R. Dickins, Col. William Nesbitt, and Capt. Williamson Hunt are the parties alluded to. I know Colonel Dickins well, and know him to be a good soldier and most excellent officer, and would be most pleased to see him in command of a regiment if he could obtain it legally; but so long as I am in command here, with the law and orders now before me, I cannot permit any more conscripts to enter the State service; and as I do not wish any misunderstanding or bad feeling to grow up between you and myself, I address you on the subject direct. General Pemberton established a line running through Panola, Oxford, and Fuller, and authorized the enlistment of conscripts into State companies north of that line, to be retained during the term for which the State troops were enlisted, unless sooner called for by Confederate authorities. General Pillow, by order issued September 6, 1863, abolished that line and forbid the enlistment of any more conscripts in any new commands, whether State or Confederate. General Johnston issued an order directing that General Pillow's orders should be obeyed in all matters concerning conscripts; and Major-General Lee issued an order some time about September 16, 1863, directing that no addition should be allowed to the rolls of State troops then in service. You are aware that the conscript law does not permit any such enlistments, and I hope, therefore, you will instruct your officers not to enlist any conscripts in their commands, or attempt to do so.

Capt. Williamson Hunt imposed upon Governor Pettus with a muster-roll of a company which he never could assemble in camp, and I refused to recognize the little squad that he had as a company, and some of the men entered the Confederate service. Hunt now claims these men under orders from you. I have not seen his orders, but could not allow any such order to be enforced if he has it without instructions from the Secretary of War. There are some other companies here—Captain Floyd, Captain Perry, and others—who claim sometimes to belong to Mississippi State service and sometimes to one Colonel Collins, authorized by the Secretary of War to raise a regiment within the enemy's lines. The men and officers all formerly belonged to Colonel Blythe's old regiment, the term of service of which, according to the representation of both men and officers, was for twelve months. That term of enlistment has long since expired, and no authority has ever been granted to them to re-enlist in State service. There are some good men among these companies, but the great majority are simply seeking some hiding-place from conscription, and never will do any service as cavalry, or while they remain so close to their homes, and the best interest of the service requires that they should be conscripted and put in the infantry. You are an old soldier, and I know appreciate the necessity for discipline, and it would require but a few days of personal inspection to satisfy you that these State companies have done more harm than good. I do not include in this remark Colonel McGuirk's regiment—that has done good service—but both he and his officers have long since been convinced that the regiment would be more effective if it were regularly in Confederate service, where they would be subject to the same courts-martial and the same rules and regulations in all respects as Confederate troops.

SOUTHERN DIVISION, MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD,

Lieut. Gen. L. POLK, C. S. Army:

DEAR SIR: In addition to what I have written over my private signature, I have to state officially that this road is almost destitute of materials and tools for repairs and for operating the road. Nearly all we possessed was destroyed in August last by the Federal troops. We must have steel axes, shovels, files, &c., or soon discontinue our trains. In fact, I may be compelled to stop our trains north of the Yalobusha River within a week for want of axes, or materials to make them of, to cut fuel. We are equally in want of shovels to keep our track in running order. I cannot obtain them, or have not been able to do so after many trials, within the Confederacy. I can procure from within the Federal lines if I can obtain means of payment. To procure these means I must send out cotton or purchase Federal currency, giving $10 of our currency for $1 of theirs. By purchasing greenbacks I discredit and depreciate Confederate notes, and still I am compelled to obtain a supply of the articles referred to or discontinue the running of our trains very soon. It is for the authorities to determine if our road is useful and necessary to the Government.

Our business is almost entirely confined to Government transportation. Will you grant me permission to send out cotton to purchase necessary railroad supplies?

Yours, respectfully,

W. GOODMAN,

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, N. C., January 7, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON:

DEAR SIR: Your dispatch of the 6th, asking me not to object to making the steamer Don conform to the regulations of the Confederate authorities in regard to transporting Government cotton, requires a more detailed reply than I can transmit by telegraph.

I have now at Bermuda and on the way there eight or ten cargoes of supplies of the very first importance to the Army and the people, consisting chiefly of some 40,000 blankets, 40,000 pair of shoes, large quantities of army cloth and leather, 112,000 pair of cotton cards, machinery and findings to refit twenty-six of our principal cotton and woolen factories, dyestuffs, lubricating oils, &c., in addition to which I have made large purchases of bacon. Knowing that one steamer could not bring these cargoes in before spring, at which time I anticipate the closing of the port, if not sooner, and that the risk was increasing daily, I sold one-half of the State's steamer Advance, and purchased of Messrs. Collie & Co. one-fourth interest in four steamers—the Don and the Hansa, and two others now building—for the purpose of hurrying these supplies in. The terms give the State one-fourth the outward cargo and the whole of the inward, nothing being carried for speculation whatever. The Hansa, which recently left Wilmington, not having coal enough to take her to Bermuda, where my freight is, was instructed to load at Nassau with Confederate bacon, so determined was I that the whole capacity of these steamers should be employed for the public good. In return for this Messrs. Collie & Co. did expect they would be relieved from the burden of giving one-third of their outward capacity to the Confederate Government, and I did also. Should one-third be given to the Confederacy and one-fourth to the State outward, and to the latter the whole of the return cargo, I submit that it would amount to a prohibition of the business. Neither would it comport with justice or sound policy.

It is a little remarkable to me that the entire importing operations of this State, which have been so successful and so beneficial to the cause, seems to have met with little else than downright opposition rather than encouragement from the Confederate Government. In its very inception Mr. Mason, our commissioner in England, laid the strong hand on my agents, and positively forbade them putting a bond on the market for five months after they landed in England. Then came vexatious and irritating quarantine delays at Wilmington (enforced by the military, not the civil authorities), though our foreign depot was, at great cost and inconvenience, made at Bermuda instead of Nassau to avoid this. Then seizures of my coal at Wilmington occurred, and the denial of facilities to get it from the mines, &c. It was not until after my decided remonstrance to you in November that I met with anything else than an evident hostility in the operations of my steamers. And now, if the regulations in regard to private blockade-runners are enforced, I think it highly probable that this line will be stopped entirely, as the profits will scarcely justify the risks. A great deal of this, I am aware, is attributable to the want of discretion on the part of subordinate officers, as well as the want of foresight displayed in the opposition of every industrial interest of the country by army officers, yet I have had it to contend with.

After this statement I leave it with you to say whether the regulations referred to shall be enforced. If they are, I shall certainly countermand the sailing of the two other steamers now expected, and would suggest for the benefit of the Department that it would be much better to purchase than to seize an interest in the property of strangers who are engaged in bringing in indispensable supplies through a most vigorous and dangerous blockade.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. B. VANCE.

GENERAL ORDERS, {	ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 3. {	Richmond, January 9, 1864.

I. The following acts of Congress and regulations are published for the information of all persons concerned therein:

ACTS.

AN ACT to prevent the enlistment or enrollment of substitutes in the military service of the Confederate States.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That no person liable to military service shall hereafter be permitted or allowed to furnish a substitute for such service, nor shall any substitute be received, enlisted or enrolled in the military service of the Confederate States.

Approved December 28, 1863.

AN ACT to put an end to the exemption from military service of those who have heretofore furnished substitutes.

Whereas, in the present circumstances of the country, it requires the aid of all who are able to bear arms: [Therefore,]

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That no person shall be exempted from military service by reason of his having furnished a substitute; but this act shall not be so construed as to affect persons who, though not liable to render military service, have, nevertheless, furnished substitutes.

Approved January 5, 1864.

II. Persons rendered liable to military service by operation of the preceding acts are placed on the same footing with all others hitherto held liable by acts of Congress.

III. Persons herein rendered liable to military service are required to report as volunteers or conscripts without delay to the enrolling officers; and all who delay beyond the 1st day of February, 1864, will be considered as having renounced the privilege of volunteering, and held for assignment according to law.

IV. Enrolling officers will proceed as rapidly as practicable in the enrollment of persons herein made liable to military service. Previous to enrollment as conscripts all such persons will be allowed to volunteer in companies in service on the 16th of April, 1862; provided the company chosen does not at the time of volunteering reach the maximum number allowed; and upon such company being selected the volunteer will receive from the enrolling officer a certificate to the effect that he has so volunteered; and no volunteer will be received into any company except on such certificate. Persons who fail to make their selection at the time of enrollment will be assigned according to existing regulations.

V. Persons who report to the enrolling officers will be enrolled and may be allowed a furlough of ten days before reporting to the camp of instruction.

VI. All persons, whether volunteers or conscripts under this order, will pass through the camp of instruction of the State to which they belong, and be forwarded thence to the companies which are selected or to which they may be assigned.

VII. The Bureau of Conscription is charged with adopting proper regulations for the enforcement of this order.

VIII. All exemptions heretofore granted are subject to revision under instructions from the Bureau of Conscription, and if found to be improper or unauthorized by law will be revoked.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

the importance of the struggle in which we are engaged, and of the spirit and resolution which alone can secure to us its successful issue. This high spirit and undaunted resolution have marked the conduct of the people of Georgia since the beginning of the war—have been illustrated on many battle-fields, and have found expression at every fireside throughout the State.

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA STATE GUARD,

Atlanta, January 9, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: The importance of providing for the state of things that will arise the first of next month when the State Guard go out of service must be my apology for again calling your attention to the subject.

As you are aware, many of the men now in the State Guard will be liable to conscription under the late act of Congress and many others expect to be made so by the anticipated action of Congress. In this state of things I am strongly persuaded that a very respectable command could be got out of these troops for the war if I could be authorized to organize new companies and regiments. If the authority could be granted immediately I would set to work and have the new organizations ready to take the place of the State Guard. The authority should be to organize companies and regiments from any of the troops now in the State Guard service.

I know that the policy of the Government is to fill up the ranks of the old regiments in the field, and in many respects it would be far better, but when you remember the character of those who have heretofore had substitutes you will understand how reluctant they will be to go into the ranks of the old regiments. Our object should be to make the service as acceptable as possible to all our soldiers. Men make better soldiers and do all their duties far better when they feel content and satisfied than when forced against their will to serve with those with whom they feel no sympathy. My own opinion is that we would get more soldiers and better ones by allowing new organizations to be formed, but I do not put this application upon that ground. The old organizations should be filled up as far as possible, but there are many cases in which it would be better to allow new ones to be formed among those who are going for the first time into the regular service. Be this as it may, I am sure that the authority I now ask for affords the most certain and satisfactory mode of meeting the exigency that will arise on the expiration of the term of service of the Georgia State Guard on the 1st of February. The time is short and hence I ask that you answer by telegraph, as well as letter, if you grant the authority. I strongly recommend it.

I am, with sentiments of sincere regard, very truly, yours, &c.,

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Tallahassee, January 11, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: I am informed by the judges of probate and county commissioners of several counties in the State that they cannot procure the corn necessary to support the soldiers' families. I am also informed that large amounts of corn have been collected as tithes at various depots which cannot be transported from the State before it will be seriously damaged, and that the amount is more than is sufficient to sustain the troops now in service in the State. Presuming the facts stated to be true, there are two reasons why I should be pleased to receive from Colonel Northrop an order upon his officers, at points in the State where it can be spared, to deliver to my order for the use of soldiers' families an aggregate of 10,000 or 12,000 bushels of corn upon payment of the amount per bushel at which its value has been fixed by the commissioners of the State and Confederate States. It will prevent a loss to the Confederate Government and will save the families of soldiers from suffering. The question may be asked, Is there not corn in the State sufficient for the wants of the citizens besides that received as tithes? And if the Government shall need corn during the year, can it be obtained? I believe there is corn enough in parts of the State for the general supply, and if the Government shall now spare the corn from the tithes, that hereafter a larger amount may be obtained from the farmers if needed. If it is asked why it is not purchased by the county commissioners from those who have it, the reply is that county commissioners have no legal right to impress, and therefore cannot purchase. I admit that this is an unhappy state of affairs, but it is beyond my control. My opinion is that if the soldiers' families were supplied as I propose, many who now hold and refuse to sell their corn would be glad to sell at less than prices now affixed, and if needed by the Confederate Government they would necessarily be compelled to sell to avoid impressments, and that the corn and subsistence received as tithes, which the Government has not the means of transporting, should be used to sustain the troops in service here and the families of soldiers that require assistance, and then if there shall be a need for more, those who have to spare should be made to do so unless they willingly supply the demands of the Government. From personal observation lately made, I am enabled to state that there are immense quantities of provender, especially in Southwestern Georgia, awaiting transportation and being injured and lost to the Government for the want of means to transport it. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of bales of fodder have already been injured and useless. To remedy the evil, why should not the Government, by contract or impressment, take charge of the passenger trains a few weeks, remove the seats, and transport in them the provender and subsistence needed by our armies, which is being injured and lost for the want of transportation? Recently I have received communications from General Perry's brigade, copies of which are inclosed. In a letter addressed to the President, dated October 5, 1863, I wrote, in consequence of General Lee's letter to me, as follows:

With regard to the return of General Perry's brigade and the recruiting of it as proposed, I would respectfully suggest, in compliance with the views of General Lee for supplying the place of General Perry's brigade with other troops, that the First Regiment of Georgia Regulars and the Sixty-fourth Georgia Regiment, now in this State, would constitute a larger force than General Perry's brigade, and if General Cobb had not been absent from the State when I received General Lee's letter I should have submitted to his consideration the propriety and necessity of the change.

The regiments were suggested because I believed them to be better drilled and better qualified to supply the place of General Perry's brigade than any other I could suggest. The Sixty-fourth Regiment has been ordered to Savannah, and I am informed the First Regiment has received orders to hold itself in readiness for immediate removal beyond the State. I would respectfully insist, in justice to the brigade and for the defense of the State, that General Perry's brigade should be ordered immediately to Marianna, in West Florida, if it is possible to spare it a few months from General Lee's command. The reasons why I designate Marianna are—

First. Because in the counties bordering on the Gulf, and especially in Washington County, there are many deserters and many persons who have fled from other States to avoid conscription. These persons have contaminated a large portion of the citizens, and constant communication is kept up with the enemy, who is massing forces on Santa Rosa Island, evidently with the purpose of making a raid in that portion of the State, which is comparatively defenseless. The sheriff of the county and others who are persons of influence have gone to the enemy, carrying with them their horses, &c., and will pilot them in any raid which may be attempted. I assert this to be true with a full knowledge of the facts. I entertain no doubt that unless preventive measures shall be promptly adopted that the portion of the State between the Apalachicola and Choctawhatchie Rivers will be desolated by the enemy during the winter. It is now threatened, and the freshet in the Apalachicola at this time would prevent re-enforcements from this portion of the State.

Second. I believe a greater number of recruits would be more promptly received to fill up the brigade, especially if newly organized companies should be assigned to the brigade.

I would, moreover, respectfully invite your attention to the accompanying correspondence between Maj. P. W. White and myself. I see no propriety or justice in able-bodied men who are subject to conscription being shielded from military service by being appointed agents to make impressments. Those who are subject should be conscripted. If impressing agents shall be necessary, let them be men not liable to military service or be detailed for the purpose. Young and able-bodied men should not be screened from military service by being employed in the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments. Nothing but positive orders will bring them into service. The slightest discretion permitted to those who have appointed them will devise pretexts to retain them in service. Old men and disabled soldiers should perform these light duties, but no old man or disabled soldier will ever be deemed qualified by a quartermaster or commissary while he has a favorite which he desires to retain in his employment. In these departments radical changes can only be effected by positive orders and frequent and rigid inspections. The corruptions of office manifested by suddenly acquired wealth have generated a widespread desire for speculation and wealth which has overcome the obligations of patriotism and endanger the very existence of the Confederate States. Notwithstanding the alleged depreciation of the currency, people of all ages and conditions seem wild in its accumulation, regardless of consequences and careless as to the result, though it lead to the destruction of their liberties.

I have frankly expressed to you the views I entertain from a sense of duty, and under the unpalatable and sad conviction that the general tendency of our national affairs does not inspire confidence. The causes which destroy public confidence, the two chief impediments to our ability to compete with the enemy, are the corrupt practices exhibited in the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments and the want of suitable regulations to put in service and keep there those able to fight. In almost every town and village are persons in uniform under some pretense of public service, which the people perceive is never performed. This state of affairs has resulted chiefly from permitting new military organizations rather than sustaining those in service, and thus forcing the necessity for the seeming employment of officers who have lost their commands. Judging from their proceedings as published, it seems to be the purpose of Congress to remedy these as well as other evils; but I apprehend their labor is too sweeping, and will result in the overthrow of existing social organizations resting upon the avocations of labor necessary to subsist the armies in the field, the Confederate and State Governments, and to save the country from famine and its fearful consequences.

While engaged in writing the foregoing views to submit to your consideration, additional companies of cavalry have arrived at this place. They are part of a battalion recently raised by Colonel Hood, of Georgia, upon the recommendation of Brigadier-General Cobb, and if I am correctly informed this battalion of seven companies is practically without arms, as are other cavalry commands in this State. The proportion of cavalry to infantry in this State seems to me to be excessive, and considering the demand for corn to subsist the people and armies, would it not be prudent, if an additional cavalry force is needed in Virginia, and it can be armed at Richmond, to order a cavalry regiment from this State to Virginia, and thus enable General Lee to spare Brigadier-General Perry's brigade to return to Florida to meet threatened emergencies and to recruit? I presume the Second Florida Cavalry Regiment, commanded by Col. Caraway Smith, exceeds in number the aggregate of Brigadier-General Perry's brigade. They have been in service here nearly two years, and are, I believe, well mounted and of good material. To assist in making any defense which may become necessary, the State is without arms, and for the reason that I have promptly and freely used the arms belonging to the State in equipping the troops in Confederate service. May I not confidently appeal to you to send by Mr. Wilson, the agent of the State, 1,000 stand of small-arms, muskets or rifles, with accouterments, ammunition, and caps, to be disposed of by me as shall become necessary in the defense of the State. Under existing circumstances I can see no possible opportunity of maintaining the existing organization of Perry's brigade unless it shall be ordered back to the State to recruit, as it is well known to the Department I have no means at my disposal to aid in maintaining the organization. I can only make suggestions respectfully that the War Department may exercise a sound discretion under a sense of justice to the brigade and to the State.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN MILTON,

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF COMMISSARY,
Quincy, Fla., December 2, 1863.

His Excellency JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida:

GOVERNOR: Having just received this morning a copy of the act of the last Florida Legislature regulating the mode of executing the impressment acts of the Confederate Government by its officers in this State, I find that the fifth section of that act requires "each and every person authorized by Confederate authority or law of the Confederate States to make impressments in this State shall notify the Governor thereof, so that the citizens of this State may be notified thereof by proclamation of the Governor as aforesaid." If Your Excellency requires this notice to be given by each and every person in my department individually, it will be from three to five weeks before they can be written to and their answers obtained so as to furnish Your Excellency their names. But if official notification from me of the names of those I have empowered to make impressments will satisfy the terms and requirements of the fifth section of said law, then I have the honor to inclose to Your Excellency a partial list of their names for immediate proclamation. If each person has individually to notify Your Excellency of his power to impress, all of our surplus stores will be in danger of being purchased and taken out of the State before this can be done, and in all the cattle districts of this State (where we are collecting by detailed men nearly all of the cattle now supplied to our armies) our operations must be suspended until the notice be given by each impressing officer from the remotest regions of this State. Three-fourths of the beef-cattle are now furnished from Manatee and Brevard Counties, both very remote, and on account of poor mail service it requires from three to four weeks for a letter to go and answer to be returned. What is to be the fate of our armies, now almost solely dependent upon this State for meat, Heaven only knows. The danger from this source will be greatly lessened if it be held sufficient for me to furnish you the names of my impressing officers. On the contrary, if each officer has himself to notify you, the interval until this can be done will be one of great peril to the Army, unless my officers shall be willing to take the responsibility and, in order to sustain the Army, run the risk and submit to the penalties of the law. Under authority from the Commissary-General, Col. L. B. Northrop, I have conferred authority to impress upon the following officers and persons, viz:

Isaac Widgeon, commissary agent First District of Florida; Maj. A. B. Noyes, commissary of subsistence, commissary Second District of Florida; Maj. J. P. Baldwin, commissary of subsistence, commissary Third District of Florida; Maj. A. G. Summer, commissary of subsistence, commissary Fourth District of Florida; Mr. James McKay, commissary agent Fifth District of Florida; Capt. J. D. Westcott, assistant commissary of subsistence; Capt. C. F. Stubbs, assistant commissary of subsistence; J. P. Coker, sub-agent of Mr. Isaac Widgeon; Joseph B. Roulhac, sub-agent of Mr. Isaac Widgeon; Hamilton G. Bryant, sub-agent of Mr. Isaac Widgeon; John J. White, sub-agent of Mr. Isaac Widgeon; S. B. Thomas, sub-agent of Maj. A. B. Noyes, commissary of subsistence; J. J. Polhill, sub-agent of Maj. A. B. Noyes, commissary of subsistence; John Denham, sub-agent of Maj. A. B. Noyes, commissary of subsistence; Arthur Macon, sub-agent of Maj. A. B. Noyes, commissary of subsistence; J. J. Snelling, sub-agent of Maj. A. B. Noyes, commissary of subsistence; Paul Canova, sub-agent of Maj. J. P. Baldwin, commissary of subsistence; William Allen, sub-agent of Maj. A. G. Summer, commissary of subsistence; E. D. House, sub-agent of Maj. A. G. Summer, commissary of subsistence; Capt. James McKay, assistant quartermaster, sub-agent of James McKay, Fifth District; M. S. Elkins, sub-agent of Maj. A. B. Noyes, commissary of subsistence.

In addition to the above I have the honor to report my own name as one authorized to make impressments of subsistence stores. There are others, whose names I will forward you as soon as practicable.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. W. WHITE,

SYLVANIA, JACKSON COUNTY, December 12, 1863.

Maj. P. W. WHITE:

SIR: Your letter of the 9th instant was handed to me by Mr. Gibson as I passed through Quincy en route for this place. Previously I had sent to the office of the Floridian and Journal for publication the act of the General Assembly referred to by you, accompanied by a proclamation upon the subject. The fifth section of the act provides that "each and every person authorized by Confederate authority or law of the Confederate States to make impressments in this State shall notify the Governor thereof, so that the citizens of this State may be notified thereof by the proclamation of the Governor." I do not believe that it was intended that the Governor should wait to be informed of all who were or might be authorized to make impressments before publishing the names of each and every one whom he should be properly assured were authorized; nor am I inclined to construe the act strictly, so as to require from each and every person authorized his individual credentials. The assurance of a superior officer may be sufficient for the purpose. Nor do I believe your apprehension that all surplus stores will be in danger of being purchased and taken out of the State, &c., well sustained. No person has the consent of State authority to take cattle or other means of subsistence from the State without the knowledge and consent of the officers in command of the military district in this State. Moreover, I have too much confidence in the patriotism and intelligence of the citizens of Florida to believe that any respectable portion of them could be induced to sell to speculators cattle or any article of subsistence needed for the support of the armies in Confederate service, or that they will refuse to sell to officers in Confederate service (properly authorized to purchase) all the means of subsistence they have not absolutely necessary to the support of their own, the soldiers' families, and unfortunate fellow-citizens dependent upon their good will for support. I hope, therefore, that there will be no necessity for impressments to be made, but if there should be, no obstacle will be interposed by State authority to prevent the legal and equitable enforcement of the act of Congress upon the subject; but I have maintained and shall adhere to the position, unless I shall be convinced that I am in error, that no citizen subject to conscription and physically able to perform military service can be exempted by your appointment of him as an agent to impress, and therefore that you cannot with legal propriety appoint such an agent. Of the fourteen persons named as sub-agents in your letter there are, if I mistake not, eleven or twelve of them who are not in military service, are subject to conscription, and are named as the sub-agents of the agents appointed by yourself.

Presuming Majs. A. B. Noyes, J. P. Baldwin, A. G. Summer, [Mr.] James McKay, Capt. J. D. Westcott, Capt. C. F. Stubbs, and Isaac Widgeon, and yourself to be authorized by your assurance of the fact, I will give the assurance by proclamation to the citizens of this State, and I shall do this the more cheerfully because I know or believe the gentlemen named to be either in Confederate military service or exempted by age from it. Until I shall be informed by the Secretary of War that it is proper that persons subject to conscription and physically able to perform military service can legally and properly be authorized as sub-agents to impress, I shall decline to declare them so by proclamation. In a general order upon the subject General Bragg has made known his opinion that none but commissioned officers can legally make impressments, and complains of the demoralizing influences produced by illegal impressments upon the Army, and it is not difficult to conjecture what may be the deleterious effect upon the Army if during their absence in military service their families shall be made to suffer by impressments unnecessarily or illegally made. Brave men had rather fight upon half rations of bread, or even parched corn, than to have their families deprived of the means of subsistence necessary to their support. But I entertain the hope, and I think reasonably, that the people of Florida would much rather live on bread than that the soldiers in service should be constrained to live without meat. Therefore I hope that personally and by those under your command you will appeal properly to the citizens of the State to supply the Army with beef, pork, bacon, molasses, sirup, sugar, &c., and if you shall find them deaf to the appeal and disposed to sell to speculators, or unnecessarily to withhold from the armies the means of subsistence, against such person and all such persons, it is hoped, you will proceed agreeably to the act of Congress regulating impressments to provide for the support of the armies.

I deem it unnecessary to reply to the portions of your communication in which you speak of your officers being willing to take the responsibility, and in order to sustain the Army run the risks and submit to the penalties of the law, further than to express the hope that there will be no attempt to act in defiance of the law of the State. If there shall be, sufficient for the day will be the evil thereof.

I have the honor to be, sir, respectfully,

JOHN MILTON,

DECEMBER 13, 1863.

P. S.—Before an opportunity occurred to mail the foregoing reply to your letter I have received from Widgeon a copy of a communication from Maj. S. B. French to you, dated the 9th of December, directing you to procure at once, by purchase or impressment, all the sorghum molasses that can be obtained. I presume Major French was ignorant of the late act of the General Assembly, and believe that there is not enough sorghum sugar in the State to be of very great service. I am as anxious as you can possibly be to have subsistence furnished to the Army, and therefore respectfully suggest that independent of procuring what molasses can be obtained you would confer with those whose duty it is to collect the tithes and inspire them with energy to co-operate with you to obtain and forward pork and bacon, as well as beef, as soon as it may be possible. In a few days an immense number of hogs will be slaughtered for bacon and pork; already some have been, and there are many farmers who will have large quantities of pork, bacon, and lard to spare, after paying the tithes and providing for the absolute necessary wants of the families of soldiers, their own families, and non-producers dependent upon them, who will cheerfully sell at Government prices for the use of the Army. I believe in this county 200,000 pounds of pork and bacon can be obtained.

Respectfully,

JOHN MILTON,
Governor.

CAMP PERRY'S BRIGADE, December 26, 1863.

His Excellency JOHN MILTON,

SIR: An application asking that three Florida regiments be allowed to winter in Florida for the purpose of recruiting has just been returned, after having been strongly recommended by Generals Perry, Anderson, and Hill, by General Lee, with the indorsement that in a correspondence with Your Excellency he had proposed the only method by which the object of the application could be attained, viz, by sending other troops on to relieve us. We do not know upon whose shoulders to throw the blame, but it does appear that if our friends at home had earnestly wished the scheme to succeed they might have made some little effort to have those troops sent to take our places, thereby giving us a short time at least to recruit our ranks, which have been sadly thinned by the danger, hardships, and diseases to which we have been exposed for nearly two years. We do not wish to detract from the merit or gallantry of those troops yet remaining in the State, but think it just and right that they should be made to bear their part of the burden; or in other words, that it should be more equally distributed. Our brigade once numbered over 3,000 men, but now little more than as many hundred remain. The President has strongly recommended in his message to Congress that the smallest regiments be consolidated, as it would greatly decrease the expenses of the war. The Florida regiments being about the smallest in the Army of Northern Virginia will be the first to suffer in that way, and we (both officers and men) think if our civil authorities at home will not make the slightest effort to relieve us in our distress they hold the honor of the State as of little consequence, and we are poorly repaid for the sacrifices made and the danger gone through with since coming to Virginia. Great injustice has been done us as regards sending on conscripts to recruit our ranks. It is a well-known fact that the object of the conscript law was not to form new organizations (as is the case in Florida), but to fill up the ranks of the regiments already in the field as fast as they were reduced below the standard by the misfortunes of war. It is an equally well-known fact that not a single conscript has been sent to some of the regiments, and what is worse, the deserters have been allowed to join home organizations, which is surely encouraging to us, especially on the eve of consolidation.

We inclose you the indorsements of our generals upon the application to be sent to Florida this winter, and respectfully ask your co-operation in our endeavors to that effect. We know that your influence is justly felt and appreciated where it would benefit our undertaking should you think it proper to assist us in this move.

At a meeting of the officers of this brigade we, the undersigned, being appointed a committee to correspond with Your Excellency upon this subject, would be pleased to hear from you as soon as convenient.

We have the honor to be, Governor, your obedient servants, Benj. F. Davis, major Fifth Florida Regiment; Thos. E. Clarke, major Eighth Florida Regiment; David Lang, colonel Eighth Florida Regiment; B. Frank Whitner, captain, Eighth Florida Regiment, committee. C. A. Bryan, captain, Fifth Florida Regiment; J. L. Taylor, lieutenant, commanding Company K, Fifth Florida Regiment; J. M. Tolbert, Company D, Second Florida Regiment; N. B. Walker, Company I, Second Florida Regiment; D. B. Taylor, aide-de-camp.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS PERRY'S BRIGADE,
December 17, 1863.

These applications are respectfully forwarded and recommended. The regiments composing this brigade originally numbered 3,271; of these there are now left barely enough for a battalion. From Governor Milton and other sources in Florida I learn that the regiments could be recruited were they allowed to winter there. I hope the application will be favorably considered.

E. A. PERRY,
Brigadier-General, Commanding Brigade.

Respectfully forwarded.

I believe this might be tried, and probably with advantage.

A. P. HILL,
Lieutenant-General.

ORANGE, December 23, 1863.

Respectfully returned.

In a correspondence with His Excellency Governor Milton some time since General Lee stated that he would send this brigade or a part of it to Florida for the purpose indicated herein, provided a regiment would be sent here to supply its place. To this no response has been received. The interests of the service will not allow that the regiment be detached without an equivalent. All that can be done is to send suitable officers to co-operate with the officers of conscription in procuring recruits, as is done with other regiments similarly situated. If the recruits or conscripts are in the State, it is thought they can as well be obtained by sending for them as by sending the brigade there to recruit them.

By order:

J. A. SEDDON,
*Secretary of War.*CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., January 12, 1864.His Excellency Z. B. VANCE,
Governor of North Carolina, Raleigh, N. C.:

SIR: On the receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo, relating to the consumption of grain in North Carolina in the manufacture of whisky, I called upon the Surgeon-General to report whether he had any contract for the distillation of spirits in your State, and if so, the quantity of grain required and the necessity for the supply. I annex a copy of his reply:

The Medical Department has no contract for alcoholic stimulant in the State of North Carolina. The distillery at Salisbury referred to by Governor Vance is owned by the Medical Department and is engaged in the manufacture of whisky and alcohol for the sole use of the sick and wounded of the Army. The distillery was purchased by this Department for the purpose of dispensing with the system of contracting for alcoholic stimulants, as it has been found that a large quantity of whisky manufactured by contractors is of an inferior quality and their contracts were not in other respects faithfully carried out. It is also believed that a large quantity of whisky made by contractors has been sold to private parties when it should have been delivered to the Government, thereby consuming more grain than was required to fill their contracts. Major Badham has been instructed to turn over grain to the medical purveyor in charge of the Government distillery at Salisbury in order to obviate the necessity of this department going into market to purchase, which would enhance the price paid for grain by the Quartermaster's Department, and the 30,000 bushels referred to in the within communication is for a whole year's supply for the distillery. There is no distillery at Charlotte belonging to this department, nor am I aware that there is one there. The Attorney-General has decided that the Confederate Government has the express power "to support armies;" that any means may be used which are necessary and proper to obtain supplies for that support. Therefore a State has no power to interfere with the Confederate Government in the manufacture or even contracting for such supplies. In conclusion, I would state that it is absolutely necessary for the comfort and welfare of the sick and wounded of our Army that the Government distillery at Salisbury should not be interfered with or the supply of grain cut off.

I may add to the above that on inquiry I learn that a greater coolness of temperature than for many months of the year prevails in the Southern States when corn is more abundant is essential to the ready and proper distillation of spirits, and that this circumstance prevented the easy solution of the difficulties presented by your remonstrance which I should have sought in the removal of the Government laboratory.

I trust your objections will, under the circumstances, be withdrawn.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,

I. The attention of commandants of conscripts is specially called to General Orders, No. 3, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, 1864, herewith printed.* By these general orders the acceptance of substitutes into the Army is forbidden, and all persons who have heretofore been exempted from military service by reason of having furnished substitutes are rendered liable to such service.

II. Commandants will forthwith proceed with the enrollment of all persons who have been exempted by reason of having furnished substitutes. A distinct roll will be kept of the persons thus enrolled, containing the name of the substitute, the date of the substitution, the company and regiment in which the substitution was made, and, as far as practicable, whether the substitute is still in service; and if not, whether lost by desertion, discharge, or casualty. This roll will be forwarded with monthly reports.

III. Principals of substitutes are subject to the same regulations prescribed for other persons liable to military service; but the fact of having furnished a substitute may be assumed as prima facie evidence that the principal has no other claim for exemption, and will therefore demand careful examination when new claims are presented.

IV. To aid in detecting frauds in substitutions which have been committed by officers and others, commandants will endeavor to procure all substitute papers, examine them, and if found to be irregular or supposed to be fraudulent, will forward them to the Bureau, with testimony and opinion.

V. Cases of fraudulent, irregular, and improper exemptions have been reported to the Bureau; certificates of exemption have been counterfeited, and it is feared officers are not free from liability to grave charges in granting exemptions.

Commandants will forthwith, by special inspections and otherwise, proceed to a rigid revision of all exemptions.

By command of Col. J. S. Preston, superintendent:

His Excellency J. E. BROWN,
Governor of Georgia, Milledgeville, Ga.:

SIR: General Beauregard has of late on several occasions expressed serious apprehensions that the enemy were strengthening their land forces and contemplating an attack on the line of railroad, and in consequence has called for re-enforcements. Unable to spare them from other sources, it is deemed advisable to inquire of you whether the residue of the 15,000 men organized, as the Department has understood, under the call made upon you last summer, and not yet brought into service, could be commanded in whole or in part for aid to General Beauregard. They might, without leaving the State, if that be objectionable, be substituted for other troops at Savannah, or along the line within the limits of Georgia. General Cobb likewise writes that the term of service of the local forces under his command will expire in February, and in such event it would be of great importance that either they should be continued in the service, or a portion of the 15,000 not employed as above should be prepared to take their places. Will you be so kind as to inform me what course you will feel at liberty to adopt under the circumstances, so that a more formal call may, if necessary, be made upon you?

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

COMMITTEE ROOM, CONFEDERATE RELATIONS,

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: Your communication* to me of the ———, inviting attention of the Legislature to the policy of withdrawing all able-bodied male slaves from within the enemy's lines and without our own, liable to seizure by them through the intervention of our own forces, was referred to the Committee on Confederate Relations, and has received from them the attention its importance demands. They have considered the subject in both the aspects in which you presented it, viz, the saving of the property of our citizens and the defeating of the enemy's design of recruiting a black force within the limits indicated, and have invited and obtained the expression of the views of a large number of the members of the house representing the counties more immediately interested as to the effects likely to be produced by the adoption of the policy suggested. They concur, I believe, without exception in believing it would be attended with very serious mischief and with very partial compensating good. They represent that within the enemy's lines the number of slaves left at their homes fit for military service is now very limited, forcibly or voluntarily the great bulk of them of that description having already gone to the enemy; that the few remaining are retained generally by strong local or family attachments, but none by any motive which would not yield to the aversion they entertain to be forced away from their homes within our lines and employed on our public works; that they are so scattered that but a very small proportion could be captured, if any, by a military raiding party before they would fly to the woods or to the enemy, soon to be followed by their families, whose labor and assistance is now so invaluable to the loyal whites (chiefly females and children) still remaining in the enemy's lines, would be attended with the most deplorable consequences; that many of those citizens would be left in great extremity for support if they remained, or exposed to great loss and suffering if they removed, besides by coming farther into the interior increasing the existing pressure on our already over-taxed means of subsistence. The fear was also expressed by some of the gentlemen who favored the committee with their views that the loss of their still remaining slaves occasioned by such an intervention of the Government might lead, however unjustifiably, to alienating from our cause persons now friendly to it. The effects on the slaves in the interior of bringing amongst them, so far as the measure should prove successful, those who had become imbued by the enemy with ideas and habits but little consistent with the obedience and subordination proper to their condition and necessary to the peace and safety of the whites, was strongly urged as dissuading from the adoption of the policy under consideration.

In respect to the consequences of such a measure as applied to the districts between our lines and those of the enemy, the gentlemen representing them thought the effects would be similar to those above presented. While in them a plan might be adopted, no doubt, attended with more success for getting possession of the slaves than in the other case, yet they believed large numbers would attempt, successfully, to escape to the enemy, while it would be the signal for the immediate stampede into the enemy's camps of all the slaves within their lines. There was no difference of opinion as to the general opposition of the owners to the plan, nor as to its resulting in a greater loss of slave property to the State than would ensue by leaving the owners to pursue the best means in their power to save them as exigencies might recommend. Not considering that the communication received from you was intended so much to indicate a line of policy determined on as to invite a conference and comparison of views with those most interested in it in regard to its expediency, the committee have instructed me to lay before you the facts and views herein communicated for your consideration before adopting any conclusions or taking any definite action on the subject. They should probably say, however, that they so far feel the force of them as to be disinclined to recommend to the favor of the House the policy of a forcible withdrawal of the slaves from the quarters of the State embraced by your suggestion by the military intervention of the Confederate Government. But they trust there will be found no room or occasion for any conflict to arise between the authorities, respectively, of the two governments, at least in the conclusions they shall arrive at. They are persuaded that the Confederate Government, even if not concurring entirely in the views above set forth, would yet readily refrain, in a matter of so much delicacy and so vitally affecting our citizens, unless from the clearest conviction of an overruling necessity, from exercising a power which any State might deem seriously objectionable and prejudicial to her most important interests.

Hoping to learn from your reply that the Confederate Government does not, in view of all the circumstances, propose to pursue the policy to which you invited the attention of the Legislature of Virginia unless with their concurrence, I am, very respectfully,

WYNDHAM ROBERTSON,
Chairman.

GENERAL ORDERS, }	ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 6. }	Richmond, January 14, 1864.

I. Whenever ordnance stores are lost or damaged in any brigade it will be the duty of each brigade or district commander, at the request of his ordnance officer, or of any officer accountable for ordnance stores, to appoint as often as necessary a board of survey, to consist of three officers, to assess the value of or damage to such stores.

II. The decision of this board, with the approval of the brigade or district commander, will be final; and it will be the duty of the brigade or district ordnance officer to notify the company commander to stop the amount on the muster-rolls when privates are found chargeable; and when officers are found chargeable, instead of reporting to the Secretary of War as required by paragraph 921, General Regulations, he will notify the brigade quartermaster or the chief quartermaster of the district to have the amount stopped at the next payment. Duplicate of such notification in the case of officers and privates to be sent to the Chief of Ordnance at Richmond, to be by him transmitted to the Second Auditor of the Treasury.

III. The brigade or district ordnance officer will furnish the brigade inspector or other officer having charge of that duty with a statement of all stoppages made by the board of survey against officers and men, and the inspector will see that these stoppages are actually made.

IV. The same instructions will be adhered to in the artillery, where the officers in charge of the artillery of a corps or of a department will call the board of survey.

V. Ordnance sergeants of regiments will remain habitually with their regiments and keep themselves constantly informed as to the positions of the brigade ordnance train.

VI. The use of the sword-bayonet having been generally disapproved by boards of officers in the field, to whom the question of its usefulness was referred, its manufacture has been ordered to be discontinued. The triangular bayonet will be substituted.

VII. Hospital funds within $5,000, accrued at general hospitals, may be transferred to other general hospitals on the order of the medical director or the Surgeon-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., January 14, 1864.

Governor Z. B. VANCE,
Raleigh, N. C.:

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I am duly in receipt of your letter of 7th instant. Before it came to hand I had directed that the following telegram be sent to the agent of the Department at Wilmington: "No reply yet from Governor Vance. The Secretary of War wishes you to arrange to let Don go out, leaving the question of ownership of one-third of the cargo to be determined after full conference with Governor Vance," and had received a reply as follows: "Suggestion in your telegram relative to Don anticipated. She has proceeded to sea." I am most anxious, in reference to the blockade trade, to do whatever will most subserve the use of the Army and people. After I found that the few steamers owned by the Government were inadequate to carry out cotton to purchase supplies and munitions urgently needed, I sent an officer to Wilmington and Charleston to confer with owners of steamers and make the best arrangements possible to secure a portion of the carrying capacity of their steamers for the Government, and wrote at the same time to Generals Beauregard and Whiting, placing the necessities of the Government before them. Arrangements were then made whereby the several owners conceded at least one-third of their carrying capacity on payment of reasonable freights therefor. Under these arrangements the Don and Hansa have heretofore been loaded. I am aware that the owners and agents of this line (who are all foreigners, as I am advised) were prepared to make any concession as to inward freights to be relieved from carrying out any cotton for the Government, their sole interest lying in getting out of the country as much cotton as possible. Indeed, I have found no difficulty in securing as much freight room inward as I desire from the ports which the steamers run.

Under these circumstances I think you will agree with me, Governor, that the arrangements with Messrs. Collie & Co., with which you propose to supersede mine, are less advantageous to the country than those established by me. We are both laboring in the same cause and for the same end, and I will not willingly allow any conflict with you through officers acting under my authority, and I feel that I may ask the same of you. Our wants for meat, lead, salt-peter, shoes, clothing, &c., are most urgent at this time, and every bale of cotton I could send out has been devoted to such purchases for the use of all the troops in the field. When I learned that you had purchased the steamer Advance I did not wait for an application, but at once directed the agent at Wilmington to exempt her from the requirements made of all other steamers. The Don and Hansa are upon a different footing. They are already engaged in carrying out one-third of cargo for account of the Government. The owners made overtures to you in order to be relieved from what they regarded as an onerous obligation. When advised of these facts I do not think you will insist on thus relieving them by your contract from their engagements with the Government—engagements they were actively executing at the time you entered into contract with them.

If for special temporary purposes connected with your supplies at Bermuda you wish the exemption of the Hansa and Don for present trip, or indeed longer time, I shall give orders to meet your wishes. I am sure that you will agree with me that, as a general thing, it will be better for the Confederate Government to send out cotton to procure supplies for our armies than for the individual States to undertake the matter. Some States have no ports, others are within the occupation of the enemy. The troops from such States must be supplied by the Confederate Government only. If each State undertakes the export of cotton and the import of all supplies necessary, we shall have great jealousy among the troops from the different States and great embarrassment in questions connected with railroad transportation. There can be no objection to a State exerting every effort for the comfort and well-being of its soldiers and people, but such efforts should be outside of and not interfere with those of the Confederate Government for the comfort and well-being of the whole Army and country.

I will, on this full representation of the considerations that control the Department, leave it entirely to your own judgment and patriotism to determine whether any and what allowance should be made the Government of the last cargoes of the Hansa and Don, but trust that upon their return you will consent to have them resume their place in carrying out one-third for the Government, and will so advise me on the receipt of this.

I ought, in addition, to intimate to you that General Whiting, from some correspondence he has seen with Mr. Andrea, has formed unfavorable opinions as to his interest in our cause and the purely selfish ends at which he is aiming.

I have the honor, sir, to remain, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

RICHMOND, VA., January 15, 1864.

THE SENATE OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

I have received from your honorable body, through the hands of your secretary, a copy of the report and resolution adopted by you in executive session on the 9th instant.

The resolution is in the following words:

Resolved, That the Senate do advise and consent to the appointment of the military officers nominated in the four several messages of the President dated on the 8th instant, all of whom are from States west of the Mississippi River, for the reasons stated in the foregoing report; and that the action of the Senate herein is not to be construed as sanctioning or recognizing the right of the Executive, in nominating officers to the Senate, to fix the time at which they shall take rank anterior to the preceding session of Congress, or at any time during such session.

By the first four lines of the resolution I am informed that the Senate acknowledge the legality and concur in the propriety of my action in regard to these nominations, by their advising and consenting to the appointments as proposed. This is the whole action usually taken on nominations, and seems to exhaust the authority over appointments vested in the Senate by the Constitution.

The reservation, however, in the present instance, that the Senate is not to be considered as sanctioning or recognizing the right of the Executive to do in the future what the Senate have approved of his doing in the cases before them, as explained in the report to which the resolution refers, imposes on me the necessity of this communication.

On referring to that report I confess to my surprise at finding myself apparently charged with a violation of the Constitution, although no foundation exists for the implication conveyed in the report. I feel sure, therefore, that neither the committee nor the Senate could have intended or sanctioned such a charge; but I could not in justice to myself fail to call your attention to the language employed. It is as follows:

* * * The only difficulty presented to the committee is, that the date at which the officers nominated are to take rank is anterior to the last session of Congress. The committee are of opinion that the Constitution contemplates that all officers appointed in the recess of Congress shall only hold under such appointment to the close of the next session of Congress, and that they should be renominated, if it is intended to retain them in their offices, to the Senate at its first session after their appointment. This has not been done in this case.

The Senate cannot but agree with me that the plain inference from these passages is that the Constitution has been violated by my having appointed these officers during the recess and retained them in office without nominating them to the Senate at its next session. It has thus become incumbent on me (while satisfied that neither the committee nor the Senate could have intended to make such an accusation) to repel any inference that might hereafter be drawn from my silence on the subject, by stating that not only had no appointments of these officers been made prior to the nominations on which the Senate has just acted, but that the fact of the necessity for the appointments only reached the Executive since the commencement of your present session, by communication received last month from the Trans-Mississippi Department.

Upon the point suggested in the close of the resolution, that the Executive is without the right to make a nomination to a military grade, coupled with rank from a date prior to a former session of the Senate, it is not deemed proper to anticipate any future disagreement with the Senate by presenting the reasons for the opposite conclusion as being the only one consistent with the laws for the regulation of the Army, as well as with long-settled usage and the necessities of the service.

When the occasion shall arise I cannot doubt that the Senate will, notwithstanding this resolution, refuse to abandon its own constitutional power to act on nominations at its pleasure, according to the merits of each case and the good of the service. I am confirmed in this conclusion by observing that the resolution was passed without a call for the yeas and nays, and therefore with probably less than the usual consideration, as well as by the further reflection that as Executive nominations which meet the disapproval of the Senate on any ground are always subject to rejection without assignment of reasons, experience will show that no advantage can arise from the Senate's curtailing its own discretion in future cases by binding its own judgment in advance.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

ATLANTA, January 15, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON:

I am satisfied that I can raise a large and efficient force if the authority I have asked for to organize troops for the war from State Guard is granted. Rest assured it is the best policy. It is important that I receive an answer at once.

RICHMOND, January 15, 1864.

President of the Confederate States, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: We beg leave, in view of the condition of the military service, as connected with the organization of our Kentucky troops, to make some suggestions which may render those troops more effective. At present they are dispersed in small bodies with the different armies in the west and southwest. The terms for service for which they engaged are drawing to a close. There does not exist amongst them any desire to abandon the cause in which they so heartily embarked; but there does exist a strong wish amongst the infantry to change the character of their service. It is an opinion, founded upon all the facts within our reach, that great benefit would result to the country by organizing these troops in a State organization, and in mounting them as far as it can be done. The following would be some of the results of such an organization:

First. It would gratify a natural desire existing among soldiers for a change, and would go far toward satisfying their craving to see their homes; for next to the enjoyment of their own firesides would be the satisfaction of a camp home amongst their own exiled people.

Second. The concentration of the Kentuckians would be an inducement to call together at once from all parts of the Confederacy all stragglers and people from the State not yet attached to military organizations. It would also be an inducement held out to Southern men yet remaining in Kentucky to enlist in the organization. The benefits resulting from such a concentration would, in our opinion, far outweigh the temptations held out to individuals to leave the ranks.

Third. The concentration of these troops in the vicinity of Kentucky in a position to act in concert with any general movement of our Western army would have a most beneficial result. We think by the opening of the spring campaign there could be assembled in East Tennessee, or such other position as may be deemed best, about 8,000 effective Kentuckians. Combining their movements with those of the main army, they could enter Kentucky. Most of them are veteran troops. Fighting as infantry, they would be numerous enough and sufficiently effective to drive before them any cavalry force likely to be sent against them. The result would be either that they would occupy the center of the State, collect supplies, and gather strength and interrupt the enemy's communications, or that heavy infantry detachments must be sent from the enemy's main army to drive them from the State. In the latter event it will prove a legitimate military diversion, when a small detachment will be enabled to occupy the attention of a large force of the enemy, and to that extent lighten the task of the main army.

Fourth. The political result of such an organization would be highly favorable. The hopes of the Southern sympathizers in the State still cling with great tenacity around the Kentucky organizations. Dispersed as these organizations now are, their identity is almost lost. If assembled in one body they will be enabled to excite anew the hopes of our people, and we believe that the awakened interest of the men themselves and of the people in this organization would in the present political condition of Kentucky largely increase the strength of the force.

Fifth. The results of such an organization would, in our opinion, be most effective if the public interest admitted of our being associated with this force; for it is probably not assuming too much to state that we may be enabled to combine in a great degree the military and political elements of the State which are favorable to the country. But while it is our own opinion that our services would be more effective with this than with any other organization which we can think of, we can but add that in this, as in all other matters connected with the defense of our country, we will cheerfully submit to any decision which your Excellency may make in reference to a subject which appeals so strongly to our sympathies and to our patriotism.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, Your Excellency's obedient servants,

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE,

JOS. H. LEWIS,

[First indorsement.]

JANUARY 16, 1864.

Secretary of War for consideration and remarks.

The proposition has two main features, viz, the assembling of the Kentucky troops into one corps, and the mounting of those troops when assembled. It is also indicated that they should be sent to Kentucky.

J. D.

Respectfully returned to the President.

I have had several conferences, as well with members from Kentucky as the generals signing this letter, on the subject presented. I find it difficult to reconcile with my convictions as to the interest of the service to convert all the troops from Kentucky into mounted men. The infantry brigade, though much reduced, is among the most reliable in the service, and for the hot work before our armies of more value than three times the number of mounted men. It would be better, could reference be had to the general service alone, that two-thirds of the cavalry should be dismounted and converted into infantry; but other considerations are urged earnestly, and among them, though presented with hesitancy and regret, is the conviction that without such concession to the feelings of the men desertion to a great extent is inevitable. This alone causes me to doubt. Perhaps, without yielding the one point of mounting the men, the organization of the Kentuckians into one corps, with headquarters in common and with a favorite leader at their head, might suffice to arouse a State pride and give a prestige to the organization that might measurably satisfy and retain them in service. In conjunction with this, some latitude might be allowed the commander to allow temporary exchanges of service to the different regiments. The hope should be held out to them, too, of returning to Kentucky, most speedily and permanently, by defeating the enemy before them. A partial raid would lose more than it gained in men.

JAS. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

[Third indorsement.]

AIDE-DE-CAMP:

Address letter to General Johnston, stating application and considerations offered, and request views on the question of assembling the Kentucky troops on border of Kentucky, and as another question the propriety of converting them into mounted troops.

MAJOR: I am directed by the superintendent to write to you and say that he directs that you will forthwith remove your camp of instruction to some safe and convenient point in the neighborhood of Lieutenant-General Longstreet's army. It is not advisable for you to select a station immediately within or contiguous to the lines. On reaching your station you will immediately proceed to active operations in enrolling conscripts and arresting deserters. Until further orders you will have authority to enroll Tennessee and Kentucky conscripts. You will apply directly to Lieutenant-General Longstreet for such supporting force as you may deem necessary, and report the same to this Bureau. You will also apply to General Longstreet for the use of such officers as you may think needful as enrolling officers, asking him for their temporary assignment. Your requisitions will be filled as early as practicable.

SIR: Your letter of the 6th instant, earnestly requesting that Government iron contractors in Alabama be authorized to sell to planters some of their iron to make and repair agricultural implements, was referred to the chief of the Niter and Mining Bureau for consideration and remarks. I have the honor to invite your attention to the following copy of his reply:

The Government supplies in Alabama will permit the diversion of a considerable quantity of cast iron for agricultural purposes, but very little rolled iron. The loss of the Tennessee rolling-mills and the virtual suspension of the Etowah mills have thrown all the requisitions from the Army of Tennessee for wagon-tire and horseshoe iron upon the two Alabama mills controlled by the Bureau. These requisitions can be met with great difficulty, and only by drawing largely upon the Navy. Major Hunt has been instructed to call upon the Governor of Alabama, explain the poverty of our resources, and to urge a concert action from the State authorities in starting additional rolling-mills.

AN ACT to provide for holding elections for Representatives in the Congress of the Confederate States from the State of Missouri.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That elections for Representatives in the Congress of the Confederate States for the State of Missouri may be held as follows, until the Legislature of said State shall otherwise direct: That each voter shall be allowed to vote one ticket, containing the name of one person for each one of the seven Congressional districts of said State, and the persons receiving the highest number of votes for the Representative districts, shall be commissioned as Representatives by the Governor of said State.

SEC. 2. Such election shall be held upon the first Monday in May next, and upon the same day of each second year thereafter during the war.

SEC. 3. Such elections shall be held by the officers authorized, or persons appointed or provided by the laws of said State for the purpose of holding such elections, and shall be conducted according to the mode prescribed by the laws of said State, except so far as the same are modified by this act.

SEC. 4. In such elections, any citizen of the Confederate States who shall be qualified to vote for a member of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature of said State, shall be entitled to vote at the place or places in said State, at which he would be entitled to vote in an election for such member of said Legislature.

SEC. 5. But in case such citizen shall be in the military service of the Confederate States, or in case he shall be driven from his home by the occupation of his country by the public enemy, or by the movements of the enemy's troops, or in case the election cannot be held at the usual places of holding the same, by reason of such occupation or movements, then such citizen shall be allowed to vote at any place of voting in said State, or in the camps of the Army, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 6. Such elections for Representatives, when held in the camps of the Army, shall be conducted as follows: In every army corps, division, or command, the colonel of each regiment, or other officer in command of any less body on detached service, shall appoint two judges and three clerks to open and hold such election, who shall hold the same and make out the poll books and returns, under the same rules and regulations, as far as practicable, as if the same were opened and held at the usual places of holding the same in said State, and shall allow all persons entitled to vote therein.

SEC. 7. The returns of such elections in camps shall be forwarded by the several commanding officers, appointing the judges and clerks as aforesaid, to the highest officer in grade, and the senior of the grade from said State, for which the same is held in the encampment or Army, in which the same is held, whose duty it shall be, at once, to forward the same to the Governor of the State, or the same may be, if more convenient, forwarded by such commanding officer directly to the Governor.

SEC. 8. In case the exigencies of the public service prevent the holding of the elections in any camp under this act, at the time provided by law, the same may be held at any time within ten days after the preventing cause may cease; the time for holding the same to be fixed by the officer authorized to appoint the judges and clerks.

SEC. 9. Such officer shall be authorized to administer the proper oaths to the judges and clerks, or they may administer the same to each other.

SEC. 10. Every person concerned in holding such election shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the Confederate States, and to discharge his duty, in holding such election, faithfully and impartially.

In view of the great increase of special applications for exemption and the facilities with which signatures are obtained, it has become necessary to prescribe regulations for proceeding in such cases to prevent the allowance of exemption in cases specially presented and supported by many signers, with some show of testimony, but without real merit. The officers of conscription will therefore be governed by the following instructions:

I. Every application should be sworn to by the applicant and verified by the affidavits of at least two respectable citizens who are personally acquainted with the facts testified to by them.

II. Applications so verified should be carefully, particularly, and vigilantly investigated by the local enrolling officers, and a report of the facts, with their opinion in approval or disapproval, forwarded through the proper official channel, with the application, to the commandant.

III. The investigation should not be confined to an examination of the papers alone, or into the truth of the statements therein made, but should be directed with a view of ascertaining all the facts and circumstances of the case, and the exact condition of the parties with relation thereto, that an intelligent opinion on its merits may be formed. For this purpose inquiries should be instituted of persons unconnected with the application. The report should be somewhat in detail, setting forth seriatim the facts developed in the investigation, giving briefly the reasons for the opinion expressed, and instead of being put in the form of an indorsement will be made on a separate sheet of paper.

IV. In expressing his own opinion of approval the commandant will state whether he recommends permanent or temporary exemption; and if temporary, for what length of time.

V. No application will be considered unless investigated in accordance with these instructions.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OF ALABAMA,
*Montgomery, January 19, 1864.*Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have seen Maj. J. J. Walker, acting commissary of subsistence for the State, and he has explained in a satisfactory manner what his agents in the different counties of the State are doing, and the object of the census of property being taken. While these complaints of the illegal conduct of agents were being made, a little explanation by sensible officers would have avoided all the difficulty. The impressment of private property is always odious and ought to be avoided whenever possible. It is a better policy for the Government to pay double price than to make impressments. If we fail to achieve our independence in this contest the failure will arise from breaking down the spirits of the people by acts of tyranny by our own officers. The impressment of property only aggravates the price and creates opposition to the Government and our cause. The practical operation of the impressment system has been disastrous.

So far as Major Walker himself is concerned, I should never fear anything from his acts that was wrong. He is a man of fine common sense and of high character, and he takes pains to perform the most onerous duties in such a manner as to retain the good will of all with whom he has to do, but many of the impressing officers care neither for God nor man.

The object of this letter was simply to say that Major Walker's explanation was entirely satisfactory.

SIR: In granting you a passport to go beyond the limits of the Confederate States, you are authorized, under an act to organize bodies for the capture and destruction of the enemy's property by land and sea, approved 17th of February, 1864, to engage in the destruction of the enemy's property on the high seas or the rivers, lakes, and harbors in the United States or the Confederate States of America, or on the territory of either or both of them. You will be governed, however, by the laws of nations, destroying only army and navy supplies and such other property as may be directly serviceable to the enemy in waging war against the Confederate States of America. Passenger vessels will be exempt from injury at your hands. You are also authorized to instruct and organize outside the limits of the Confederate States a company of men, not to exceed twenty in number, to act under your orders in the performance of the service in which you are hereby empowered to engage, taking strict care to observe the laws and rights of neutrals. You will forward a muster-roll of the company to this Department. Your services will be rendered without pay or other compensation than the percentage of loss or injury caused by you to the enemy's property, to be awarded by the board of officers appointed for that purpose by this Department to

Governor Z. B. VANCE,
Raleigh, N. C.:

SIR: I am informed that the authorities of the State of North Carolina hold a large quantity of woolen goods, partly imported, beyond what can possibly be needed for some time to come to meet the wants of the troops from that State. As all the manufacturing resources of the State have been devoted to the service of the soldiers therefrom, and the State besides has enjoyed, through its enterprise, unusual facilities for drawing supplies from abroad, it occurs to me that there may be on hand an excess of other necessary articles, such as shoes and blankets, that can be spared for awhile to aid the service at large during the stress of the winter months. At all events, I venture to bring the matter to your attention, confident that your public spirit will lead you to do whatever you can to aid the troops of the Confederacy.

Just at this time we are greatly in want of woolen goods and cloth (heavy) of any description and blankets; shoes, too, would be acceptable. The recent heavy losses experienced by this department in connection with the blockade has restricted somewhat its resources, and if you can advance for awhile any of the supplies referred to they will be acceptable, and I will come under an obligation to return the same early in the spring, when the pressure now upon me shall in part have passed by.

GENERAL: The letter of His Excellency Governor Bonham, of the 19th instant,* to the commanding general, now at Savannah, communicating a copy of his letter of the 17th ultimo† to the War Department, has been received and I deem it in place to acquaint you with the position of these headquarters in the absence of any orders from superior authority in the premises.

The troops in question having been called out for six months' service, it is construed, are in that service from the time they assembled at their homes and quit their usual private avocations for military duty. It is presumed the War Department supposed they would be called out on the 1st day of August, and hence specified that day as the beginning of their term of enrollment. As you are aware, however, the call from these headquarters was not issued for a month later, because it had been urged on the commanding general as of the utmost importance that these men should not be withdrawn from the agricultural districts until they had secured their harvests, and he was induced in that way to postpone the call to the last possible moment, leaving the men meantime at their homes, engaged on their farms, or other occupations from which they had only been detached, as is understood, one day to organize and elect company officers early in July and another subsequently, 31st July, to elect field officers.

In view of these facts the commanding general has not felt authorized to discharge these troops until he shall be officially apprised of the views of the War Department, for which he asked on the 12th of December, 1863.

Especially does he not feel warranted to act without orders, since he was expressly notified by telegraph from the Adjutant and Inspector General on the 5th of October, 1863, that he had "no right to discharge the six-months' regiments * * * without authority from that office."

Be assured these headquarters have every wish to discharge these troops whensoever it may be authoritatively done, and it is hoped orders of the War Department will soon be made known.

The Governor does not say in his letter that he has received an answer to his to the Honorable Secretary of War, but it is presumed he has not from the context of his communication to the commanding general.

AN ACT appropriating one hundred thousand dollars for the use and benefit of the Cherokee Nation.

Whereas, by the forty-fifth article of the treaty between the Confederate States of America and the Cherokee Nation, the said Confederate States promised to collect and pay over to the Cherokee Nation the annual interest upon the several sums of money invested by said nation in stocks of certain States of the Confederate States; and whereas, by reason of the war with the United States, it is impracticable to make such collection; and whereas, there is good reason to believe that the citizens of said nation are greatly in need of the money thus due them: Therefore,

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the sum of one hundred thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, for the use and benefit of the Cherokee Nation.

SEC. 3. It is hereby expressly understood that said one hundred thousand dollars is to be returned by the said Cherokee Nation when peace shall be ratified between the United and Confederate States, or that the said Confederate States shall be reimbursed out of the interest on said stocks which may then be due and collected.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

SIR: I have received from Col. W. H. Stevens, chief of construction Department of Northern Virginia, an estimate of $500,000 as required to meet the just claims presented, or to be presented hereafter, for the loss of slaves who have been impressed in the State of Virginia, and have escaped to the enemy or have died whilst engaged in labor on the Richmond defenses or from diseases contracted whilst thus employed. This estimate is based on an average valuation of $2,000 for each slave thus escaped or deceased. A consideration of the losses sustained in other portions of this State, especially in the Peninsula earlier in the war, gives the sum of $708,000 as the entire estimate for the State of Virginia. Reasoning by analogy, for want of absolute data, and extending the calculation to the other States of the Confederacy, in all of which heavy losses have been sustained among the negroes impressed for labor on the defenses, the Bureau has arrived at the sum of $3,108,000 as the minimum probably required to meet this class of expenditures. I have therefore the honor to submit an estimate of $3,108,000, and to ask an appropriation of this amount for the purpose indicated.

II. Enrolling officers will proceed as rapidly as practicable in the enrollment of all persons made liable to military service. Previous to enrollment as conscripts all such persons will be allowed to volunteer: Provided—

1. The company selected was in service on the 16th of April, 1862.

2. The company selected is at the time of volunteering below the minimum number prescribed by regulations.

3. No person made liable to service under this order will be permitted to join or will be assigned to any company which has more than sixty-four privates on the roll until all the companies in the service from the State of which the volunteer or conscript is a resident shall have the minimum number prescribed by regulations.

4. Upon the company being selected, the volunteer will receive from the enrolling officer a certificate to the effect that he has so volunteered, and no volunteer will be received in any company except on such certificate.

III. Persons who fail to make selection according to the provisions of this order, and at the time of enlistment, will be assigned according to existing regulations.

IV. WYNDHAM ROBERTSON, Esq.,
Chairman Committee on Confederate Relations, House of Delegates of Virginia:

SIR: I regret that other more pressing engagements have prevented me from sooner acknowledging your communication of the 13th instant relative to the forced withdrawal of able-bodied male slaves from localities within the lines of the enemy or exposed to their inroads. The aims which were contemplated in the proposition heretofore made by me to obtain the sanction of the Legislature of Virginia to such removal were chiefly two: First, to save such slaves to the owners and prevent the abstraction of so much productive and valuable labor from the Commonwealth; and secondly, to prevent their being seduced or compelled by the enemy to recruit his armies and increase the resources employed by them in the atrocious warfare waged against us.

In reference to the first of these ends, I am free to admit that information gathered by me from inquiries made and manifestations of sentiment in different exposed localities lead me to concur in the opinion you express as to the repugnance and apprehension entertained by owners of the effect of such proceedings upon their slave property. They should be able to form the best judgment as to the means of preserving their property, and the Department is disposed to defer to their judgment and relinquish all idea of acting with a view to the preservation of the slaves to their owners or the Commonwealth. In the second point it is evident that the contingencies may occur which would render it an imperative military duty on the part of the Government to remove, as far as its power allowed, able-bodied men who were about to be, and without such action would certainly be, placed in the Army of the enemy. Heretofore the enemy have used mainly seduction, and, except in very limited localities and those entirely within their power, have not, so far as known, drafted or forced slaves into military service. Such course has, however, been threatened, and may at any time be adopted and enforced as their settled rule of action. In such event it is presumed no objection could or would be entertained by those now most reluctant to the removal of the able-bodied male slaves. I may say, however, to remove apprehensions on the part of owners, that no present necessity of the kind is known to exist, and that in deference to the wishes and judgment entertained by the owners, as well as by the members of the State Legislature whose opinions have been declared, great reluctance will be felt in resorting to removal, and that it will be only done under such plain necessity as it is hoped will reconcile it to the judgment and interest of all. In such event, too, if circumstances allow, previous notice will be given, so as to afford the option to owners to remove all the slave families.

DEAR SIR: To obviate any further difficulty in regard to carrying out cotton by the Collie Line of steamers, the agent of the owners proposes to sell an interest to the Confederacy in those steamers of one-fourth, which would give one-half of the cotton for the Confederacy and this State. I hope you will accept this proposition.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,

January 25, 1864.

General S. COOPER, C. S. Army,

Adjutant and Inspector General, Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: Agreeably to your request I give to you my reasons for believing that the establishment of a bureau of inspection under your department would prove infinitely beneficial to the Government. Outcries prevail over the whole country against the extravagances and abuses committed by the Government officers and agents in all of the departments of the Army, in and out of the field. Much alleged is doubtlessly true, although in many instances exaggerated, and many, beyond doubt, originate in ignorance of their duties on the part of agents and of their rights on the part of the injured. It unfortunately too often happens that persons falsely assuming the character of Government agents impress, and between such imposition and the rightful exactions of authorized agents, made, however, in too many instances in an arbitrary and arrogant manner by those who do not duly appreciate the relations between themselves and those with whom they are dealing, a spirit of dissatisfaction is being aroused against the Government, almost amounting to disaffection, which, unless remedied, may lead to disastrous consequences. The Government, ignorant of these facts, receives all the odium of sanctioning them, and, although whenever reported, it strives to correct the isolated cases brought to its notice, it effects nothing toward removing the spirit of general complaint, because such corrections are not generally known. The evils complained of are apparent to all in the vicinity of all the towns, depots, and entrepôts scattered over the country and are publicly commented upon, but there being no particular person or department charged with correcting these evils, though all admit the importance of correction, no one is disposed to assume the responsibility of bringing them to the notice of the Government.

The means for receiving such information and to enable the Government to apply correction would be in the organization of the bureau of inspection, which might readily be done under that of the Adjutant and Inspector General's Department. The benefits to be derived from such a bureau are incalculable. The strength and organization of our armies are obtained through the monthly and field returns, but nothing is known respecting their condition in the way of armament, discipline, instruction, and all interior arrangements which promote their efficiency and reliability. This is secured in this army by the tri-monthly reports received from inspectors belonging to the different organizations from the brigades up to corps. Through the system in this army officers are held to a strict observance of all orders emanating from all the headquarters up to those from the War Department. All deficiencies in drill, discipline, military instruction, arms, accouterments, transportation, and, in a word, in any of the requisites for securing efficiency in the different arms of service, are brought through these reports to the notice of the commanding general. In addition to this the examination of the accounts of officers of all the different departments are made, the observance of property accountability is exacted, the loss or destruction of arms, &c., charged as circumstances require to officers or men, and of all other public property misappropriated, leading through the instrumentality of inspectors to an observance of property accountability in officers and men which has saved thousands of arms to the Government, vast sums to the Treasury in the greater care secured to all kinds of public property, and at the same time has greatly improved the discipline and efficiency of the army.

There are very few cases of fraud which have occurred in this army, and wherever occurring have been promptly brought before a court-martial. With inspections impending over them at all times, in so far as their accounts go, there has been for twelve months past a most commendable observance of regulations in the rendition of accounts, considering all the difficulties under which this army has labored. Inspectors look to the preservation of private property in the vicinity of camps, and where damages are committed, to prompt indemnity to the injured and punishment of offenders whilst stationary, and on the march prevent straggling and the depredations consequent upon such irregularities. These are some of the numerous duties required from and performed by the army inspectors, making them, where efficient, the most important officers we have. Extend a system which has so manifestly improved the army throughout the Confederacy, and what would be the probable results? Doubtless the measurable, if not entire, correction of the abuses already mentioned with a large increase of the effective force in our ranks. At almost every town, depot, and entrepôt are to be found a number of staff officers with their retinues of detailed or exempted men, drawing commutation of fuel and quarters and purchasing supplies of the Government for themselves and families, entailing enormous expenditures upon the Treasury, and depriving our armies of supplies greatly needed. The first, in many instances, as superfluous, could be sent to the ranks, and the latter, substituted by partially disabled men, might be remanded to their companies. There are also many able-bodied, stout, healthy men nominally employed about the hospitals and by conscript, tax, and other bureaus scattered over the country, who should and would be forwarded to their companies. It is unnecessary to proceed further in the enumeration of benefits to be derived from a system whose usefulness has been recognized and adopted by every other government, it is believed, but our own, and I am satisfied that in addition to the greatly increased efficiency which it would have secured in all departments, millions would have been saved to the Government in the more strict observance of property accountability, which it would have brought about in every branch of the service. This result can yet be obtained in the future by the establishment of such a bureau, if organized. In addition to the officers in charge of the bureau there should be ten officers (colonels) of intelligence, energy, and perfect reliability to perform inspecting duties; the Confederacy to be divided into the same number of districts, which should be inspected successively by these officers; no officer inspecting the same district twice in succession, or, preferably, not until he had passed over all the other districts. By this means, in making their reports, which should be secret and only to be communicated to parties interested as the discretion of the Secretary of War might determine, inspectors would be particularly cautious in stating facts, and act unbiased by prejudice or partiality, knowing that his reports would be compared with those of the officers preceding and succeeding him, whereby inaccuracies or favoritism would be exposed.

In all cases where abuses were observed, requiring immediate corrections, special reports could be made, to be submitted for the action of the War Department. A manual prescribing the general duties of such officers can readily be drawn off, questions arising under special cases to be submitted for decision by the departments. The rank of these officers should not be less than that of colonel, as such is the grade held in some of the corps already, and it is necessary in inspecting tried and veteran troops, which would be required in passing over most of the districts, that the inspector should have that character and rank which would secure attention and deference to his wishes and respect for his office. Through their means the Government could keep itself advised of the condition of all of its forces; the capabilities of the different officers, both of those holding high commands and of those of lower grades giving promise of future ability, from whom to select for promotion; the relative efficiency of different organizations; the confidence of the troops in their commanders; the general spirit among the troops, and the military and political aspect discovered in different districts, with the resources in the way of supplies to be obtained from each.

I submit the foregoing views as suggestive, not doubting, general, that your own great experience and knowledge will determine upon some plan which may lead to the results desired.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. CHILTON,

Asst. Adjt. and Insp. Gen., Army of Northern Virginia.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Tallahassee, January 26, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: Permit me to introduce to your acquaintance Capt. D. W. Gwynn, of the Fifth Florida Battalion.

In your letter of the 29th of October, 1863, in reply to one from me of the 22d, you promised that "orders will also be given relative to the supply of arms for the service in Florida." Previously upon application by me for 3,000 stand of arms, 2,000 Austrian rifles were sent to Columbus, but they were without wipers and were comparatively useless. These rifles were at Columbus subject to the order of the general commanding the district, but I do not know how they were generally disposed of. We have much reason to apprehend raids from the enemy, and it is very important that the troops on whose service the State is dependent for defense should be armed and prepared to make it. I request therefore respectfully that the application for arms by Major Scott, who commands the Fifth Florida Battalion, may be promptly granted. I would also respectfully invite your attention to the copies of letters received by me relative to the impressment of milch cows and calves by the commissary agents. One is from the Rev. John R. Richards, from West Florida; the other from a judge of probate in South Florida. The effect of the impressments made in West Florida was the desertion of a large number of the troops in that part of the State, a portion of whom have joined the enemy. From one company, which was considered the best drilled and most reliable company in West Florida, fifty-two men deserted with their arms, some of whom were known to be brave men, who, indignant at the heartless treatment of the rights of citizens, have joined the enemy. I respectfully urge that orders should be immediately issued to conscript and place in military service every impressing agent not in military service, and who if not connected with the Quartermaster or Commissary Department, would be subject to conscription; also that orders shall be issued forbidding interference with cows and calves, or stock not fit for beef, by the officers of the Confederate Government. The citizens of Florida in many parts of the State are indignant at the unnecessary abuse of their rights; and I have reason to know that the lawless and wicked conduct of Government agents in this State have produced serious dissatisfaction among the troops from this State in Northwest Georgia and in Virginia, and unless the evils complained of shall be promptly remedied the worst results may reasonably be apprehended.

I have the honor to be, respectfully,

JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida.

CALHOUN COUNTY, FLA., *December 20, 1863.*Right Hon. JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida:

MY DEAR FRIEND: After my best respects to you as my friend and chief justice of the State of Florida, I avail myself of this opportunity of writing to you a few lines to ascertain if it is law for these "pressmen" to take the cows from the soldiers' families and leave them to starve. Colonel Coker has just left my house with a drove for Marianna of about 200 or 300 head. Some of my neighbors went after him and begged him to give them their milch cows, which he, Mr. Coker, refused to do, and took them on. And now, my dear Governor, I assure you, on the honor of a gentleman, that to my knowledge there are soldiers' families in my neighborhood that the last head of cattle have been taken from them and drove off, and unless this pressing of cows is stopped speedily there won't be a cow left in Calhoun County. I know of several soldiers' families in this county that haven't had one grain of corn in the last three weeks, nor any likelihood of their getting any in the next three months; their few cows taken away and they left to starve; their husbands slain on the battlefield at Chattanooga. This is a true state of things in my county; I vouch for them as an honest man. Now, if this is law I should be glad to know it, so I could know how to act by the law, for I have had a different notion of the law; and as a sound man, I think this pressing of all the cattle will have a bad end, in my judgment, and I am not all that think so. I think if it could be stopped it would have a good effect on this part of the community. I should be obliged to you if you feel a freedom to write me on this subject soon, as I look upon procrastination as the great thief of time.

I remain, your obedient servant,

JOHN R. RICHARDS.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

BROOKSVILLE, HERNANDO COUNTY, FLA.,
*January 12, 1864.*His Excellency JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida, Tallahassee, Fla.:

SIR: At a meeting of the Board of County Commissioners of this county on the 9th instant, for the purpose of considering the necessities and means of supplying the indigent families of soldiers in this county, it was ascertained that the supply of corn within the limits of the county is nearly exhausted, and that there can be very little or no corn purchased anywhere between here and Gainesville; whether from actual scarcity or an indisposition to sell I don't know, but it is generally supposed it is from the latter cause. On the suggestion of General J. M. Taylor, who said that he had heard Your Excellency say that corn would be sent down to Archer from Middle Florida for soldiers' families if it became necessary for the support of those families, I was verbally instructed by the Board of Commissioners to communicate their necessities to Your Excellency, and ask if 1,000 bushels of corn could be had in that way, in the event that we cannot procure it otherwise. Their situation will be deplorable in the extreme if corn cannot be had beyond the limits of the county, as in consequence of a bad crop season the past year there was not more than one-third of an average crop raised in the county.

Another matter which I would direct the attention of Your Excellency to is the fact that the cattle drivers under the orders of Captain McKay, commissary of this department, have stripped the county of every beef steer that they can find, from two years old and upward, and are now taking the cows, many of which have been known to have calves, in less than fifteen miles' drive. This is cutting off the only supply of meat we had for soldiers' families, as the supply of pork from various causes—mainly for want of corn to fatten it—is unusually short—so much so that the most fortunate of us will be on less than half allowance. Whatever the exigencies of the case may be, I consider it an outrage upon a community having in their midst as many suffering families as we have to take the cows, the only dependence for milk and beef for the future. In many cases the cows of poor families of soldiers in the Army are taken, as I have been informed. Does the order to those commissaries authorize them to take the milch cows from the people against their will or consent? If so, the country is certainly ruined and a general famine will be the result. Already the soldiers' families are becoming clamorous for meat and are killing people's cows wherever they can get hold of them. It does seem to me that this wholesale taking the beef-cattle and milch cows of the country should be stopped, for by taking the cows it certainly cuts off the means of any future supply of beef, saying nothing of cutting off the supply of milk. If we have arrived at that point where it has become actually necessary to impress all the cows in the country, which are so necessary to the support of any country, then I say, God help us, for starvation must be inevitable. Will Your Excellency do us the favor to write me in answer to these several points?

With great respect, I have the honor to be, Your Excellency's obedient servant,

P. G. WALL,
Judge of Probate.

PRIVATE.]

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA STATE GUARD,
Atlanta, January 26, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have just received your dispatch refusing my application to organize troops for the war from the members of the State Guard. I took the liberty of responding by telegraph and beg to address you again on the subject. I have no earthly interest in the question save as it affects the public interest. I beg you, therefore, to bear with me. What I say is based upon my personal experience and knowledge. I have opportunities of knowing the feeling on this subject which you have not at Richmond, and though my earnest counsel may not be heeded, pardon, I beg of you, one more intrusion upon your time. I regard this decision as disastrous in its consequences. In Georgia it will make a difference of more than 2,000 men in the Army, and the same will likewise occur in other States. I am not sure that we have not lost that number already, even if the authority should now be granted. Besides, you are putting into your old organizations an element which will produce the worst state of feeling through the ranks, and fill your Army with strife, jealousy, and heartburning. I am sure you do not appreciate the character of the men who have employed substitutes; whilst there are many who were seeking to avoid duty (and these will dodge you by leaving the country and other ways) there were large numbers who were as brave and patriotic as any who went into service.

Let me mention one class of cases, by no means unusual, where there were several members of a family, all willing to go, but agreed among themselves that one should remain to attend to the business of all. Those who went have fallen in battle or linger in hospitals. Another class, whose large business demanded their attention at home, and who have contributed largely, liberally, and profusely to the support of the Army and soldiers' families by selling their produce at the lowest prices, and so on, and so on. I tell you that the wholesale denunciation of men who employed substitutes is wrong and unjust. I fully agree that the law ought to be repealed, and these men ought now to be brought into the service, but I do insist, not only on their own accounts, but for the good of the service, they ought not to be forced into the ranks of the old organizations. In the case of the Georgia State Guard, all the men promptly responded to the call of the Governor, and have made as good and uncomplaining soldiers as any in the field. I seriously fear the consequences of this policy in Georgia. The very men who were eager and enthusiastic to form themselves into new companies for the war are now arranging to test the question before the courts, and will resort to every method to defeat what they regard as a harsh and unjust rule upon them.

They dread the jeers and sneers which they must encounter from the Army more than they do the bullets of the Yankees, and their pride revolts at the idea of being forced into the ranks under men their inferiors in every respect, save in the length of service and experience in the field.

Whether you respect this feeling or not, the question cannot be avoided, of the effect upon the strength and efficiency of the Army. You not only want soldiers, but you want them cheerful, content, and satisfied. It may even now be too late, but still better now than not at all.

Your friend,

HOWELL COBB.

[Indorsement.]

FEBRUARY 1, 1864.

Respectfully submitted to the President for his consideration.

I do not concur in General Cobb's views, but respect for his judgment induces me to submit his letter.

J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

RICHMOND, January 27, 1864.

THE SENATE:

I submit to the Senate herewith the nomination of A. R. Lawton, of Georgia, to be Quartermaster-General, with the rank of brigadier-general, to take rank from the 13th day of April, 1861, and deem it proper to communicate the reasons which induce this course.

On the passage of the act of the 20th of March last, entitled "An act to amend an act for the establishment and organization of the general staff for the Army of the Confederate States of America," inquiry was made to aid in the selection of the most competent person then made eligible, and the office of Quartermaster-General was tendered to General Lawton, who was averse to accepting it if it involved a nomination and new appointment, for the reasons that it withdrew him from service in the field, interfered with his chances for promotion, and that, as he was then the oldest brigadier in the service, he would, by acceptance of a new commission, be deprived of his relative rank as compared with other brigadiers. There were two other officers recommended to me as specially fitted to discharge the duties of Quartermaster-General, who could be spared from service in the field, and they were both major-generals and could not therefore be expected to accept a lower grade in the staff than that which they held in the line.

The name of the officer then performing the duties of Quartermaster-General was also presented to me with recommendations entitled to carry great respect, but my own observation of the manner in which those duties had been discharged had previously satisfied me that the public interests required an officer of greater ability and one better qualified to meet the pressing emergencies of the service during the war.

On examination of the law above referred to, its language, although not free from doubt, was held, after consultation and advice, to justify the conclusion that the intention of Congress would be fulfilled by assigning to the performance of the duties of Quartermaster-General an officer already confirmed as brigadier-general in the Provisional Army, without again submitting his nomination to the Senate. The grounds for this conclusion were that the eighth section of the act of 6th of March, 1861, organizing the Regular Army, expressly authorized the Executive to assign the brigadier-generals to any duties he might specially direct, and when the five brigadier-generals were raised to the rank of generals by the act of 16th of May, 1861, the President was again empowered to assign them to such commands and "duties" as he might specially direct. As it had, therefore, been permitted by Congress that any one of the generals of the Regular Army might be assigned to staff or any other duty at Executive discretion, it seemed a fair inference that when by the law of last session provision was made that the rank, pay, and allowances of Quartermaster-General should be those of a brigadier in the Provisional Army the will of the Legislature was as well fulfilled by assigning to the duties of that office one who was already a brigadier-general of the Provisional Army as by nominating a new officer.

This view of the question was fortified by the fact that the law last referred to did not create an office, but only provided that during the war the officer discharging the duties of Quartermaster-General should have the rank of brigadier-general, and by the further fact that the original act of 26th of February, 1861, for the establishment and organization of the general staff, contained a provision still in force, that officers of the Quartermaster-General and other staff departments might by order of the President be assigned to the command of troops, according to their rank in the Army, thus indicating that positions in the quartermaster's and other staff departments were not distinct offices, but were posts of duty to which officers of the Army were appointed, and from which they might be withdrawn and assigned to other duties at Executive discretion. This is a provision of our law that did not exist in the former service of the United States, in which when an officer of the Army entered the Quartermaster's Department he surrendered his commission in the line and his right to command troops.

I am advised, however, that such is not the construction given to the law by many Senators, and I so far conform to their views as to give the Senate an opportunity to advise the Executive in relation to the appointment of this officer.

This statement was also necessary in explanation of the proposal that General Lawton's rank should date from the 13th of April, 1861, that being the date of his present commission of brigadier-general in the Provisional Army.

Since the foregoing message was written I observe by the published proceedings of the Senate that it has adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, A. C. Myers is now Quartermaster-General of the C. S. Army, and is by law authorized and required to discharge the duties thereof.

Resolved, That A. R. Lawton is not authorized by law to discharge the duties of said office.

Refraining from any further remark on these resolutions than the expression of my conviction that they are not sustained by the Constitution or the law, their passage enforces the propriety of submitting to you the nomination which accompanies this message.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Columbia, January 27, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I had the honor on the 19th day of December last to inclose you and request your attention to a resolution of the Legislature as to the Government foregoing the right heretofore exercised of shipping cotton and bringing freight on the boats of the Importing and Exporting Company of South Carolina in consequence of the ownership of the State of a part of these boats. The resolution seems to explain itself. I have not yet received a reply. I inclose copies both of the act on the subject and the resolution,* and ask leave to introduce to your acquaintance Mr. Charles M. Furman, president of the bank of the State, who will present to you the views of the Legislature in passing the act and resolution, as well as my own, as to the importance to the Confederate Government and the State of the proposed relinquishment. He is fully authorized to act in the premises. It will be my object to import mainly army supplies and agricultural implements—the former to relieve as far as practicable the Confederate Government and keep the troops from this State well equipped for service, and the latter to keep the citizens supplied with the implements for raising subsistence for themselves and the troops in the field.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. L. BONHAM.

The PRESIDENT OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

SIR: I have received the following resolution of the House of Representatives, referred by Your Excellency to this Department:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform this House whether authority has been granted by the War Department to any person or persons to raise new companies, battalions, or regiments of troops since September 27, 1862, in portions of the country in which the conscript law has not been suspended by the President; and further, if such authority has been granted, to whom and in how many instances it has been granted, and how many companies, battalions, or regiments have been raised under such authority.

In response I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the Adjutant-General, stating that the records of his office do not show any authority granted to raise troops of conscript age except in localities where the operation of the conscript law has been suspended, or from the control of the enemy it cannot be enforced. All special authorities to raise troops have been issued through the office of the Adjutant-General.

Richmond, January 28, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

On the 19th of October last I addressed you a letter, inclosing a copy of a circular from Lieut. Col. G. W. Lay, acting chief of the Bureau of Conscription, in which I objected to the order as unlawful, and in support of my objection I inclosed you a copy of the opinion of Judge Halyburton, of the Confederate district court, in the case ex parte Lane. To this letter you made no answer.

On the 17th of November last I addressed you another letter, inclosing a copy of a letter from the Hon. Waller R. Staples to this Department, and a copy of a letter from sundry other persons to him, presenting a case of gross violation of the law and contempt of the decision of a court of the State of Virginia in two cases in which persons were arrested and put into the military service, after having been released from such service on writs of habeas corpus, and calling your attention to the fact that I had received no answer to my letter above referred to of the 19th of October. To this letter I have received no answer.

And on the 7th of January instant I wrote to you again, inclosing a copy of a letter from the postmaster at Ivor, Va., complaining of the rude and unlawful conduct of a Captain Green in unceremoniously turning him out of the post-office and using it as a dancing-saloon and as a store-house for forage, and calling your attention to the fact that you had not answered my letters of the 19th of October and 17th of November, and asking an answer to that. I have received no answer to this.

The necessities of the public service require frequent correspondence between the Post-Office and War Departments. As your course in these cases precludes any further communication between us, without a surrender of self-respect and the rights of this Department by me, I have no course left but to submit the matter to the President.

Your obedient servant,

JOHN H. REAGAN,
Postmaster-General.

GENERAL ORDERS, {	ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 8. }	Richmond, January 28, 1864.

I. Paragraphs 1129, 1130, 1131, 1132, Army Regulations, are hereby revoked.

II. Enlisted men detailed for duty on account of physical disability, in the city of Richmond, are allowed $1.20 per diem as commutation of rations.

III. Commutation of rations of all enlisted men entitled thereto by the Regulations of the War Department, whether on detached or on detailed service, or stationed in a city, with no opportunity of messing, or of the non-commissioned and regimental staff, when they have no opportunity of messing, or of soldiers on furlough, or stationed where rations cannot be issued in kind, or placed temporarily in a private hospital on the advice of the senior surgeon of the post or detachment, or of ordnance sergeants, or of a soldier who has necessarily paid for his own subsistence, or of a chaplain, is fixed at $1 per diem, to date from the 1st of January, 1864.

IV. Enlisted men who have been or may become permanently disabled, or who hold the certificate of a medical examining board to that effect, and who have not been discharged the service, may have their rations commuted at $1.25 per diem, whether they are in a hospital, private quarters, or on furlough.

V. All commutation accounts will state the length of time, date, and amount, for what purpose commutation is claimed, and that it was impracticable to take rations in kind; which facts must be certified to by the commissioned officer under whose orders the soldier was at the time the rations became due.

VI. Commutation of rations in the case of paroled unexchanged prisoners on furlough, who have just been received from the Federal lines, will be allowed at $1 per diem, to date from the 1st of January, 1864.

VII. The following paragraph will be substituted for 1111, Army Regulations:

Issues to the hospital will be on returns by the medical officers, for such provisions only as are actually required for the sick and wounded. The commuted value of rations for the sick and wounded will be $1.25. The rations for hospitals will be the same as that issued to soldiers in the field. If a greater allowance is required of any particular articles not issued to troops in the field, special requisitions must be made therefor.

VIII. Hospital attendants cannot draw rations from the Subsistence Department, but will have their rations commuted at $1.25 per diem.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 9. } Richmond, January 29, 1864.

I. The following schedules of prices for articles named therein, adopted by commissioners appointed pursuant to law, for the State of Virginia, are announced for the information of all concerned; and the special attention of officers and agents of the Government is directed thereto:

II.

RICHMOND, January 27, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON:

SIR: In reviewing the schedules of prices for February and March, we invited the co-operation and aid of Mr. William B. Harrison, and it is just to add that the schedules received the unanimous approval of the commissioners. We respectfully offer the accompanying Schedules A and B, with the understanding that the prices are to remain for the months of February and March, unless in the interval it should be deemed necessary to modify them.

The following prices are to be the maximum rates to be paid for the articles impressed, in all cities and usual places of sale, and when impressed on the farms or elsewhere, the same prices are to be paid. Since the passage and enforcement of the law imposing the tax in kind places additional burdens upon the farmers of delivering a tenth of their productions, we think it rather too onerous on those who produce the most to be required also to incur the heavy additional expense of delivering their surplus.

Under existing circumstances we have deemed it not only just, but most likely to favor increased production, that producers in future should not be required to transport their surplus productions when impressed, but that the agents of the Government should employ or impress the neighborhood or county wagons and teams to haul all such articles, and so divide the work between the owners of wagons and teams as to be least prejudicial to those successfully engaged in agriculture.

In assessing the average value of "first-class artillery and wagon horses at $350," we designed that the term should be accepted and acted upon according to its obvious common-sense import. In other words, that horses should be selected and then impressed accordingly as their working qualities and adaptation to army service, together with their intrinsic value, would warrant a judicious purchaser in considering them as coming within the contemplation of the commissioners when they assessed the average value of such horses as the Government needed at $350. But cases might arise, however, when the public exigencies would be so urgent as to demand that all horses at hand should be impressed. Yet under ordinary circumstances, when family or extra blooded horses or brood mares of admitted high value are impressed, we respectfully suggest to the Secretary of War to have instructions forwarded to the impressing officers to propose and allow the owners to substitute in their stead such strong, sound, and serviceable horses or mules as shall be considered and valued by competent and disinterested parties as first-class artillery horses or first-rate wagon mules.

The term "average value per head" was used in contradistinction to a fixed and uniform price for each horse or mule. We supposed that in impressing a number of horses or mules, whether owned by several persons or one individual, that some might be estimated at $250, or even at less, and others at different advanced rates, according to their worth, up as high as $450, or above that amount—thus making an average value or price for a number of good, sound, and efficient horses $350 each, and mules $300 each.

In illustration of our views, we will add, that a horse with only one eye sound might, in all other respects, be classed as a first-rate artillery horse, yet the loss of one eye would justly and considerably curtail his value. So a horse from ten to eighteen years of age might be deemed in all other particulars as a first-class artillery horse, but of course, however efficient or able to render good service for a year or so, yet his advanced age would justly and materially impair his value. Any horse, however he may approximate the standard of a first-class artillery horse, must, according to deficiencies, fall below the maximum price; and as few comparatively exactly come up to the standard, and therefore are entitled to the maximum price, so of course in all other instances the price should be proportionately reduced, as imperfections place them below the standard of first class, &c.

No. 5. }

I. Commandants will forthwith proceed to change the locality of each Congressional district and local enrolling officer, and each Congressional district examining surgeon. Care will be observed not to place an enrolling officer in the district or county of which he is a resident.

II. Public notice in the newspapers of the State will be given for twenty days, calling for the presentation to the enrolling officers of all exemptions heretofore granted, and officers will be instructed carefully to revise them, renewing such as are correct, and revoking such as are fraudulent or erroneous.

III. Corruption, abuses, and errors are known to exist, and the purport of this circular is to endeavor to remedy and prevent these abuses and give more activity to the service. No application for a departure from its provision will be considered.

IV. The Superintendent again appeals to the honor and patriotism of the commandants of conscripts, and directly to the enrolling officers, for increased diligence, activity, and energy in the performance of the important duties confided to them.

The President, the Congress, the people, and the noble armies now in the field look to the authorities of conscription to maintain and increase those armies, and thereby secure the public liberty. Every man engaged in this service should feel that the liberties of his country and the preservation of parents, wives, sisters, and daughters from a brutal and relentless enemy depend on his individual exertion. The officer of conscription who neglects his duty or abuses his trust is a traitor of the deepest dye. Want of energy, want of earnest, honest, untiring diligence is cowardly treason. The guilty officer may perhaps escape present detection and punishment, but the curse of God and his country will fall upon him. We have been told what we are expected to do, and how to do it, and if we fail to get into the field by the 1st of May every man the law requires us to send there, we will deserve and will certainly receive a just condemnation. These are not mere idle words of exhortation. Let us fail, and we will find their bitter truth. We are soldiers assigned to this service—the most delicate, the most important in the public defense. Let us show that we are as zealous and as brave as our brother soldiers who are in front of the enemy.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., January 29, 1864.

Hon. Messrs. W. P. CHILTON and DAVID CLOPTON,
Members of Congress, House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of the 25th instant was received to-day.* The probability is that the spring campaign will be opened at a very early day, and the necessity for filling up the ranks of the Army is urgent and imperious. Whatever resources of men that can be put in requisition must be used as soon as practicable. The law repealing the exemption of those who had furnished substitutes furnished additional and important resources, and the orders for employing these men forthwith issued. They may be seen in the morning papers. The legislation on the subject of those who are to be reserved for the care of plantations is at present in a very confused condition.

The specific reservations in the act of October 13, 1862, relative to the owners and overseers of plantations and the owners and managers of stock you will recollect. Those were broad and comprehensive provisions by law, and this Department had no difficulty in administering them. One of these was unconditionally repealed in May last, and in its place a very restricted, but still a specific, enactment, allowing an exemption in favor of a class of farmers and planters, was substituted for it upon the payment of a tax. There was besides this a clause which allowed the President to grant exemptions in districts deprived of white and slave labor indispensable to the producer of grain or provisions necessary for the support of the population remaining at home, and also on account of justice, equity, and necessity. The latter portion of this section of the act of May 1, 1863, has rarely been used with reference to the cases of owners of plantations. It has generally been applied to the condition of those who were destitute or those who have furnished to the Army several members, leaving one to take care of the families and fortunes of the remainder, or who had placed in the service minors not liable to service but competent to render efficient service, from considerations of a domestic nature, or when the family was composed of aged, helpless, unprotected persons, making the assistance of a male member necessary and proper.

Political considerations have not entered as a controlling ingredient in the decision of the cases to be exempt because of justice, equity, or necessity.

The persons who have had large industrial interests have been encouraged to relieve themselves by putting substitutes in the Army. The right to do so has been greatly restrained by the regulations of the Department limiting the number to two for each month in a company and requiring the approval, first, of the regimental commander, and afterward of the general commanding. There has been much fraud and abuse of this privilege, but there have been a great many cases in which the privilege to put in substitutes was exercised fairly and in which the circumstances of the principal justified the act. The repeal of this act and the subjecting of the men to military service renders some legislation proper to meet the cases that arise when detriment to the interests of the country would follow for the conscription of all the persons made liable to service in consequence of the repeal.

* Not found.

The Department cannot form a plan of administration until the legislation of Congress on this important subject be known, and the object of this communication is simply to place before you the meager state of legislation upon the subject which will render any plan inadequate to meet the exigencies of the country.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Secretary of War.

SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, Va., January 29, 1864.

Lieut. Gen. L. POLK,
Commanding, &c., Meridian, Miss.:

GENERAL: I beg leave to represent to you the necessity of perfecting, before the organization of the spring campaign, some arrangement by which the sick and wounded sent to the rear of large armies, preceding, during, or after engagements, may be more comfortably provided for. Reason and experience conclusively show that this cannot be accomplished by a medical director independent of the prompt and energetic action of a commissary and quartermaster. In order to insure concert of action upon the part of these three officers the plan laid down in papers marked A and B was referred for the consideration of the Commissary and Quartermaster Generals. No conclusion has yet been arrived at by them as far as is known to this office, and the necessity for some action being promptly taken suggests the propriety of the matter being directly referred to the commanders of the independent commands. In paper marked C will be found the plan previously adopted by General Lee for the Army of Northern Virginia, so far as the Commissary Department is concerned. This, however, would hardly be sufficient for the requirements of your command, as it is not made applicable to temporary or wayside hospitals, for the establishment of which as great a necessity does not exist in the former as in the latter, but for which the plan is also especially designed. It is hoped that the commanding general will consider it to the interest of the service to adopt promptly the proposed or some other plan approved by his judgment as best adapted for securing the object desired.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Col. L. B. NORTHPROP,
Commissary-General, Richmond:

COLONEL: I desire to inform you that in the prompt establishment of hospitals in the rear of armies and in their removal from point to point, as necessitated by the contingencies of the movements in the field, the Medical Department is much embarrassed by the present system of organization of the Commissary Department. When such arrangements exist as at present in the Army of Tennessee, where these, the post commissaries, are required to consult the chief commissary of General Bragg's army and to procure special authority from him, the embarrassment is still greater, as particularly shown by the reports concerning the provisions made for the wounded after the battle of Chickamauga. The duties and responsibilities of the chief commissary of that and other of our armies, especially when such armies are actively operating against the enemy, are so great that it is impossible for him to give that attention to the wants of the hospitals being organized or removed from point to point which the existing circumstances require. Communication, too, with his subordinates and with the medical director of hospitals in the rear being cut off or rendered difficult and irregular, it is impossible that the requisite arrangements can be properly effected. In view, then, of the inconvenience and injury of the service which have resulted from this imperfect arrangement, it is urgently recommended that a special commissary, independent of the authority of the chief commissary in the field, to receive authority directly from headquarters at Richmond, be assigned to the performance of such duties of the Commissary Department as relate to the supply of commissary stores to the sick and wounded, and to hospitals organized and to be organized, or transferred in the rear of the several armies of the Confederacy now in the field.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GENERAL: I desire to inform you that in the prompt establishment of hospitals in the rear of armies, and in their removal from point to point, as necessitated by the contingencies of the movements in the field, as also especially in the transportation of the sick and wounded, the Medical Department is much embarrassed by the present organization of the Quartermaster's Department, and by the lack of funds in the hands of the respective quartermasters at the points where these accommodations of the sick are to be improvised. When such arrangements exist as at present in the Army of Tennessee, where these quartermasters are required to consult the chief quartermaster of General Bragg's army, and to procure their funds and special authority from him, the embarrassment is still greater, as particularly shown by the reports concerning the provisions made for the wounded after the battle of Chickamauga. The duties and responsibilities of the chief quartermaster of that and other of our armies, especially when such armies are actively operating against the enemy, are so great that it is impossible for him to give that attention to the wants of the hospitals being organized, and to the transportation of the wounded which the existing circumstances require. Communication, too, with his subordinates, and with the medical director of the hospitals in the rear being cut off, or rendered difficult and irregular, it is impossible that the requisite arrangements can be properly effected. In view, then, of the inconvenience and injury to the service which have resulted from this imperfect arrangement, it is urgently recommended that a special quartermaster, independent of the authority of the chief quartermaster in the field, to receive his funds directly from headquarters at Richmond, to be assigned to the performance of such duties of the Quartermaster's Department as relate to the organization of hospitals, and the transportation of the sick and wounded for hospitals organized and to be organized, or transferred in the rear of the several armies of the Confederacy now in the field.

OFFICE CHIEF COMMISSARY,
ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
December 28, 1863.

In all cases of battle the commissary of each division will detail an assistant commissary for temporary duty at the field hospital. The officer thus selected will report in person to the chief surgeon of division, and will give his special attention to the subsisting of the sick and wounded. He will procure the necessary supplies from the division commissary train, and will obtain the necessary funds from the division commissary for the purchase of such food as the country affords and may be necessary for the benefit of the sick and wounded.

He will carry out such instructions pertaining to the subsistence department as may be required by the surgeon in charge of the hospital. It shall be the duty of the corps commissaries to see that this detail is promptly made.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Milledgeville, January 29, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: Your letter of 13th instant was about ten days on its way and reached my office during my absence in Southwestern Georgia. In reply I have to state that the troops organized under your call for six months cannot be relied upon to relieve General Beauregard. The term of service of part of them has already expired, and they have been mustered out and discharged. On the 4th of February, only five days hence, the term of nearly all the others expires, and they will also be discharged.

Your requisition and their muster-rolls called for a six-months' term from the time they were mustered in, and not a six-months' term of active duty. The law of Congress under which you made the call declares them to be part of the armies of the Confederacy, but gives them pay and rations only while they may be in active service. Hence the time ran in their favor from the time they were mustered in, whether in active service or not.

The failure of the Government to keep its faith with that part of the State Guard who were called out early in September last and kept constantly in the field, when no raid was approaching Georgia, and no sudden emergency called for their services, has not only seriously injured our prospect for a supply of provisions the ensuing year, but it has caused great dissatisfaction with and great distress of the Government, and has engendered a feeling which will render it very difficult to enlist another similar force in the State. During a greater portion of the time there has been no use whatever for the troops at the points where they were kept.

They were organized to repel raids, meet sudden emergencies, &c., and were promised that when they were not needed for these and like purposes they should have the privilege to be at home, attending to their ordinary business as producers. After they were ordered into camp they were compelled to remain there during the balance of the term as regular troops. While they were thus kept in camp eating out our too limited supply of provisions, and were deprived of the privilege of sowing their wheat and preparing for another crop, they saw no enemy, there was no raid, no sudden emergency, and no use for their services. They felt and knew that this was a violation of both the letter and spirit of the contract. In their behalf I protested against it, but to no effect.

If we expect to continue to conduct the war successfully, we are obliged to have a producing class at home as well as a fighting class in the field. The one is as indispensable as the other. We are already cut off from a large part of the most productive lands in the Confederacy, and we must fail to keep up our supplies if the productive interests of the portion we yet hold are seriously crippled. Thus far the State of Georgia has been able to meet the calls made upon her without paralyzing to a very great extent her agricultural interests, except in that part of the State where there are but few slaves. But I feel it my duty to inform you that we shall not be able to meet the increasing demands made by the Confederate Government through its conscript officers, and spare a large additional force for constant service in or out of the State without so crippling the planting interests that a support cannot be made another year for the Army and the people of the State.

Many of our fields now lie uncultivated, and if large additional levies of troops are to be made for constant service many more must be neglected. How, then, are we to make a support for another year?

I have lately been through the upper, middle, and southwestern portions of the State, which are its more productive portions, and I tell you in all candor that the country is becoming so far drained of supplies that if relief cannot be had from some other source I do not see how it is possible to supply the people and the Army with bread till another crop is made, while the supply of meat is entirely inadequate.

The cattle have been so generally taken for the Army as to leave a still less encouraging prospect for meat another year, and if heavy calls are to be made for troops to be taken from the agricultural pursuits the prospect for bread will indeed be gloomy.

If it is the policy of the Government to put the whole people, or any great additional number of them, into military service, the struggle for the future must necessarily be short. We cannot expect to conquer the enemy in a few months, and if we fail to make a crop it is only necessary for them to continue the war till we consume our provisions, and they must conquer us.

But you may inquire how, then, we are to get troops to meet the large armies of the enemy. It is not my wish to dictate, nor do I desire to annoy you by voluntary advice, but in view of the perils which surround us, and the responsibility of my position as the Executive of one of the States of the Confederacy, I venture to suggest that it would be infinitely better to make but little further drafts upon the producing class, and put the troops whose names are now on the muster-rolls and who are in the pay of the Government, and especially the almost countless swarm of young, able-bodied officers, who are to be seen on all our railroad trains and in all our hotels, into the Army—a place where many of them are seldom found. This would increase the armies from 25 to 50 per cent. and make them strong enough, if well fed and sustained, to meet, with all the advantages which we as the invaded party possess, any force the enemy will be able to bring against us. Almost every little railroad village has become a military post, and a number of officers in brass buttons and gold lace can be seen idling about, each out of the reach of danger, with troops enough to supply each with a command. The Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments are thronged with able-bodied men, subject to conscription or detailed from the Army, who are acting as clerks, purchasing agents, impressment agents, &c. From these and similar causes 50 per cent. of the Army are not in camp to answer to roll-call, and further drafts must be made upon the producing class to supply the places of the absentees, who ought to be kept at their places in the Army.

It is easy to foresee the result of this policy if persisted in. As the enemy has over three times as many men able to do military service as we have, it is impossible for us to keep in the field as many troops as he does. Nor is this necessary. As the invaded party, having the inner lines of communication and other advantages incident to our position, if our people are united and determined and our Government acts with wisdom and prudence, we can defend successfully against a vastly superior force in point of numbers.

In conclusion I have only to state that Georgia has always done her whole duty and furnished more than her full share of men and means, and I doubt not she will still do her just part to the utmost of her ability as long as the enemy desecrates the soil of the Confederacy.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

AN ACT to regulate the collection of the tax in kind upon tobacco, and to amend an act entitled "An act to levy taxes for the common defense and carry on the Government of the Confederate States," approved April 24, 1863.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the tax in kind of one-tenth imposed by said act upon all tobacco grown in the Confederate States, instead of being collected by the post quartermaster, shall be collected by the agents appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to collect and preserve tobacco, and the tax assessors shall transfer their estimates of the tobacco due from each planter or farmer, specifying both quantity and quality, to the said agents or their duly authorized sub-agents, taking their receipts therefor, and shall also transmit a copy of these estimates to the chief of the Produce Loan Office; and when said tobacco shall have been collected the said agents shall be liable for its safe custody.

SEC. 2. That each farmer and planter, not earlier than the first day of June, nor later than the fifteenth day of July, shall deliver his tithe of tobacco in prizing order, put up in convenient parcels for transportation, at the nearest prizing depot, of which there shall be not less than one established in each county by the agents for the collection and preservation of tobacco, where the said tobacco shall be prized and securely packed in hogsheads or other packages, suitable for market, by said agents.

SEC. 3. That the tax assessor shall require a statement from each farmer or planter as to the different qualities of tobacco raised by him, and shall assess, as due the Confederate States, one-tenth of each of said qualities, which shall be stated separately in his estimates, and shall be delivered separately by the farmer or planter at the prizing depots.

SEC. 4. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing are hereby repealed.

Approved January 30, 1864.

AN ACT to fix the pay and allowances of the master armorer of the Confederate States Armory at Richmond, Virginia.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the master armorer of the Confederate States Armory at Richmond, Virginia, shall hereafter receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum from the time of the passage of this act, with allowances for quarters and fuel of a captain of infantry.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR,
Richmond, Va.:

SIR: Pardon the liberty taken in inclosing you a letter addressed by me to Brig. Gen. W. M. Gardner, commanding Middle Florida, indorsed and approved by Maj. Gen. Howell Cobb on the 7th instant.* The sufferings of Georgians in C. S. service, through lack of clothing and the dearth of raw material in this State, caused by the extensive operations of the Confederate Government, have made it absolutely necessary for us to go outside the limits of Georgia and make purchases where the material could be found. Already this department has issued to destitute Georgians, C. S. Army, about 15,000 suits of clothing and about 30,000 pair of shoes. These, as the generals will testify, have added much to the valor and comfort of the troops. With the exception of the refusal of the commander of the District of Middle Florida, we have met no opposition in making purchases in other States for this object. The refusal of this commander I also respectfully inclose,* begging you, if consistent with the public service, that you will set aside this decision and grant me permission to make such purchases and shipments from the District of Middle Florida. I have no desire to come in conflict with purchasing agents of the Confederate Government. I only ask that my agents be placed on a like footing. Such authority granted to this department would place it in a condition to relieve the necessities of Georgia soldiers when the Confederate Government should be unable to do so. The favor is sought in the name of the gallant but destitute Georgians in Confederate service, whose wants will be supplied when the Government is short of supplies, if granted. The letter to Brig. Gen. W. M. Gardner, indorsed by Maj. Gen. Howell Cobb, and the refusal of the colonel commanding the District of Middle Florida, is therefore respectfully inclosed. Begging an early response,

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

I at last begin to see my way to realize the resources within my reach. If you will glance at the map, with the suggestion that in the interior there is an abundance of corn, and the stock is in good order and better cared for than it could be by the Government, and that it is nearly all required for the production of food, and should not be demanded by the Government unless upon a fair canvass of what is most required—food or mules. In addition to this it is always within reach of the Government, and by June 1, 1864, the corn crop will be made. I have located Capt. L. B.

Mitchell at Courtland, Ala., in connection with General Roddey's cavalry, with agents in the enemy's lines. A quartermaster at Okolona is acting as my purchasing agent in all matters that arise around that point. Maj. W. S. Harris is at Panola, Miss., with agents on Mississippi River and in West Tennessee moving with Forrest's cavalry. Capt. C. A. Manlove is stationed at Tchula, Miss., with agents running in to Mississippi River. Capt. Wilkes Henry is stationed at Port Gibson, with agents in and around Vicksburg. At Woodville, Miss., I have Capt. H. F. Cook, with agents on Mississippi River down to Lake Maurepas. Upon my personal application to General Polk, he assigned Capt. E. T. Henry for the charge of my recruiting stables in Alabama. My instructions to my quartermasters are to select the most respectable and energetic men, exempt from military service, as their agents, with instructions to canvass every plantation and buy every mule, the quartermaster traveling through every part of his district and conferring at home with his agents, seeing for himself and aiding and advising his agents, requiring them to report in writing and verbally. By this means I am accomplishing something, and will certainly meet requisitions from my own district, which are much increased by the organization of new regiments by General Forrest and others, and by having requisitions already filled for Georgia. I have been notified already of arrival at a safe place of 140 mules from North Alabama and 150 from near Baton Rouge.

Respectfully,

FEBRUARY 3, 1864.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

The present state of the Confederacy, in my judgment, requires that I should call your attention to a condition of things existing in the country which has already been productive of serious evil, and which threatens still graver consequences unless an adequate remedy shall be speedily applied by the legislation of Congress. It has been our cherished hope—and hitherto justified by the generous self-devotion of our citizens—that when the great struggle in which we are engaged was passed we might exhibit to the world the proud spectacle of a people unanimous in the assertions and defense of their rights and achieving their liberty and independence after the bloodiest war of modern times without the necessity of a single sacrifice of civil right to military necessity. But it can no longer be doubted that the zeal with which the people sprung to arms at the beginning of the contest has, in some parts of the Confederacy, been impaired by the long continuance and magnitude of the struggle.

While brigade after brigade of our brave soldiers who have endured the trials of the camp and battle-field are testifying their spirit and patriotism by voluntary re-enlistment for the war, discontent, disaffection, and disloyalty are manifested among those who, through the sacrifices of others, have enjoyed quiet and safety at home. Public meetings have been held, in some of which treasonable designs are masked by a pretended devotion to State sovereignty, and in others is openly avowed. Conventions are advocated with the pretended object of redressing grievances, which, if they existed, could as well be remedied by ordinary legislative action, but with the real design of accomplishing treason under the form of law. To this end a strong suspicion is entertained that secret leagues and associations are being formed. In certain localities men of no mean position do not hesitate to avow their disloyalty and hostility to our cause, and their advocacy of peace on the terms of submission to the abolition of slavery. In districts overrun by the enemy or liable to their encroachments, citizens of well-known disloyalty are holding frequent communication with them, and furnishing valuable information to our injury, even to the frustration of important military movements. And yet must they, through too strict regard to the technicalities of the law, be permitted to go at large till they have perfected their treason by the commission of an overt act? After the commission of the act the evidence is often unattainable, because within the enemy's lines. Again and again such persons have been arrested, and as often they have been discharged by the civil authorities, because the Government could not procure the testimony from within the lines of the enemy. On one occasion, when a party of officers were laying a torpedo in James River, persons on shore were detected communicating with the enemy, and were known to pilot them to a convenient point for observing the nature of the service in which the party were engaged. They were arrested and were discharged on habeas corpus, because, although there was moral certainty of their guilt, it could not be proved by competent testimony. Twice the Government has received secret and confidential information of plots to release the prisoners confined in Richmond. This information was sufficiently definite to enable preventive measures to be adopted with success; but as it pointed out the guilty conspirators by strong suspicion only, and not by competent testimony, they could not be arrested, and are still at large, ready to plot again. A citizen possessing the means and opportunity of doing much injury to the service was arrested for disloyalty. He was twice tried before different commissions. Upon each examination he avowed his hostility to our cause and his desire to join the enemy. Both commissions decided that it would be dangerous to suffer him to go at large. Yet, upon the demand of the civil authorities, he had to be released for want of competent legal testimony.

The Capital of the Government is the object of peculiar attention to the enemy. I have satisfactory reasons for believing that spies are continually coming and going in our midst. Information has been repeatedly received from friendly parties at the North that particular individuals then in Richmond were sent as spies by the enemy. Yet, however accurate and reliable such information might be, it was not competent testimony; and it was idle to arrest them only to be discharged by the civil authorities. Important information of secret movements among the negroes fomented by base white men has been received from faithful servants, but no arrests of instigators could be made because there was no competent testimony. Apprehensions have more than once been entertained of a servile insurrection in Richmond. The Northern papers inform us that Butler is perfecting some deep-laid scheme to punish us for our refusal to hold intercourse with him. If, as is not improbable, his designs should point to servile insurrection in Richmond, incendiarism, and the destruction of public works so necessary to our defense, and so impossible to be replaced, how can we hope to fathom it and arrest the guilty emissaries and contrivers but by incompetent negro testimony? In some of the States civil process has been brought to bear with disastrous efficiency upon the Army. Every judge has the power to issue the writ of habeas corpus, and if one manifests more facility in discharging petitioners than his associates the application is made to him, however remote he may be. In one instance a general on the eve of an important movement, when every man was needed, was embarrassed by the command of a judge even then over 200 miles distant to bring, if in his custody, or send if in custody of another, before him on habeas corpus, some deserters who had been arrested and returned to his command. In another, the commandant of a camp of conscripts who had a conscript in camp, was commanded to bring him before a judge more than 100 miles distant, although there was a judge competent to hear and determine the cause resident in the place where the writ was executed. He consulted eminent counsel, and was advised that from the known opinions of the judge selected, the conscript would undoubtedly be released, and the officer was therefore advised to discharge him at once, and return the facts informally; that such a return was not technically sufficient, but would be accepted as accomplishing the purpose of the writ. He acted on the advice of his counsel, and was immediately summoned by the judge to show cause why he should not be attached for a contempt in making an insufficient return, and was compelled to leave his command at a time when his services were pressingly needed by the Government and travel over 100 miles and a considerable distance away from any railroad, to purge himself of the technical contempt. These particular instances may serve to show the nature of the delays, difficulties, and embarrassments which are constantly occurring. And injurious as they are, they are but light and trivial in comparison with evils which are reasonably to be anticipated.

It is understood that questions are to be multiplied as to the constitutionality of the late act of Congress placing in the military service those who had furnished substitutes. If a single judge, in any State, should hold the act to be unconstitutional, it is easy to see that that State will either furnish no soldiers from that class, or furnish them only when too late for the pressing need of the country. Every application would be made to that particular judge, and he will discharge the petitioners in each. And although the officer may have the right of appeal, yet the delay will be tantamount in its consequences to a discharge. Indeed, this result is likely to ensue although every judge in the Confederacy should hold the law to be perfectly constitutional and valid.

A petition for a habeas corpus need not and ordinarily does not declare the particular grounds upon which the petitioner claims his discharge. A general statement on oath that he is illegally restrained of his liberty is sufficient to induce and even to require the judge to issue the writ. In every case the enrollment will be followed by the writ, and every enrolling officer will be kept in continual motion to and from the judge, until the embarrassment and delay will amount to the practical repeal of the law. Its provisions will add no more soldiers to the Army. But this is not all. We shall not be able to retain those already in the service. Nothing has done so much to inspirit our brave soldiers as the determination evinced by Congress to send to their aid those who have thus far lived at their ease at home while they have endured dangers, toils, and privations. When the hope of equal justice and of speedy re-enforcement shall thus have failed, disappointment and despondency will displace the buoyant fortitude which animates them now. Desertion, already a frightful evil, will become the order of the day. And who will arrest the deserter, when most of those at home are engaged in the common practice of setting the Government at defiance? Organized bands of deserters will patrol the country, burning, plundering, and robbing indiscriminately, and our armies, already too weak, must be still further depleted at the most imminent crisis of our cause, to keep the peace and protect the lives and property of our citizens at home. Must these evils be endured? Must the independence for which we are contending, the safety of the defenseless families of the men who have fallen in battle and of those who still confront the invader, be put in peril for the sake of conformity to the technicalities of the law of treason?

Having thus presented some of the threatening evils which exist, it remains to suggest the remedy. And in my judgment that is only to be found in the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. It is a sharp remedy, but a necessary one. It is a remedy plainly contemplated by the Constitution. All the powers of the Government, extraordinary as well as ordinary, are a sacred trust, to be faithfully executed whenever the public exigency may require. Recognizing the general obligation, we cannot escape from the duty in one case more than in another. And a suspension of the writ when demanded by the public safety is as much a duty as to levy taxes for the support of the Government. If the state of invasion declared by the Constitution to be a proper case for the exercise of this power does not exist in our country now, when can it ever be expected to arise? It is idle to appeal against it to the history of the old Union. That history contains no parallel case. England, whose reverence for the great bill of right is at least as strong as our own, and the stability of whose institutions is the admiration of the world, has repeatedly within the last hundred years resorted to this remedy when only threatened with invasion. It may occasion some clamor, but this will proceed chiefly from the men who have already been too long the active agents of evil. Loyal citizens will not feel danger, and the disloyal must be made to fear it. The very existence of extraordinary powers often renders their exercise unnecessary. To temporize with disloyalty in the midst of war is but to quicken it to the growth of treason. I therefore respectfully recommend that the privilege of the corpus be suspended.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,

Richmond, Va., February 3, 1864.

Hon. J. H. REAGAN,

Postmaster-General:

SIR: In compliance with my letter of the 29th ultimo,* I have the honor to communicate the result of the inquiry into the action of this Department on your letters of the 19th of October and 17th of November, 1863, and January 7, 1864.

The last, in regard to the complaint of the postmaster at Ivor of being turned out of his office, and its being appropriated to other uses by military authority, has been referred to the proper officers for inquiry and report and has not yet been returned.

*Not found.

The cases of Kinzer and Surface, arrested and returned to their regiment by order of General Buckner after their discharge from the military service of the Confederate States on writs of habeas corpus by Judge Fulton, of the Virginia bench, and which are the subject of your letter of the 17th of November, 1863, had been brought to the attention of the Department in the latter part of August by Hon. Waller R. Staples, had been investigated, and were under consideration when your letter was received.

That of the 19th of October was referred to the Conscript Bureau, the response from which is herewith inclosed.*

The questions presented by your two communications last referred to have received that consideration which their importance and the collision between the departments of the Government under our respective charge seem to demand.

The construction placed by this Department upon the exemption law approved on the 11th of October, 1862, of which the act approved April 14, 1863, entitled "An act to exempt contractors," &c., according to the rule for the construction of statutes, is to be deemed and taken as a part, was distinctly stated and promulgated by a general order published on the 3d day of November, 1862, in which it is expressly declared "that the exemption act will be construed prospectively, and does not authorize the discharge of any one enrolled or in the service prior to the 11th day of October, 1862."

This construction was sustained by the courts in various cases that were brought before them, and was approved by Congress when it passed the act approved on the 2d of April, 1863, providing for the acceptance of the resignations of such officers and the honorable discharge of such non-commissioned officers and privates as might be elected or appointed to certain legislative, judicial, and executive offices, the tenants of which were exempted by the act of October 11, 1862, from the military service.

This being the clear and well-settled rule and practice of this Department, the chief of the Contract Bureau of the Post-Office Department, on the 26th of May, 1863, in an official communication to the postmaster at Christiansburg, informing him that the Postmaster-General withheld his acceptance of a certain lowest offer to carry the mail "in view of the unreasonable rate," instructed him to re-advertise, and remarks: "You will not fail to commend to the attention of the contractor or of those who may be disposed to offer under the re-advertisement the facilities of the late exemption law," &c.

The postmaster, accordingly, in his re-advertisement offers as an inducement to low bids the promised exemption from military service on route No. 2561, the proposal of John Surface, at one-fourth of a cent per annum, and on route No. 2563, that of John C. Kinzer, at 1 cent per annum, were accepted. The postmaster wrote to the Postmaster-General about the discharge of these men, who were privates in Company E, Fifty-fourth Virginia Regiment. The chief of the Contract Bureau of the Post-Office Department replied that they were exempted, and it is understood the judge of the district court had so decided and discharged soldiers, who had become contractors on writs of habeas corpus.

This Department considers that it has just cause of complaint against the Post-Office Department for the course pursued in this and similar cases.

* Not found.

No application was made by these men to the military authorities for their discharge on account of these alleged contracts. But when the commanding officer of the regiment, being shown a letter stating that friends had obtained these contracts for them, offered to prepare and forward such application on with his approval, his offer was declined. Writs of habeas corpus were sued out and awarded by a judge of a circuit court of Virginia on the 20th day of July, returnable on the 5th of August, at Wytheville, and sent by him to be executed in the State of Tennessee, where the regiment was and had been since the 5th of April preceding, with an intimation to the officer that if he would surrender the men to the officer appointed to execute the writs his personal presence was unnecessary. In the traditional deference to judicial authority habitual to our people the officer surrendered the men, sending his objections to and protest against their discharge. Being brought before the judge, he entered orders discharging them from the military service of the Confederate States. General Buckner, learning the facts, believing that the court had no jurisdiction, and that the order was, therefore, of no effect, ordered their arrest and return to their regiment. It is perfectly clear that the judge had no jurisdiction when the writs were issued; that it was an unjustifiable exercise of judicial prerogative in another State, and that the commanding officer of the regiment erred in surrendering the men to the officer of the court. But when they appeared before the judge within his circuit the jurisdiction attached; and however erroneous his decision may be deemed, it will be accepted by this Department, as has been done in the cases decided by Judge Halyburton, as the law of the case, and the men will be discharged from the custody of their officers.

But while thus recognizing such decision as made, this Department does not feel bound by the principle on which the judgment is based as to apply it to similar cases. It is satisfied that the construction placed by it on the exemption law is the true and proper construction, and is in accordance with the intention of the law-makers, and it insists that by every rule of reason and usage the settled construction given by an Executive Department of the Government to an act of Congress for its action is entitled to more consideration and weight of authority than an exposition by a subordinate judicial tribunal.

The views of this Department on this question of construction have been given fully in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives during the present session; and unless Congress shall otherwise direct, these views will continue, as heretofore, to be its rule of action.

Without restating any of these views, I will add the further suggestion that Congress, by its passage of the act of April 2, 1863, has thrown additional light upon its intention and the proper construction of the exemption act composed of the statutes of October 11, 1862, and April 14, 1863, in this, that it only provides for discharging from the military service those who may be called on to fill certain legislative, judicial, and executive offices, to perform certain public trusts, which the law in theory does not recognize as either to be sought or declined by the citizen, and has expressly left out of its provisions the large classes that were exempted because of benefits which would accrue to the public interests. The distinction is very plain and significant.

The obligation to the State of those who are in the military service, whether by voluntary enlistment or conscription, whether actually serving with the army in the field or only enrolled for such service, was complete and perfect, and could not be loosened or removed by their own action.

When called, according to the mode prescribed by the Constitution and laws, to fill public office, the duties of which were incompatible with the duties imposed by the military obligation, it was a question to be determined by Congress which class of obligations was to be deemed of the higher importance to the public weal. It was no question of release from the service of the country, or of privilege to be awarded to an individual, but simply the decision as to which of two conflicting classes of public duties which the citizen was required to perform should be preferred.

Laws exempting from military service provide that certain classes of individuals liable to the performance of military duties, if called on—and such liability is only inchoate until the call is made—shall not be called on to perform those duties; but there is no provision of law by which a citizen whose debt of military service to the public has been perfected by the demand for its performance can discharge himself from his obligation by his own act. It would be strange and anomalous if there were.

A contract with the Post-Office Department to carry the mails would be such voluntary act of the individual. Nor would the fact that the contract was made with a department of the Government make it the less his mere voluntary act—the really relieving himself from his superior obligation—than would be his contracting with such mail contractor to drive a post coach or hack for carrying the mails; or his contracting for service with a railroad or canal company, or with the editor of a newspaper, or to be employed by any contractor with the Government, or the bringing himself by any means within any other of the large classes that are by the same act declared to be exempt. The law applies to all equally.

The plain result is that no one whose application has thus become perfect has the right or power to complete a contract which is incompatible with his prior superior obligation. He is not, as to such, capable of contracting. It is therefore insisted that the contracts made by the Post-Office Department with those persons actually in the military service or enrolled for such service, made without the consent of this Department, are not sufficient according to law to release the parties from the claim of this Department, acting as the agent of the public, to whom the service is due. And in the performance of my duty to maintain the Army in the most effective condition, now so imperatively called for by the present emergency, I am constrained to request that you will abrogate all these contracts when the parties have been discharged from the military service on writs of habeas corpus, in order that they may be reclaimed by the military authorities.

The extent to which the army in the field may be weakened by those discharged on habeas corpus on account of having become contractors to carry the mails cannot be, it is presumed, very great, though three were discharged by Judge Halyburton in one day who had agreed to transport the mails on routes exceeding ten miles in length for the annual compensation of 1 mill, 1 cent, and 10 cents, respectively. But the principle of his decision applied to the other classes of exemption would fearfully diminish our ranks just at the time when urgent necessity requires every effort to enlarge them, and this consideration makes me the more earnest in resisting a construction of the law fraught with so much mischief.

In looking into the action of this Department on your communications I must admit and regret the fact, as I have already stated, that in consequence of the great press of business imperatively demanding immediate action the responses have not been so prompt as they should have been and as you had the right to expect. But, while it appears to be in fault from the failure to respond with sufficient promptness, I do not agree that there has been any just cause of complaint as to its action on the subject-matter of your communications; but, on the contrary, hold that its action has been in accordance with the law, the policy of the Government, and the necessities of the country.

With great respect, truly, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, February 3, 1864.

I. In the event of the loss of company records and the consequent inability of the commanding officers to certify therefrom the clothing accounts of soldiers, said accounts may be stated from memory, provided such statements are supported by the affidavits of the soldiers interested.

II. When, from the casualties of war, companies have been entirely deprived of their officers, in the adjustment of clothing accounts the affidavit of the soldier, together with those of two of his comrades, will be esteemed sufficient evidence to authorize a settlement with him if the statement shall be approved by the regimental commander.

III. Hereafter the articles of clothing issued during the year will be stated opposite the name of each soldier, upon the muster-roll of his company, at the annual settlement directed in General Orders, No. 100, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, December 8, 1862.

IV. The attention of company commanders is called to the requirements of the above-quoted general orders. By failing to account for clothing received by them for issue to their men they render themselves liable to be charged with its value, and a stoppage of their pay to the amount.

V. From and after the 1st of February, 1864, instead of supplying company commanders with clothing for their men, officers of the Quartermaster's Department will issue to the soldier upon the requisition of his immediate commanding officer.

VI. In making payments to soldiers upon descriptive lists, officers of the Quartermaster's Department will be careful to indorse thereon the amounts paid and the time for which they have been paid, returning the same to them for delivery to their company commanders and filing with their accounts a certified copy thereof.

UNOFFICIAL.]

ATLANTA, February 4, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have recently taken the liberty of attending several public meetings, which I have addressed on the subject of furnishing men and provisions for the Army. I have done so without interfering with my official duties, as I have only gone to such points as I could reach and return within two days.

From these interviews with the people I have learned some important and encouraging facts which I have thought would not be uninteresting to you. In the first place, I am satisfied that the supply of meat in the country is much beyond what I had supposed it would be. I could give you details, but it is unnecessary, to show even the best-informed citizens have been greatly at fault in estimating the quantity of meat that could be got in their immediate neighborhood.

The people need information as to the wants of the Army and the necessity of economy, sacrifices, and energy on their part. If they could be addressed in the right way in every county in the Confederacy, I have no doubt that provisions enough could be got to feed our whole Army, though we got no meat from abroad.

The members of Congress who have nothing else to do could render incalculable aid in this matter if they could be induced to make the right kind of addresses to the people. Better, though, that they should stay at Richmond doing nothing than to transfer to public meetings their wranglings and complainings. That is not what is wanted; we have enough of that without their assistance. The other important fact that I have learned is that our resources of men are far beyond what I had supposed.

In illustration of this fact let me mention some statements made to me. You are aware that under the militia law of the last Legislature the Governor was directed to enroll all our men between sixteen and sixty who are not subject to conscription or in the Confederate service. In one county the State enrolling officer says that his rolls will show that there are more men now in the county between the ages of eighteen and forty-five than have been sent from the county to the war, though the county has done as well as other counties in the State. I could not believe the statement, but he insists it is so, and refers to the details, the mechanics, exempts of all kinds, and counts up large numbers certainly. In another county the State enrolling officer (who I know very well) informed me that he had enrolled 900 men (not including three companies of Georgia State Guard), and that one-half of them were fit for any military service and another fourth fit for local duty. In another district, including three counties, the enrolling officer has now on his rolls over 2,000 men.

I give you these facts as interesting and encouraging evidence of the great resources of our country. It only requires to be brought out, and the best mode of doing it is the great question of the hour. Much—very much—can be done in the way I have suggested if the men capable of arousing the people can be induced to undertake the work.

I regret that I differ so widely from the policy you have determined upon for filling up the Army, but it will not affect my conduct. I shall labor as hard to carry it out as I should have done to carry out my own policy. I must repeat, however, that I think it was a fatal mistake not to allow the formation of new organizations. If that policy had been adopted I believe I could have raised an army in Georgia of 10,000 men. As it is, you will get not one-fifth that number, and them of dissatisfied and discontented men.

It is, however, now too late, and my duty and pleasure will be to labor the more earnestly to overcome difficulties and aid in filling up the Army.

With sentiments of sincere regard, your friend,

HOWELL COBB.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 4, 1864.

General E. K. SMITH:

GENERAL: This will be handed you by Judge L. W. Hastings, late of California, who has received from the President a commission as major to raise troops in Arizona, and been authorized to proceed in the execution of the plan for the recruitment of troops in California or Arizona, and the occupation of the latter as far as practicable, which was referred by you to the consideration of the Department.* It is not contemplated to expend in the scheme a larger sum of money than can be conveniently raised by the exportation of some few hundred bales of cotton into Mexico, which will be managed by Major Hart or some other officer you may intrust with the duty. With the proceeds, which should be enough to furnish Major Hastings with some $10,000 or $12,000 in specie funds, and likewise to forward from the port in Mexico the recruits who may be induced to engage in the enterprise to some rendezvous in Arizona, Major Hastings and a disbursing officer, to be selected by yourself, will go to the selected port. There the disbursing officer will remain on some plausible pretext, while Major Hastings will proceed to California. He is confident of his ability to engage 500 or more men, ostensibly as miners, to come out, armed and equipped at their own expense, and to report to the officer left in Mexico, on the pledge that they will be paid for their arms and equipments and forwarded to the point of rendezvous. They should, of course, preserve throughout the character of a mining association and be careful to do no act violative of neutrality with Mexico, or to so muster and collect as to raise the suspicions of the emissaries of the enemy who may be in Mexico. When assembled in sufficient numbers they will proceed to Arizona and commence their operations for the seizure and occupation of the country. It would be well if men were procured freely from California that some able and enterprising officer of superior rank to Major Hastings should be selected and sent by you to command the expedition. Meantime, when men begin to come in from California so as to afford a reasonable prospect of success, a selected few of them, or some other special agents acquainted with Arizona, should be sent forward into that Territory to engage co-operation and prepare the friends of the South for action at the proper time. I must rely on you to select the proper assistants and officers in this matter, or to commit it to some officer on whom you can rely. I should be pleased if a gentleman of the known character and spirit of Judge Terry would undertake its guidance. While the loyalty and general intelligence of Major Hastings are appreciated, it is felt that he has little military experience, and is rather to be relied on to recruit and get men from California than to conduct and execute the whole plan.

You will give to Major Hastings full instructions as to his course of procedure. I cannot well do so without knowing how far you can command means and may deem it advisable to unite others with him in the performance of his proposed duties. Well conducted, I believe the plan expedient and feasible, but much must depend on the discretion, intelligence, and enterprise of the selected agent.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 5, 1864.

His Excellency M. L. BONHAM,
Governor of South Carolina, Columbia, S. C.:

SIR: I have received Your Excellency's letters of the 19th of December and 27th of January last, inclosing a resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina requesting the Confederate authorities "to forego the right heretofore exercised of shipping cotton and bringing freight on the boats owned by the Importing and Exporting Company of South Carolina, in consequence of the ownership by the State of a part of those boats."

In reply I have the honor to say that a response to the letter of December 19 was delayed because the regulation of the exportation of cotton and other products was understood to be under the consideration of Congress, and it was believed in a brief period legislation would be adopted which would control the whole subject, and either dispense with the necessity of any arrangement on the part of the State or express the conditions on which such arrangements should be made. An act, it is believed, has received the assent, in its main features, of both houses, but has not yet been so passed as to become law. So soon as its terms are announced some definite understanding can be had with you on behalf of your State. Meantime, as I explained to Mr. Furman, there is every disposition on my part to meet the wishes of your State, and that any vessel engaged by the State and carrying out for it the amount of cotton required by others to be carried out for the Department would not be interfered with or restrained.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

AN ACT to prohibit the importation of luxuries, or of articles not necessities or of common use.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That from and after the first day of March next it shall not be lawful to import into the Confederate States any brandy, wines, or other spirits, or any other article specified in Schedule A of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue from commodities imported from foreign countries," approved May twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, or any goods, wares, or merchandise enumerated in Schedule B of said act, except the following articles: All things for medicinal purposes, camphor refined, pickles, molasses, pepper, pimento, cloves, nutmegs, cinnamon, and all other spices; soap, castile, Windsor, and all other toilet soaps; sugar of all kinds; syrup of sugar; galloons, laces, knots, stars, tassels, tresses and wings of gold and silver, or imitations thereof, intended for uniforms of officers in the military or naval service.

SEC. 2. And it shall not be lawful to import the following articles, enumerated in Schedule C of said act: Beer, ale, and porter; muffs and tippets, and all other manufactures of fur, or of which fur shall be a component part, except caps and hats; carpets, carpetings, hearth rugs, bedsides and other portions of carpeting of any kind or description; carriages and parts of carriages; cider and other beverages not containing alcohol; clocks and parts of clocks; cotton laces, cotton insertings, cotton trimmings, or laces of thread or other material; coral, manufactured; dolls and toys of all kinds; firecrackers, skyrockets, Roman candles and all similar articles used in pyrotechnics; furniture, cabinet and household; glass, colored, stained or painted; India matting of all sorts; jet and manufactures of jet, and imitations thereof; jewelry, or imitations thereof; manufactures and articles of marble, marble paving tiles, slabs or blocks, and all other marble; matting, China or other floor matting and mats made of flags, jute or grass; paper hangings, paper for walls, and paper for screens or fireboards; paving and roofing tiles and bricks, and roofing slates and firebricks; thread lacings and insertings; velvets of all kinds.

SEC. 3. And it shall not be lawful to import the following articles enumerated in Schedule D of said act: Angora, Thibet and other goats' hair, or mohair, unmanufactured; bananas, cocoanuts, plantains and oranges; cabinets of coins, medals, gems and collections of antiquities; diamonds, mosaics, gems, pearls, rubies, and other precious stones and imitations thereof, set in gold or silver or other metals; engravings bound or unbound; rattans and reeds; paintings and statuary; leaf and unmanufactured tobacco and cigars; or the following articles enumerated in Schedule E: Diamonds, cameos, mosaics, pearls, gems, rubies, and other precious stones and imitations thereof, when not set.

SEC. 4. None of the manufactures of metal, designed as either household or personal ornaments, shall be admitted; and in order to confine importations to articles of necessity and of common use, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe the maximum foreign prices at which and within which importations of goods manufactured wholly or partly of cotton, flax, wool, or of silk, and designed for wearing apparel, and not herein prohibited, may be made, and beyond which importations thereof shall not be made: Provided, That articles herein allowed to be imported shall not be impressed by the Government or its agents after they have reached the Confederate States: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit any importation for the use or account of the Confederate States, or either of them: Provided further, That this act shall not apply to any article or articles which have been or shall be shipped without knowledge of the passage of this act, before the first day of March next, but which shall arrive in a Confederate port after that day.

SEC. 5. That whenever any article or articles, the importation of which is prohibited by this act, shall, after the first day of March next, be imported into the Confederate States contrary to the true intent and meaning of this act, or shall, after said first day of March next, be put on board any ship or vessel, boat, raft or carriage, with the intention of importing the same into the Confederate States, all such articles, as well as all other articles on board the same ship or vessel, boat, raft or carriage, belonging to the owner of such prohibited articles, shall be forfeited, and the owner thereof shall, moreover, forfeit and pay double the value of such articles.

SEC. 6. If any article or articles, the importation of which is prohibited by this act shall, nevertheless, be on board any ship or vessel, boat, raft or carriage, arriving after said first day of March next in the Confederate States, and shall be omitted in the manifest, report or entry of the master, or the person having the charge or command of such ship or vessel, boat, raft or carriage, or shall be omitted in the entry of the goods owned by the owner, or consigned to the consignee of such articles, or shall be imported or landed, or attempted to be imported or landed, without a permit, the same penalties, fines and forfeitures shall be incurred, and may be recovered as in the case of similar omission or omissions, landing, importation, or attempt to land or import, in relation to articles liable to duties on their importation into the Confederate States.

SEC. 7. Every collector, naval officer, surveyor, or other officer of the customs shall have the like power and authority to seize goods, wares, and merchandise imported contrary to the intent and meaning of this act, to keep the same in custody until it shall have been ascertained whether the same have been forfeited or not, and to enter any ship or vessel, dwelling-house, store, building or other place, for the purpose of searching for and seizing any such goods, wares and merchandise which he or they now have by law, in relation to goods, wares and merchandise, subject to duty; and if any person or persons shall conceal or buy any goods, wares or merchandise, knowing them to be liable to seizure by this act, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum double the amount or value of the goods, wares and merchandise so concealed or purchased.

SEC. 8. The following additional oath or affirmation shall be taken by masters or persons having charge or command of any ship or vessel arriving at any port of the Confederate States after said first day of March next, viz: "I further swear (or affirm) that there are not, to the best of my knowledge and belief, on board (insert the denomination and name of the vessel) any goods, wares or merchandise, the importation of which into the Confederate States is prohibited by law; and I do further swear (or affirm) that if I shall hereafter discover or know of any such goods, wares or merchandise on board of the said vessel, or which shall have been imported in the same, I will immediately, and without delay, make due report thereof to the collector of the port of this district."

SEC. 9. After said first day of March next, importers, consignees or agents, at the time of entering goods into the Confederate States, shall take the following additional oath, viz: "I also swear (or affirm) that there are not, to the best of my knowledge and belief, amongst the said goods, wares or merchandise, imported or consigned as aforesaid, any goods, wares or merchandise, the importation of which into the Confederate States is prohibited by law; and I do further swear (or affirm) that if I shall hereafter discover any such goods, wares or merchandise, among the said goods, wares and merchandise imported or consigned as aforesaid, I will immediately and without delay report the same to the collector of this district."

SEC. 10. All penalties and forfeitures arising under this act, may be sued for and recovered, and shall be distributed and accounted for, in the manner prescribed by the act entitled "An act to regulate the collection of the duties on imports and tonnage;" and such penalties and forfeitures may be examined, mitigated or remitted, in like manner and under the like conditions, regulations, and restrictions as are prescribed, authorized and directed, by the act entitled "An act to provide for mitigating or remitting the forfeitures, penalties and disabilities accruing in certain cases therein mentioned."

SEC. 11. That this act shall expire on the day of the ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States.

Approved February 6, 1864.

A BILL to impose regulations upon the foreign commerce of the Confederate States to provide for the public defense.

Whereas, the Confederate States are engaged in a war, upon the successful issue of which depend the integrity of their social system, the form of their civilization, the security of life and property within their limits, as well as their existence as sovereign and independent States; and whereas, the condition of the contest demands that they should call into requisition whatever resources of men and money they have, for the support of their cause and to faithfully administer the same: Therefore, as a part of the system of the public defense—

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the exportation of cotton, tobacco, military and naval stores, sugar, molasses and rice from the Confederate States, and from all places in the occupation of their troops, is prohibited, except under such uniform regulations as shall be made by the President of the Confederate States.

SEC. 2. That if any person or persons shall put, place or load, on board any ship, steam-boat, or vessel, or any other water craft, or into any wagon, cart, carriage, or other vehicle, for conveyance or transportation beyond the Confederate States, or into any portion of the said States occupied by the enemy, any of the articles mentioned in the first section of this act, or shall collect the same for the purpose of being conveyed or transported, contrary to the prohibition aforesaid, within the Confederate States or beyond them, the said articles, and the ship, boat, or other water craft, wagon, cart, carriage, or other vehicle, with the slaves and animals that may be employed or collected for the purpose of aiding therein, shall be forfeited, and all persons, their aiders and abettors, on conviction of being interested or concerned in the enterprise, shall be deemed to be guilty of a high misdemeanor, and punishable by such fine or imprisonment, or both, as the court may impose.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful to put on board any ship, boat, vessel or other water craft, or upon any wagon, cart, carriage, or other vehicle, for transportation or conveyance as aforesaid, any of the articles aforesaid, unless a permit be previously obtained from some officer of the Confederate States, specially authorized to grant the same, particularly describing the articles thus to be laden, and the ship, boat, vessel, water craft, wagon, carriage, cart, or other vehicle, on which the same is to be transported, and until bond shall be given that the same shall be conveyed and transported to the place of destination, under such conditions and regulations, and for such objects as shall be prescribed by the President under the first section of this act.

SEC. 4. That the collectors of all the districts of the Confederate States, and such other officers as may be designated by the President of the Confederate States, shall have power and authority to take into their custody any of the articles before mentioned found on any ship, boat, or other water craft, when there is reason to believe that they are intended for exportation, or when in vessels, carts, or wagons, or any other carriage or vehicle whatsoever, or, in any manner, apparently on their way towards the territories of a foreign nation, or towards the territory of the Confederate States in the occupancy of the United States, or the vicinity thereof, or towards a place whence such articles are intended to be exported, and not to permit the same to be removed until bond shall be given, with satisfactory sureties, that no violation of this act, and the regulations under the same, is intended.

SEC. 5. That the powers granted by this act to the revenue or other officers of the Confederate States under this act to allow or refuse exportation of the articles before mentioned, or for the seizure or detention of any of the said articles, shall be exercised in conformity with such instructions as the President may give through the Departments of War and of the Treasury, which instructions may impose conditions to the destination and sale of the same, and the investment of the proceeds of the same, or a portion thereof, in military or other supplies for the public service, which instructions such officers shall be bound to obey; and if any action or suit shall be brought against any such officer or officers, or their agents, he or they may plead the general issue, and upon proof of a compliance with the provisions of this act, or of the regulations and instructions of the President, he or they shall be absolved from all responsibility therefor; and any person aggrieved by any of the acts of any of the officers or agents aforesaid, may file his petition before the district court of the district in which such officer or agent resides, and after due notice to him, and to the district attorney, the said court may proceed summarily to hear and determine thereupon as law and justice may require, and the judgment of the said court, and the reasons therefor, shall be filed among the records of the court. And in case any release shall be granted, the judge may impose such conditions as to giving bond and security as may, in his opinion, be necessary to secure this act from violation, and in case of refusal, may impose double or treble costs upon the petitioner, if the circumstances warrant it: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the Confederate States, or any of them, from exporting any of the articles herein enumerated, on their own account.

SEC. 6. That exclusive jurisdiction is conferred upon the district courts of the Confederate States, of all suits or actions that may arise under this act in behalf of the Confederate States, its officers and agents, for the recovery of all fines, penalties and forfeitures, imposed in the same, by indictment, information or action, according to the practice of the court, and the distribution of the penalties and fines shall be made, under and according to the laws now in force for violation of the revenue acts; and all laws for the mitigation and remittance of penalties and forfeitures shall be applied in similar cases.

SEC. 7. That it shall be lawful for the President, or such officers as he may designate, to employ any portion of the military or naval forces of the Confederacy, or of the militia, to prevent the illegal departure of any ship, vessel or other water craft, or for detaining, taking possession of, and keeping in custody the same, or any wagon, cart, or other vehicle hereinbefore mentioned, their teams and drivers, and their products aforesaid, and to suppress and disperse any assembly of persons who may resist the execution of this act, or oppose the fulfillment, by the officers, of the duties imposed by the same.

SEC. 8. That this act shall expire on the day of the ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States.

Approved February 6, 1864.

AN ACT to prohibit dealing in the paper currency of the enemy.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That no broker, banker, or dealer in exchange, or person concerned in trade as a merchant, or vender of merchandise of any description, or any other person, except within the lines of the enemy, shall buy, sell, take, circulate, or in any manner trade in any paper currency of the United States: Provided, That the purchase of postage stamps shall not be considered a violation of this act.

SEC. 2. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall be subject to indictment and prosecution in the Confederate court holden for the district in which the offense was committed, and shall, upon conviction, forfeit the amount so bought, sold, circulated or used, or a sum equal thereto; and shall be, moreover, subject to a fine of not more than twenty thousand dollars nor less than five hundred, and be imprisoned not less than three months, nor more than three years, at the discretion of said court; and it shall be the duty of the judges of the several Confederate courts to give this act specially in charge to the grand jury.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not be construed to apply to any person acting in behalf of the Government of the Confederate States, by special authority from the President, or any of the heads of departments.

Approved February 6, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

I have the honor to say, in reply to the communication of His Excellency the Governor of Florida,* relating to arms, which was referred to this Bureau for attention, that on the 5th of September, 1863, an order was made on the Augusta Arsenal for 2,000 Austrian rifles and 100,000 rounds of ammunition, to be forwarded to the Columbus Arsenal for issue to General H. Cobb. At the same time by my direction a letter was written to Major Humphreys, commanding the Columbus Arsenal, requesting him to issue the arms sent to his arsenal on requisition approved by General Cobb, as "the President thinks it better that these arms should be issued through General Cobb, rather than Governor Milton." In regard to the wipers, they could have been supplied at any time upon requisition. On the 1st of February a requisition from Maj. G. W. Scott, commanding the Fifth Florida Battalion Cavalry, approved by Governor Milton and the commanding general of the department, was referred to Major Humphreys, commanding C. S. arsenal, Columbus, with instructions to supply the cavalry equipments. Orders were also made on the Richmond and Macon Arsenals to furnish all the musketoons on hand, which will number 300 or upward.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

GENERAL ORDERS, {	ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 16. }	Richmond, February 6, 1864.

I. The Bureau of Conscription affords adequate means for bringing into service persons liable to military duty; and all authorities given prior to December 1, 1863, to raise troops from men not within the lines of the enemy, or to recruit for any particular command in the field, are hereby revoked.

II. Recruits enlisted by authority for new companies which have not at this time seventy-two non-commissioned officers and privates actually mustered upon the rolls will be turned over to the Bureau of Conscription and allowed to select any infantry company they may prefer, under the provisions of paragraph II, General Orders, No. 7, 1864.

III. Persons acting under authorities to enlist men for new companies, either without or within the lines of the enemy, granted since 1st of December, 1863, will at once report to the commanding general of the department in which they may be copies of such authority, with a statement of the number of men enrolled by them; and without further authorization from such commanders, their power will expire at the end of thirty days from the date of this order.

IV. The preceding orders are not intended to have any effect in the Trans-Mississippi Department.

V. Commandants of posts and officers of the Conscription Bureau will enforce this order.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: The present decision of the Department on the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 16, 1862, section 10, seems to be that an officer or private can only be promoted for valor and skill to a vacancy in his own company. This limits the promotions for valor and skill to such an extent that it renders the law almost a dead letter. I would earnestly recommend that if this is the true interpretation of the law that it be modified so as to permit promotions on this account to any company or regiment from the same State, or at least to any company in the regiment to which the private or officer belongs. It is very important to increase the number of these promotions and to render them more certain. In the coming campaign we should use every incentive to acts of daring and skillful and brave conduct on the part of officers and men.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BUREAU OF SUBSISTENCE,
February 8, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: The letters of Messrs. Isaac Shelby and Charles F. Johnson, dated 22d of January, in which they propose to exchange meat for cotton, referred by you to Colonel Northrop for "consideration and report" and by him to me, has been considered. For reasons which will appear in the sequel I submit the report directly to you, a fact known to and approved by Colonel Northrop. I have made so many reports in such cases that it is unnecessary to repeat them here further than to say this, that I would never hesitate to make such contracts whenever they can be arranged so as not to conflict with others of the same sort, or with a different policy.

But I should be derelict in my duty as a citizen if I failed to urge your attention to another class of considerations growing out of such proposals. They are more particularly the result of reflections growing out of a contract which I recently made under your orders with Mr. Beverly Tucker. The present time seems propitious for the commencement of negotiations with one or more of the factions or parties in the United States with a view to give us an influence upon their affairs. The granting or apparent granting of a contract for various army supplies, wide enough in its scope to embrace many interests and large enough to tempt cupidity or venality, appears to be the best cover to approaches for that purpose, and a liberal compensation in cotton offers to them the most tempting as to us the cheapest and most available medium of payment. It is true that a good many contracts looking to the mere procurement of supplies in limited quantities through the blockade have been made with various parties and that none of them have obtained provisions; but, in my judgment, this has been because all these contracts have been limited in amount and distributed among many individuals. Had they been wider, larger, and more concentrated, I think the result would have been very different. If they can be now made and connected with diplomatic movements judiciously conducted I am sanguine that they will not fail of a happy and probably an altogether successful issue.

Watching the expression of opinion on both sides in this war, I have been surprised at the absence of all speculation as to its ulterior effects upon the parties. We look merely to our own unhappy condition in the event of subjugation; they contemplate only emancipation, confiscation, and extermination. To my mind certain fixed consequences of great moment are suggested beyond these.

The first is the depopulation of the Northern and Eastern States. Slavery once destroyed, actually or in near prospect, that result is inevitable. Their soldiers alone, with their families and dependents, amounting to 2,000,000 or 3,000,000, would take instant possession of their share of the spoils and the rest would follow at no great distance; for if the Northwest, with its rich soil but inhospitable climate, remoteness from market, and all the disadvantages of newness, can draw annual swarms of immigrants, who can resist the climate, soil, and productiveness of the South? And when the labor is transferred what shall prevent this most mechanical people from placing with all convenient speed their mills and workshops in juxtaposition to products which are now transported to them over wide spaces?

But all this must produce violent present dislocation and probable future dismemberment. Instant stability cannot follow such changes nor be established, if ever, until long years after this generation shall have passed away. Northern capital will have been stranded by the ebb of the labor on which it floats, and a sweeping confiscation at the South will have operated not only a sure destruction of present industry, but a bar to the success of its substitute. The spirit of the South will have been banished or extirpated, and even the dregs that remain will ferment in ceaseless irritation.

On either flank, in Canada and in Mexico, hordes of desperate refugees will hover and perpetually stimulate England and France to war in coalition against a power overgrown, flushed with conquest, and arrogant from success. Nor will the task of persuasion be arduous as against a western rival whose democratic principles and Russian sympathies do really appear to threaten civilization with both alternatives of Napoleon's prediction, and to make Europe "Cossack and republican" in less than his "sixty years." That influences of this kind, fostered by apprehension on the one hand, provoked by intemperance on the other, may be successfully applied is plain to all who know the part, either open or secret, that was played by French refugees in the politics of Europe during the wars of the French Revolution, or who recollect that all those wars were based and prosecuted on conservative grounds. They will be assisted also by internal dissensions. The difficulties and conflicts that must come from exterminating the negro, which upon this continent is the only mode of exterminating slavery, will combine with the discontent of the Southern pariah and the extravagances of labor uncontrolled by capital to protract and intensify the double exhaustion incident to emigration and change of system.

And finally, the restrictions on trade, which are a necessary feature of Yankee polity, and by which they will endeavor, as heretofore, to cripple or tributize the industry of all but themselves, must make them enemies of all who are or would become their rivals in trade.

It is not too much to declare that England and France, not less in self-defense than in a spirit of aggrandizement, will be compelled to dismember the United States if we shall fail to do so. The temptation to do it, at least to the extent of her Pacific territory, is fairly irresistible. That, at least, they can part between themselves, or establish as a protectorate and thus destroy the most formidable competitor for that Asiatic trade which has been for centuries the goal of nations.

If these views are sound I should think it not difficult to impress them upon the North with the force of conviction. After that it might be easy to go further and persuade them to think, what is indeed very true, that if we succeed the only means to prevent injury to themselves will be the continuance and even the enlargement of slavery. That alone is the barrier to the drain of wealth and labor, which upon the dismemberment of the Union will else precipitate itself upon our organized society.

The present seems to be the proper time for the commencement of negotiations for other reasons. I have never doubted the sympathy of Napoleon with our struggle. I have had a private reason for it, and have concluded that he only wanted a proper opportunity to manifest it. Now his interests and ours approach more nearly every day. They must become identical if Mexico is ruled by Maximilian. The decision of that question approaches. If we are recognized and the United States shall resent it, she has a war on hand with two powers when she has proven herself at least not more than equal to one. If she shall not resent it, then, a fortiori, she will not resent our recognition by stronger powers, and our revolution will have been accomplished. The intervening period, one of doubt to them at least, if not to us, is critical, and we should improve it. If we can attain our object before or without intervention or recognition, our prestige will be by so much the greater, not less if we can use the apprehension of it to the same end.

The political condition of the United States is now favorable for diplomacy. There are now there four parties, actually or in embryo—the Abolition, the Military, the Democratic, and the Conservative.

Ahead of them all in violence of action and audacity of speculation are the Abolitionists. The Democrats and Conservatives must view them with dislike and distrust. With scarcely more favor will they contemplate the probable ascendancy of military interlopers, who, with as much selfishness as professed politicians and less knowledge of or respect for political principles, are likely to consult only what their instincts as adventurers shall indicate as their personal interests.

Personal ambition, not less than an apprehension of such consequences as I have rapidly sketched, will stimulate the Conservatives and the Democrats to resist men whose success will not only bring personal defeat to themselves, but the disasters of innovation upon the country. But to take and hold their ground against these agitators and adventurers they must have money. Men they will then get in abundance. I make here no account of Yankee venality. But when I see all men at the North refusing to volunteer (except a part of those who are already in arms), and using every device to avoid a draft which may yet include them, I know that a large majority must be peace men at heart, and only want a proper organization to range themselves openly in a peace party of such extent and power as will demoralize the Army and paralyze Mr. Lincoln.

But money is usually necessary to political organizations. It is always necessary at the North. Now especially they must have it in sums sufficient to counteract what jobbers and army contractors can spare from their large gains to subsidize editors and leaders of the war and Abolition parties.

Possibly the speculations I have advanced will not find a lodgment in the minds of the North, who, whether as statesmen or citizens, may not look quite so far ahead. If so, we lack not the means of appealing to their love of money, power, and material advancement. The accumulation of cotton and cotton fabrics, which has hitherto enabled the world to stand aloof from this war, is now nearly exhausted. As was to have been expected, the dearth of cotton has not been compensated by increased Eastern production; for what it has cost us nearly a century of steady industry to reach could not be arrived at by mere price in three years, especially in a country like India. Cotton now sells for about six times its average peace price in gold. The articles for which we would barter it do not in any item exceed twice their peace prices; and if they reach so much it is only because of the inflation of Federal currency. To the Northern operator who can pay for cotton in exports it must be very valuable. Gold is really getting scarce with them because it is getting scarce in England; scarce there because gold now goes to India to buy cotton, but does not return; it is buried there. Hence the rise of interest in the Bank of England. But formerly she used to purchase cotton with exports mainly sent to us. The advantage of such mode of payment is now six times as great as it used to be. This is the true measure of the amount of subsidy that can be offered in money value. It cannot be had as cheaply by arms; still other inducements can be held out, among them a liberal commercial treaty.

To the West upon condition of severance from the United States still greater attractions may be offered. All the above, free trade with the Lower Mississippi and its tributaries, and to the whole, or a part of them, the prospect, not remote, of an incorporation into the Southern Confederacy upon the basis of slavery. The purchase of their officers, both civil and military, and of all grades, is not difficult, if what I hear be true. And under sufficient instigation their armies can be split and demoralized. A simple resolution in the platform of a strong party in favor of pensioning those and only those who shall have served a given length upon a modicum of land in the Northwest would shake their army to pieces; or such other devices as themselves might conceive would do that work.

But I decline to follow a subject so fruitful in diplomatic themes. Our own condition would seem to require the effort. I have good reason to think that the spirit of Congress as a whole is not heroic, and reverses in the spring may cause more defection than is now anticipated. North Carolina, better indeed than she is reported, is yet in an unsatisfactory condition. There certainly is not meat enough in our limits to feed both army and people at half their customary rates, and starvation is the parent of mutiny and discontent. The corn for General Lee's army is now mainly obtained from beyond the limits of Virginia, and nearly all his subsistence depends upon the integrity of the road from Weldon to Petersburg.

These things and many more that are too well known to you for recital, are potent persuasives to ward off by diplomacy blows which may not be averted by battle; which may indeed be struck in the dark by traitors bought with Federal gold.

It may have been chivalrous in the commencement of this war to decline the use of means which all the time the enemy have successfully employed against us; means by which, I believe, they gained Kentucky and wrenched Missouri from us; means by which I am certain they are now trying to detach North Carolina through the intimacy that has always existed between Mr. Holden and Governor Johnson, of Tennessee, but to continue this dignified course any longer appears to me to be romantic. The character which the war has long since assumed justifies, in my judgment, a resort to much more questionable measures than I have suggested, which are in fact among the commonest expedients of hostilities.

I do not think it necessary to give herein the details of the plan I propose, which are necessarily imperfect and outlinear. I prefer in any case to leave them to other and abler hands. But if the above is approved to the extent that it shall be made ground of action, and you shall desire it, I will submit them hereafter for your consideration.

I trust I shall be pardoned for suggesting that if attempted the condition of our supplies and the political condition of the North demand speedy action.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK G. RUFFIN,

Lieutenant-Colonel and Commissary of Subsistence.

Richmond, February 8, 1864.

I. Paragraph VI, General Orders, No. 8, current series, is amended thus:

Commutation of rations, at $1 per diem, will be allowed paroled unexchanged prisoners on furlough. This order to take effect from the 1st of January, 1864. The officer paying the accounts will indorse on the furlough the date and length of time for which payment has been made.

II. Paragraph II, General Orders, No. 97, series 1862, is amended thus:

Officers and agents of the Quartermaster's Department are hereby ordered not to interfere with leather or hides purchased or contracted for by officers or agents of the Ordnance Department.

BUREAU OF SUBSISTENCE,
Richmond, February 8, 1864.

Col. L. B. NORTHROP,
Commissary-General:

COLONEL: I have to report the receipt of late services from Maj. W. H. Smith, commissary of subsistence, on inspection duty in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, in which encouraging accounts are given of the ability of the latter State to meet our wants fully with breadstuffs, and partially with meat, if the system inaugurated for supplying General Johnston's army be vigorously carried out, viz, drawing supplies from Northern Georgia and Alabama, and relieving Major Allen's district in Southwest Georgia, and if the required reforms in the management of railroad transportation are at once adopted. Major Smith cites numerous and flagrant abuses to which this important arm of the public defense has been and is constantly subjected, showing that the Government is deprived of many facilities by the cupidity of railroad companies and the corruption of agents and employes, who regard their personal interests as paramount to all other considerations. The official report of the Charlotte and South Carolina road exhibits the following statement of receipts: From the Confederate States, $336,603; private freight, $270,544; Southern Express Company, $186,281; the latter paying one-half as much as the Government, illustrating beyond dispute that the amount of transportation controlled by this company is greatly beyond what they are legitimately entitled to, and the additional fact is given that some twenty or thirty cars are owned by it at Augusta, which necessarily occasion interruption to more important trains. We are now dependent on the south for bread, yet under the most favorable circumstances, with existing arrangements, it is impossible to provide for the daily wants of General Lee's army and the troops in this State, to say nothing of the imperative necessity for creating a reserve in anticipation of the many emergencies likely to arise not only from movements of the enemy, but from accidents on a line of communication between 600 and 700 miles in length. To-day we have not on hand rations for two days, and with no prospect of accumulations in this State from purchases, &c., it is impossible to foresee how forward movements can be made by the Army of Northern Virginia in the spring if we continue to be pressed for the current demands, and no increase is made from the only source to which we can confidently look. With no efforts to improve our facilities of transportation, and whilst the present defective system continues, we must remain in a condition of uncertainty that sooner or later will culminate in disaster. We are apprised that thirty-five cars loaded with corn have remained at Gaston, N. C., one week, besides large quantities of other supplies at that place and Raleigh, owing to the derangement of the trains by military movements and by the failure of the Raleigh and Gaston road to run through to Petersburg, as suggested some time since to the chief of Railroad Bureau. That number of cars, thirty-five, in the time specified, would have moved nearly 14,000 bushels of corn, but because the convenience of the road is to a great extent consulted as in opposition to the urgent wants of the Government, we cannot anticipate that our condition will be in the slightest degree improved until summary, vigorous, and determined measures are enforced.

Major Sims informs me that the president of the Gaston road will commence running through trains from to-day until the block is removed. The demand on Major Allen's district from Major Cummings still continues heavy, interfering seriously with his ability to meet the wants of our army in Virginia. Under date of the 1st instant he writes as follows:

I shipped last week to Atlanta for General Johnston's command 16,200 bushels meal, 1,300 bushels peas, 89,000 pounds bacon, sides, 260 barrels molasses, and a quantity of pickled beef. I am shipping daily to him eight or ten car-loads. Let me be relieved from this command, &c., and I will supply Virginia abundantly.

The necessary instructions have been forwarded to Major Walker, chief commissary of Alabama, to render all the assistance possible to General Johnston's army, but the demands for transportation of coal and iron to Atlanta for the Navy Department seriously embarrasses operations; and as it seems impracticable to provide for the wants of both departments with such limited facilities, the wants of the most urgent and important should receive precedence, if not compel one to yield wholly to the other.

The suggestions of Major Smith relative to the employment of a part of the machinery and resources of the Navy Department for repairing and building rolling-stock, &c., are worthy of the earnest consideration of the proper authorities, for many locomotives, cars, &c., are now valueless because of the limited appliances at the command of railroad companies, and if even a portion be so employed, he is confident very great additions can be made to roads now greatly deficient in material, &c. As our existence as a nation is dependent upon the efficiency and preservation of the Army, I may be pardoned for expressing the opinion that every other branch of the public defense should be subservient to that upon which we can alone rely. For several months past I have repeatedly called your attention to the difficulties under which we labored in the collection of subsistence, owing to the defective management and limited resources of transportation, confidently anticipating that such action would be taken by the proper authorities as would be calculated to assist us in collecting requisite supplies for the troops in this State, but no relief has been afforded except through the special agents of this department, and then only of a temporary character, for as soon as they disappeared from the important shipping points the same difficulties would arise, and subsistence stores for days and weeks would be permitted to remain at stations and depots until railroad agents and others were favorable to their removal. Unless the most stringent regulations are adopted for the management of transportation, and the interests of the Government receive full and constant protection from the abuses practiced by those in charge, it would be idle to expect any improvement in our condition.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. FRENCH,

RICHMOND, February 8, 1864.

Respectfully referred to the Secretary of War.

From the beginning of the war I have steadily aimed at keeping up railroads to their utmost capacity; have made frequent attempts to have this most vital subject placed on a footing of improvement. In the summer of 1862 I proposed a man whose plan and capacity promised success. From the winter of 1862 I urged that vital necessity required that all other demands for transportation should be stopped until supplies were accumulated. From last summer to this period similar efforts have been made. Since Major French has been on duty in this Bureau his attention has been necessarily directed to this matter, which he has now ably presented. I earnestly commend his letter to your attention.

These papers are respectfully forwarded to the Secretary of War.

I cannot too earnestly call attention to the views and suggestions presented by Lieutenant-Colonel Sims.* Any agreement drawn from the condition of railroad transportation twelve months since must be fallacious, as the demands of the Government upon the railways have more than doubled in that time. Then corn was not transported from Georgia to forage the horses of General Lee's army. Then the Commissary Department did not call for corn to feed the troops of the same army, but wheat was relied on solely for that purpose. Then the same department did not attempt to transport meat from points far south to Virginia. Now the roads are expected to respond promptly to all these new demands without any additional assistance. Let any practical suggestion for improvement be suggested, and it will be promptly adopted.

Brig. Gen. A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General:

GENERAL: Accompanying this report I respectfully return a communication from the Bureau of Subsistence relative to defective transportation of supplies, in which Maj. W. H. Smith, commissary of subsistence, is quoted as saying that if the "required reforms in the management of railroad transportation are at once adopted" the supplies of subsistence, which are abundant in Georgia, will be carried to General Johnston's army. What the "required reforms" are Major Smith does not mention, and it will be therefore impossible for me to avail myself of their advantage. It shall be my earnest efforts to apply any practicable remedy that is suggested, and I shall seize with alacrity any plan promising relief, but until some feasible proposal is made I will be left to my own resources to manage this vexatious question. The charge of cupidity and corruption against railroad companies and of agents and employes who regard their personal interests as paramount to all other considerations is too vague to admit of investigation. Officers of the Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments are habitually and publicly charged as the railroad companies are in this communication, and a sense of the injustice we endure should create a charitable spirit. The Charlotte and South Carolina Railroad, however, is particularized as illustrating beyond question that the transportation of this company is beyond what it is legitimately entitled to, and the earnings of this company for last year are cited to prove that this road has done a large business for private parties. To answer this charge I would ask if this road has not performed promptly all the Government business offered it? If it has, then what possible objection can there be to its working for other parties?

It certainly is not the policy of the Government to confine railroads to Government work exclusively. It is to be hoped this is not one of the "required reforms." Last year, when the Government did not need within 50 per cent. of the supplies from Georgia that it is wanting now, a small surplus was accumulated in Richmond. The past twelve months has improved transportation but little, and it will be a cause of congratulation if the Army of Virginia has its daily wants constantly met. It is useless to hope for more, for such expectations will not be realized. Every effort is being made and will continue to do more than this; but I cannot blind myself to the truth, nor will I lead others to do so. The communication says, "With no efforts to improve transportation, and while the present defective system continues, we must remain in a condition of uncertainty that sooner or later will culminate in disaster." The writer is mistaken in supposing that no efforts are being made to improve this important branch of public service. Great efforts have been made, and with success. The writer is ignorant of the increased power now occupied between Augusta and Richmond over last year. Probably 15 locomotives and 200 freight cars are now working between those two points which were not there last year. Does this look as if no efforts were being made? The writer charges that thirty-five cars loaded with corn remained at Gaston one week. This is true, but what was the cause of it? General Pickett seized the trains of the Petersburg Railroad and carried them away to Kinston, causing a total stoppage of business on this road. Are such delays chargeable to transportation or the system under which it is conducted? The demands of the Navy Department may interfere with transportation, but are the claims of that Department to be ignored? No orders have reached me to that effect, and until they do I must continue as heretofore.

The suggestions relative to putting the naval works at Columbus and Charlotte at repairing railroad machinery was recommended to the Honorable Secretary of the Navy, but he did not view it favorably. If the business of transportation was confined to removal of commissary supplies, it would present no difficulty; but it really is less than one-third of the work. It is not at all unusual for persons to suppose that they can manage railroads with much more ability than those who have them in charge. It is still more unusual to find such professions supported by facts. The subject of transportation has had all of my attention, and there is but one way in which it can be improved, and that is by liberal details of machinists from the Army. Details for sixty days do but little good. They must go permanently into the workshops and have material to work with. I have asked for them and they are not granted. Every road has its shop and tools, but it has few workmen. You may work, and plan, and devise, and suggest, and at last you will come to this conclusion. The recent guaranty given by the Secretary of War to those [who] will go into the iron business will come to nothing, because the details asked for were not promised, and it is the same reason that has depreciated the rolling-stock of the country. I asked once for a detail of one mechanic for every ten miles of railroad in the Confederacy, but so preposterous, I suppose, was considered the demand that no answer was returned to me. I repeat it, transportation must continue to depreciate until the mechanics are detailed. It is a short-sighted, ruinous policy that looks to any other source for relief, and I entreat you, general, not to pass my suggestion by without consideration, and if you would have them substantiated by older and wiser heads I beg you to consult them. All I ask is, let them be practical railroad men. I am willing to do all that I can do, but to improve transportation without men and material is the requisition of the Egyptian taskmaster. Give me the men and you shall see advantages from them. Refuse and I can promise nothing.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SIMS,

JOINT RESOLUTIONS in relation to the further prosecution of the war.

Whereas, the United States continues to wage war against the Confederate States with ruthless barbarity and an utter disregard of the rules of civilized warfare; and whereas, the despot who wields with absolute power the destinies of that Government has manifested in all his messages and proclamations a malignant hatred of the people of the South, and a disposition to heap insult upon injury and outrage; and whereas, this course of conduct has strengthened us in our determination to maintain our separation from the Government and people of the North: Therefore—

First. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the barbarous manner in which our enemies have waged war against us deserves the execrations of all men, and has confirmed and strengthened us in the determination to oppose to the last extremity a reunion with them, and that the spirit of our people is unabated in the resolution to resist every attempt at their subjugation.

Second. Be it further resolved, &c., That relying upon the ability of our Chief Magistrate, the skill of our military leaders, the bravery of our soldiers, the heroic devotion of our women, the ardent patriotism of our men, and, above all, upon the justness of our cause, invoking the blessing of Almighty God upon our efforts, we confidently abide the result.

Third. Be it further resolved, &c., That in this hour of trial the State of Louisiana tenders to her Government and sister States her warmest sympathy and cordial co-operation; and she hereby declares her unfaltering determination to spare no expense of blood or treasure in defense of the Confederate States of America as a free and independent republic.

Fourth. Be it further resolved, &c., That His Excellency the Governor be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit copies of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and to the Governors of our sister States.

I. Applications from officers of the Niter and Mining Corps for field service cannot now be considered. Workmen employed by them may be organized and armed for local defense, but their military orders must be subordinated to work as the leading aim and consideration, and second in importance to no other military service.

II. A limit (not yet reached) to the number of able-bodied workmen to be assigned to this service—submitted by the chief of the Niter and Mining Bureau—has been carefully considered and approved, and communicated to the Bureau of Conscription as a guide for its action.

III. Military commanders will extend to the Niter and Mining Service, especially in districts exposed to the enemy, protection, aid, and encouragement.

IV. General Orders, No. 32, series 1863, forbids interference with the workmen or employés at mines, furnaces, or niter works, whether worked by the Government or contractors. These orders are now repeated, and especial attention is called to them.

ATLANTA, GA., January 25, 1864.

Capt. THOMAS PINCKNEY,
A. A. G., Bureau of Conscription, Richmond, Va.:

CAPTAIN: In the following estimate of the number of troops furnished by the different States I am aware that the plan I have adopted in some cases is open to objection, but when it is carefully considered I think it will be found that the errors to which it may be subject, in favor of a little greater or lesser result, will about cancel other considerations, and my conclusions practically correct.

The principal object being to obtain the resources of the State in the event of a modification of the present law, I have adopted the most direct method in each case to the attainment of this object, and when the means at my disposal admitted of it, have verified my calculations by others, based upon other statistics.

In my calculations for Alabama and Mississippi the limited data in my possession did not admit of it, and the results depend alone upon the estimates I have made under such circumstances.

The operations of the conscript department in those States do not enter into my calculations, because I could extract no reliable matter from the confused condition of the papers in Major Denis' office. In that office, under the superintendence of General Pillow, much of the details of the department were carried on without any record having been kept. Exemptions and details were granted or refused on the back of the applicant's letter and no memorandum made of it. The reports from the subordinate officers purporting to show the number of men put into the service (without uniformity), I was informed by the officers of that department, were probably incorrect, from the fact that the subordinate officers sometimes reported to General Pillow and at other times through their immediate commanders, which occasioned these officers to report the same conscripts frequently as the result of their individual operations. One case there was in which the same number of men was reported three times. Under such circumstances I was unwilling to use these calculations in my report.

I have officers in Alabama and Mississippi collecting rolls called for by circulars from the Bureau of Conscription, and I hope to be able to show from these rolls where material addition may be made to the Army without injury to the industrial pursuits of the country.

The final report from Georgia will be forwarded in a few days.

I have sent Lieut. N. A. James to Virginia to complete the work commenced there by him.

Very respectfully,
E. D. BLAKE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, C. S. Army, on Special Service.

VIRGINIA.

When it is considered that our Army has been recruited from the white males above fifteen years of age for the last three years, I can incur the danger of no material error in supposing that all the troops furnished by the State now belong to that class of the white male population comprised between the ages of eighteen and sixty years.

Before the operation of the conscript law Virginia had in the service—

63 regiments of infantry of about 800 men each .....	50,400
40 battalions of infantry of about 400 men each .....	16,000
20 regiments of cavalry of about 800 men each .....	16,000
40 battalions of cavalry of about 400 men each .....	16,000
125 batteries of artillery of about 100 men each .....	12,500
Making in all .....	110,900

These regiments, &c., were subsequently filled up by the operation of the conscript law as follows:

63 regiments of infantry of 1,000 men each .....	63,000
40 battalions of infantry of 500 men each .....	20,000
20 regiments of cavalry of 1,000 men each .....	20,000
40 battalions of cavalry of 500 men each .....	20,000
125 batteries of artillery of 125 men each .....	19,625
Making in all .....	142,625

This increase (31,725) was due to the operations of the conscript law, which put into the field—

1. Through the camp of instruction .....	5,551
2. Without passing through the camps .....	26,174
Total put into the field by conscription .....	31,725
Detailed and unassigned .....	6,757
Detailed in the departments .....	4,494
Total put in service by conscription .....	42,976
Total put into service by the State .....		153,876
Exempted by Medical Board .....	12,000
Exempted by occupation .....	13,063
Total exempted .....	25,063	25,063
Total disposed of by conscription .....	68,039
Total disposed of by volunteering and conscription .....		178,939

If the principals be supposed to occupy the places of their substitutes in the field, about nine-tenths of the whole number in the service will be included between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years. In Georgia I found this to be so nearly the case that it was adopted in my calculations, and the result verified by estimates based upon other statistics and by other modes of calculation.

In South Carolina I found the number between eighteen and forty-five years of age eight hundred and ninety-five one-thousandths of the whole number, or nine-tenths, nearly, and in Mississippi I believe the same proportion will obtain. Therefore, without having the means of making this calculation for Virginia, I think it would be safe to base my estimate upon this proportion, then: The whole number of troops in the service between the ages of eighteen and sixty years being 153,876, the number between eighteen and forty-five years of age would be 138,489, and the whole number disposed of from the State between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years would be  $138,489 + 25,063$  (the exempted) = 163,552.

The census tables show that the whole State should furnish 221,000 between eighteen and forty-five years of age; but from this number we should deduct one-fifth for the portion of the population not accessible to the operations of the conscript law by reason of the occupation of the country by the enemy and the disloyal character of part of its population. Under these circumstances the State should have furnished 176,800 men between eighteen and forty-five years of age instead of 163,552, the number actually got into the service. There remain, therefore, 13,248 men between eighteen and forty-five years of age to be accounted for. Of this number probably three-fourths are now in the portion of Virginia where the conscript law has been partially enforced, and where it is at present impossible to operate.

By making this allowance there remain of the available men between eighteen and forty-five years of age:

Remaining between 18 and 45.....	3,312
Those having substitutes (not included in the exemptions).....	15,000
Total .....	18,312

If the conscript law be extended to embrace men to fifty-five years of age, we shall have in the first place, according to census—

White males between 45 and 55 (36,465 less one-fifth) .....	29,172
White males between 55 and 60 (12,155 less one-fifth) .....	9,692

From these classes must be deducted the substitutes as follows:

From those between 45 and 55 (29,172) deduct 12,000 .....	17,172
From those between 55 and 60 (9,692) deduct 3,000 .....	6,692

Then, by the extension of the term to embrace persons to fifty-five, the State would furnish, between eighteen and forty-five—

Remaining in the State.....	3,312
Persons having substitutes .....	15,000
Total .....	18,312
Males between 45 and 55, after deducting substitutes .....	17,172
Males attaining the age of 18 during the year 1864.....	5,662
Total .....	41,146

The number arriving at the age of eighteen are estimated for only one-half of the population of the State. If the period be extended to embrace males to sixty years of age, the State should furnish $41,146 + 6,692 = 47,838$ .

NORTH CAROLINA.

The whole number of volunteers transferred to the general service from the State of North Carolina, according to the rolls on file in the Adjutant-General's Office, is:

Volunteers (the Conscript Department has furnished) .....	67, 736
Put into the field (to January 1, 1864) .....	13, 221
Total in the field .....	80, 957

According to the records in the commandant's and adjutant-general's offices the Conscript Department has—

Exempted by reason of vocation .....	4, 602
Exempted by claim of the Governor .....	25, 500
Exempted by examining boards .....	8, 064
	38, 166

Making a total of 119,123 white males disposed of in the State. The volunteers furnished by the State were first organized in the State service and were raised under the threat of a draft in case of failure to volunteer, and in response to three separate requisitions by the Governor. The first call brought into service the white males between eighteen and thirty-five years of age; the second call brought in another class between thirty-five and forty years of age, and the third call comprised men between forty and forty-five years of age. Thus all the men in the service from North Carolina, except those having substitutes, are included between eighteen and forty-five years of age. If in the first place the principals be supposed to occupy the places of the substitutes in the Army, the whole number disposed of by the war would come from the class of white men in the State between eighteen and forty-five years of age. This number, according to the last census, is 132,000. Deducting from this number (132,000) the number disposed of by the war (119,123), and there remains 12,877 white men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years to be accounted for. Of this last number (12,877) about one-fourth have fled beyond the reach of conscript officers, or remain occupying that portion of the country where the law has been for some time inoperative. Making this allowance, there remain 9,658 men between eighteen and forty-five years to be accounted for.

The adjutant-general of the State, in a communication to the commandant of conscripts (dated October 29, 1863), reports that when the conscript law was first enforced a number of companies were received into the service made up entirely of persons subject to conscription and of whom no record has been left. The number of these, together with those who to avoid conscription have joined the old regiments of North Carolina, I have estimated at 7,500, which will leave 2,158 men of this class still subject to the law.

What the State has furnished for the war may be summed up as follows:

Volunteers .....	67, 736
Conscripts, through camps .....	13, 221
Other conscripts .....	7, 500
In Confederate service .....	88, 457

The adjutant-general of the State has estimated that the State has put into service 100,000 men, but his calculations contain an apparent error, in which he has accounted for 14,000 men twice. His estimate should therefore be really less than mine.

While North Carolina, with a larger white population than Georgia, has put less into the service than that State, yet there has been actually a greater number in the former State which have been brought from their homes to the call of the country. This disproportion between the number put into the field and the exempted is partly owing to the occupation of a portion of the State by the enemy and the fact that the exemption list is much swollen by the requisitions made by the Governor of the State.

If the conscription be extended to embrace the white males between forty-five and fifty-five years of age the State should furnish—

Between 18 and 45 years of age:
Remaining subject to the law .....	2, 158
Having substitutes .....	2, 040
Attaining the age of 18 years .....	4, 560
Total .....	8, 758

According to the census the State should furnish—

Between 45 and 55 (21,226, less one-fourth, 5,306) .....	15, 920
Between 55 and 60 (7,022, less one-fourth, 1,755) .....	5, 267

The one-fourth is deducted above for the loss of territory incident to the war.

From this class the substitutes must be deducted, as follows:

From those between 45 and 55 (15,920) take 1,632 .....	14, 288
From those between 55 and 60 (5,267) take 408 .....	4, 859

The number to be furnished in the call to fifty-five years of age:

Between 18 and 45 years, left in the State .....	8, 758
Between 45 and 55 years .....	14, 288
Total .....	23, 046

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The number of troops from South Carolina furnished by the records in the adjutant-general's office and the office of conscription show that there were, to November, 1863—

Volunteers .....	41, 873
Conscripts .....	4, 301
Total in service .....	46, 174

A census was taken in the same month of all white males between the ages of sixteen and sixty years, showing the following result:

Between 16 and 18 years of age .....	3, 817
Between 18 and 45 years of age .....	7, 914
Between 45 and 55 years of age .....	6, 140
Between 55 and 60 years of age .....	2, 462
Total .....	20, 333

From calculations made from the census of 1860 South Carolina should furnish (irrespective of the effects of the war upon the population) 80,460 white males between sixteen and sixty years of age, showing that the State has furnished 60,127 troops, which number is thus accounted for:

Volunteers .....	41,873
Conscripts passed through camps .....	4,301
Without passing through camps .....	13,953
Total .....	60,127

A large part of this number (13,953) will be found to have volunteered in North Carolina regiments, having been drawn into that State by the inducements of a double bounty, which was at one time offered to volunteers. Another portion of these will be found in regiments organized by the order of General Beauregard for State defense from the white men between forty and forty-five years of age prior to the call for conscripts to this age, and in the volunteer regiments first organized.

In the event of the term of conscription being extended to persons of fifty-five years of age, the State should furnish—

Between 18 and 45 years of age:
Remaining in the State after deducting 5,814 exemptions (already granted) .....	2,100
Having substitutes .....	791
Attaining the age of 18 years .....	1,950
Total .....	4,841
Between 45 and 55 years of age .....	6,140
Total .....	10,981

GEORGIA.

According to calculations made from the census tables Georgia should be able to furnish (irrespective of the draft made upon her by the war) 139,548 men between the ages of sixteen and sixty years; but, according to the census taken in November last, there were 31,616, including the exempts from conscription. (See former report.)

Of this number there are—

Between 16 and 18 years of age .....	9,680
Between 18 and 45:
Subject to conscription .....	2,295
Exempts .....	11,273
Between 45 and 60 .....	8,368
Total .....	31,616

This deficiency in the class between forty-five and sixty is supposed to be due to the number of substitutes in the Army. According to the census the State should furnish 21,930, showing a deficiency in this class of 13,562, accounted for as follows:

In State organizations .....	4,300
Enlisted in volunteer commands (approximately) .....	2,212
Men who have substituted .....	7,050
Total .....	13,562

If the term of conscription be extended to fifty-five years of age, Georgia should furnish—

Between 18 and 45:
Remaining in the State .....	2,295
Having substitutes .....	7,050
Attaining 18 years of age .....	4,090
Between 45 and 55 (about) .....	4,000

ALABAMA.

For reasons stated in the first part of my report I could obtain no reliable numbers indicating the result of the operations of the conscript law in Alabama. In the State department there are rolls of all the men in the State between the ages of sixteen and sixty years, classified according to age. General Watson, the adjutant-general of militia, refused me access to the rolls, saying that "he intended making a report from the rolls to the Governor of the State, who could do as he pleased with it." A polite letter addressed to General Watson by me, urging important reasons for wishing to examine the rolls, received no reply. The Governor informed me, however, that the rolls exhibited the names of about 38,000 men, and that five counties had not reported. My estimate for these counties would be about 2,500 men, making the whole number between these ages (sixteen and sixty) 40,500. I was also informed by the Governor of the State that the rolls contained 12,000 names of white males between seventeen and forty-five years of age; then, allowing an average for the counties not reported, there would be about 13,000 between the ages of seventeen and forty-five years, of which (about) 4,000 are between seventeen and eighteen years of age. This would leave (about) 9,000 in the State between eighteen and forty-five years of age. Of this 9,000 there must be 8,000 (about) exempted, leaving about 1,000 still subject to conscription.

Then, of the number found to be in the State (40,500) must be deducted the number between sixteen and seventeen years of age (4,600) and the number between seventeen and forty-five years of age (13,000), making a total between sixteen and forty-five years of age of 17,600, which would leave 22,900 between forty-five and sixty years of age. Of this last number about 6,900 are between fifty-five and sixty and 16,000 between forty-five and fifty-five years of age.

Should the term of conscription be extended to fifty-five years of age the State would furnish—

Between 18 and 45 years of age:
Remaining at home.....	1,000
Attaining the age of 18 (approximate) .....	4,000
Between 45 and 55 years of age .....	16,000
Total.....	21,000

As it was impossible to obtain an estimate of the number of men who have put in substitutes, they are not included in the above separately, but are probably all included in the 16,000.

MISSISSIPPI.

Some of the State papers of Mississippi, which might have furnished me data for estimating the number of troops in the field, were destroyed by fire in Jackson. The only evidence of the number of troops which Mississippi has furnished for the war is given in the report of the Board of Police to the auditor of the State. An act of the Legislature required the Board of each district to furnish the auditor with the rolls of every man who had entered the service since the beginning of the war. As far as these rolls go, they show an aggregate of 64,982 men. Some of the counties had not completed the rolls, but I estimated that the result will show about 66,982 men.

If we consider them all to have come from the class of men between sixteen and sixty years of age there will remain, after deducting this number from 92,016, what the State should furnish between sixteen and sixty years of age, according to calculation from the census tables—36,034 between the ages of sixteen and sixty left in the State

Of the number put into the Army about 60,284 are between the ages of eighteen and forty-five. The State should furnish from this class, according to calculation from the census, 71,000 men. There must be, then, 11,716 men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years to be accounted for. General Pillow's organization exempted about 269 men, and the old organization exempted 7,993, leaving about 3,453 between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years still subject to conscription.

The census table shows that the State should furnish in time of peace, at this time, about 10,224 between forty-five and fifty-five years of age, from which must be deducted about 4,000 for volunteers in the field, leaving about 6,224 available men between these ages.

In the event of an extension of the age of conscription to fifty-five years the State should furnish then—

Between 18 and 45 years of age:
Subject to conscription .....	3,453
Attaining 18 years of age .....	3,080
Between 45 and 55 years of age .....	6,224
Total .....	12,757

The number of men who have substitutes is not known, but about three-fourths of them are embraced in the number between forty-five and fifty-five years of age.

In the foregoing estimates no allowance has been made for the exemptions that may hereafter be granted, as this number will of course depend upon the modification the law may undergo during the present session of Congress.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 10, 1864.

Hon. W. P. MILES,
Chairman Military Committee, House of Representatives:

SIR: As the session approaches its close, will you pardon me for asking the special attention of yourself and the Committee on Military Affairs to the recommendation in my report of further legislation to authorize the appointment of quartermasters and commissaries to divisions, corps, and armies in the field? The necessity of these officers has been felt by generals commanding to be so imperative that it has led to the detail of officers of a lower grade from their appropriate commands, and has been the cause of confusion and irregularity which the Department from like conviction of the necessity of the case has been unable appropriately to prevent and correct. I trust the importance of authorizing such appointments will be recognized and appreciated by Congress, and that the regularity and efficiency of the service may be attained with the requisite complement of officers with appropriate rank selected for the position, and not as now be imperfectly selected by temporary or irregular detail.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 19. } Richmond, February 10, 1864.

The following address of the President is published for the information of the Army:

SOLDIERS OF THE ARMIES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

In the long and bloody war in which your country is engaged you have achieved many noble triumphs. You have won glorious victories over vastly more numerous hosts. You have cheerfully borne privations and toil to which you were unused. You have readily submitted to restraints upon your individual will that the citizen might better perform his duty to the state as a soldier. To all these you have lately added another triumph—the noblest of human conquests—a victory over yourselves.

As the time drew near when you who first entered the service might well have been expected to claim relief from your arduous labors and restoration to the endearments of home you have heeded only the call of your suffering country. Again you come to tender your service for the public defense—a free offering, which only such patriotism as yours could make—a triumph worthy of you and of the cause to which you are devoted.

I would in vain attempt adequately to express the emotions with which I received the testimonials of confidence and regard which you have recently addressed to me. To some of those first received separate acknowledgments were returned. But it is now apparent that a like generous enthusiasm pervades the whole Army, and that the only exception to such magnanimous tender will be of those who, having originally entered for the war, cannot display anew their zeal in the public service. It is, therefore, deemed appropriate, and, it is hoped, will be equally acceptable, to make a general acknowledgment, instead of successive special responses. Would that it were possible to render my thanks to you in person, and in the name of our common country as well as in my own while pressing the hand of each war-worn veteran to recognize his title to our love, gratitude, and admiration.

Soldiers! By your will (for you and the people are but one) I have been placed in a position which debars me from sharing your dangers, your sufferings, and your privations in the field. With pride and affection my heart has accompanied you in every march; with solicitude it has sought to minister to your every want; with exultation it has marked your every heroic achievement. Yet never, in the toilsome march, nor in the weary watch, nor in the desperate assault, have you rendered a service so decisive in results as in this last display of the highest qualities of devotion and self-sacrifice which can adorn the character of the warrior patriot.

Already the pulse of the whole people beats in unison with yours. Already they compare your spontaneous and unanimous offer of your lives for the defense of your country with the halting and reluctant service of the mercenaries who are purchased by the enemy at the price of higher bounties than have hitherto been known in war. Animated by this contrast, they exhibit cheerful confidence and more resolute bearing. Even the murmurs of the weak and timid, who shrink from the trials which make stronger and firmer your noble natures, are shamed into silence by the spectacle which you present. Your brave battle-cry will ring loud and clear through the land of the enemy as well as our own; will silence the vainglorious boastings of their corrupt partisans and their pensioned press, and will do justice to the calumny by which they seek to persuade a deluded people that you are ready to purchase dishonorable safety by degrading submission.

Soldiers! The coming spring campaign will open under auspices well calculated to sustain your hopes. Your resolution needed nothing to fortify it. With ranks replenished under the influence of your example and by the aid of your representatives, who give earnest of their purpose to add, by legislation, largely to your strength, you may welcome the invader with a confidence justified by the memory of past victories. On the other hand, debt, taxation, repetition of heavy drafts, dissensions, occasioned by the strife for power, by the pursuit of the spoils of office, by the thirst for the plunder of the public Treasury, and, above all, the consciousness of a bad cause, must tell with fearful force upon the overstrained energies of the enemy. His campaign in 1864 must, from the exhaustion of his resources both in men and money, be far less formidable than those of the last two years, when unimpaired means were used with boundless prodigality and with results which are suggested by the mention of the glorious names of Shiloh and Perryville, and Murfreesborough and Chickamauga, and the Chickahominy and Manassas, and Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville.

Soldiers! Assured success awaits us in our holy struggle for liberty and independence, and for the preservation of all that renders life desirable to honorable men. When that success shall be reached, to you—your country's hope and pride—under Divine Providence, will it be due. The fruits of that success will not be reaped by you alone, but your children and your children's children, in long generations to come, will enjoy blessings derived from you that will preserve your memory ever living in their hearts.

Citizen-defenders of the homes, the liberties, and the altars of the Confederacy! That the God whom we all humbly worship may shield you with his Fatherly care, and preserve you for safe return to the peaceful enjoyment of your friends and the association of those you most love is the earnest prayer of your Commander-in-Chief.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

RICHMOND, February 9, 1864.

By order:

S. COOPER,

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: We beg leave most respectfully to call your attention to the inclosed letter from Hon. William Ezzard, of Georgia, upon a subject of great importance to our people. The evil complained of by him is a serious one, and in behalf of soldiers' families and the indigent poor of our State we appeal to you to have this matter inquired into and the proper remedy applied. Judge Ezzard is a gentleman of high character and his statements are entitled to respect. With your reply please return Judge Ezzard's letter.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

LUCIUS J. GARTRELL.

ATLANTA, February 5, 1864.

Hon. L. J. GARTRELL:

DEAR SIR: I have been thinking for some time of writing to you on a subject which I deem one of importance. It is this: Major Cummings, the commissary-general, is making contracts with men all over the country to distill the tithe corn belonging to the Government for the purpose, as it is alleged, of making whisky for the Army. He agrees to furnish corn to distillers who are to make it up into whisky and pay or deliver to him one gallon for each bushel of corn, and the distiller is to have all he makes over the one gallon (or five quarts in some cases) for himself. This is holding out great inducements to distillers, and is a very money-making business. They can, therefore, afford to distill all the corn they can get. I think it wrong that the Government should take the corn which is needed to feed women and children to make whisky of when the wives and children of soldiers in many cases cannot get bread to eat. There is a great scarcity of corn in the country—in fact, it is impossible to get it here for less than $8 or $10 per bushel, and meal has been as high as $15, and it seems that it is almost impossible to prevent the poor from starving. I think it is therefore important that this thing of distilling the Government corn in this section of the State should be stopped. If it is necessary to make whisky for the Army let it be made in that section of the State where corn is plenty, and if the Army does not need the Government corn here let it be applied to the feeding of the soldiers' wives and children. The State of Georgia would be willing to take the corn and pay a fair price for it and apply it in this way, or the counties would be glad to do it and save the expense of transporting corn from Southwestern Georgia to feed the poor and destitute. I hope you will do something on this subject, if possible, before Congress adjourns. I know the time is short, and I regret that I did not write you sooner, but I hope it is not too late to do something, and I know that there is nothing that would be of greater advantage to the poor of this section of the State. Nothing new here.

Yours, respectfully,

WILLIAM EZZARD.

[First indorsement.]

COMMISSARY-GENERAL:

Have you these contracts or the Surgeon-General? If you, report.
J. A. S.,
Secretary.

[Second indorsement.]

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Richmond, Va., February 19, 1864.

Respectfully returned to Honorable Secretary of War, and his attention is called to the inclosed report from Major Cummings.*

T. G. WILLIAMS,

 (Per Commissary-General of Subsistence, absent, sick.)

[Third indorsement.]

The whisky must be distilled somewhere, and nowhere can corn be found more abundantly.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

Having carefully considered the act entitled "An act to provide for wounded and disabled officers, soldiers, and seamen an asylum to be called the 'Veteran Soldiers' Home,'" I feel constrained to return it with my objections to the House of Representatives, in which it originated. The object of the act appeals most strongly to the sympathies of all; but in providing the means for effectuating that object, it enacts provisions which, in my judgment, are unwarranted by the Constitution. Without affirming that the act creates a perfect corporation, there can be no doubt that it confers upon the board of managers of the institution which it is intended to found corporate powers and franchises of a well-defined character, which constitute them what is known as a quasi corporation. They are to organize themselves into a board, by the election of a president, treasurer, and their necessary officers; are to continue in office until their successors are appointed, thus providing for a continual succession; and they are to be subject to the general approval and direction of the Secretary of War, thus constituting the Secretary a visitor, a usual incident of eleemosynary corporations. They have powers to make by-laws, or as the act expresses it, the "power to make all requisite rules and regulations" for the government of the institution; and they are authorized to receive endowments from individuals and from the States. These are all ordinary and well-known corporate franchises. But if any doubt could exist as to whether they are granted to the board as a corporation, or quasi corporation, or only intrusted to them as individual trustees, that doubt is removed by the second section of the act. That section provides that the treasurer shall give bond with security for the faithful discharge of his duties, which bond shall be payable to the said board of managers and their successors in office, and may by them be put in suit in any State or Confederate court having jurisdiction. It cannot be understood that this bond is to be taken to and sued upon by the board of managers in their individual capacities as natural persons. This is evident from two considerations:

First. Such a power would be supererogatory and useless, since as natural persons they already had by the common law ample right to make any contract and take any bond or other security not contravening the policy of the law.

Second. The right of action on a bond payable to the managers as individuals would, in the courts of law, remain in and be under the control of the managers after they had gone out of office; and in case of the death of all of them would belong to the personal representative of the last survivor; and to prevent these inconveniences it is expressly provided that the bond should be payable to and be sued on by "the board of managers and their successors in office," which could only be accomplished by constituting them to that extent a corporation.

From these considerations it is apparent that the intent of the act is to confer corporate powers upon the board of managers; and that intent is, in my judgment, beyond the powers intrusted to Congress by the Constitution. However enlightened opinions may have differed under the old Government, the whole history and theory of the contest in which we are engaged and the express recognition in our Constitution of the sovereignty of the States precludes all idea of so widely extending by construction the field of implied powers. That there is no such power expressly granted need scarcely be remarked.

But if this view of the intent and operation of the act be discarded as incorrect, then it can be susceptible of but one other interpretation. It provides for the support and comfort of soldiers and seamen disabled in the public service—a class in all countries regarded as the peculiar objects of governmental benevolence. The institution which it founds is endowed, in part at least, from the funds of the Government. The real estate necessary for the purpose of this act is to be leased or purchased by the Secretary of War, under the approval of the President, as the property of the Government. Officers in the service and pay of the Government are to be assigned for duty at the asylum. Its whole management is to be subject to the general direction and control of a high officer of the Government—the Secretary of War; and the board of managers are required to report to the Secretary, to be communicated to Congress at every regular session, a statement of the condition of the institution. It is then a Government institution, and its officers are officers of the Confederate States; but they are not to be appointed in any of the ways by which alone such appointments can be constitutionally made—neither by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, nor by the President alone, nor by the courts of law, nor by the head of a department. The managers are to be appointed by the Governors of the several States, and they in turn are to appoint their president and treasurer and fix their salaries.

These two are, in my judgment, the only interpretations of which the act is susceptible; and under either view its provisions are violative of the Constitution.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

A BILL to be entitled an act to provide for disabled officers and soldiers an asylum to be called "The Veteran Soldiers' Home."

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That in order to make a just and adequate provision for the maintenance and comfort of officers and soldiers or seamen who have been or may be disabled by wounds received or disease contracted in the military or naval service of the Confederate States during the pending war the sum of ——— dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be expended, or so much thereof as may be necessary, by the Secretary of War, under the approval and direction of the President, in the lease or purchase of some safe and suitable location for an asylum to be called "The Veteran Soldiers' Home," and for the erection and furnishing of such buildings and fixtures as the probable number of inmates may render necessary; and in order that the several Confederate States and the citizens thereof may have the opportunity of becoming identified with this philanthropic and patriotic enterprise, and of participating in the pleasing and grateful duty of contributing to the relief of those who have periled all, and have been disabled in the service of their country, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, immediately after the passage of this act, to invite the aid and co-operation of said States, through the respective Governors thereof, and to request the appointment of one person on behalf of each State as a manager of the institution hereby established; and the several persons so appointed shall, as soon as practicable, assemble at some time to be designated by the Secretary of War, and organize themselves into a board of managers by the election of a president and other necessary officers, with such compensation as the board may deem adequate, and a majority of the persons composing said board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. They shall continue in office for the period of two years from the date of their appointment, and until their successors are in like manner appointed, and subject to the general approval and direction of the Secretary of War. They shall have the management and control of said institution and the power to make all requisite rules and regulations therefor, including the appointment of stewards and nurses, the organizing a police force, and other necessary arrangements. Upon their recommendation and application the proper authorities shall appoint or assign for duty at said institution a commissary, who shall provide needful supplies for the same on Government account, and such surgeons and assistant surgeons in the pay of the Government as the wants of the institution may require or as may be necessary for the skillful and successful management of an infirmary, which the board may establish as a part of the institution for the benefit of all those invalids, soldiers or seamen, who may need the repose and treatment furnished therein, together with all other persons of said classes whose wounds, from hasty field operations, require further surgical attention; and the Surgeon-General shall be authorized to appoint the most skillful surgeons to discharge the duties of said infirmary. They shall adopt such measures as they may deem best for obtaining contributions from individuals desiring to aid the enterprise, and shall preserve a registry, which shall be kept open to public inspection, of the names of such contributors and the amount contributed by each, and also all donations received from the several State governments.

SEC. 2. The funds of the institution shall be placed in the hands of a treasurer to be elected by the board, who, before assuming the duties of his office, shall enter into a bond and security for the faithful performance thereof, which bond shall be approved by the board of managers and made payable to said board and their successors in office, and may by them, for any infraction of the same, be put in suit in any State or Confederate court having jurisdiction of the amount. The said funds, subject to the general approval of the Secretary of War, as aforesaid, shall be expended by the board of managers in the erection of such buildings, fixtures, and appurtenances as may be necessary, and in providing for such agricultural, horticultural, mechanical, or other employment or pursuit, as the wants of the institution or the comfort and recreation of the inmates may suggest. The said board shall, before the assembling of each regular session of Congress, submit a report of the condition and state of affairs of the institution to the Secretary of War, which it shall be his duty to communicate to Congress.

SEC. 3. The beneficiaries of said institution, who shall be entitled to become inmates of the same, shall be all commissioned and non-commissioned officers, musicians, and private soldiers and seamen who have been, or who hereafter may be, retired or discharged by reason of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted in the military or naval service of the Confederate States in the line of their duty during the pending war; and any person claiming the benefit of this act shall present his application in the manner prescribed by the board of managers, and shall, if admitted, be subject to all the rules and regulations of the institution so long as he remains an inmate thereof. He shall, at the time of his admittance, deposit with such person as may be designated by the board of managers all certificates and other papers relating to his discharge from the service, and entitling him to future pay or compensation from the Government as a retired or discharged officer, soldier, or seaman, which said pay or compensation shall, during the time of his continuance in the institution, be paid by the disbursing officer making such payments to the treasurer of the institution, and shall constitute a part of the general fund of the same, except so much thereof as the board of managers may direct to be paid, from time to time, to the person in whose right it is received.

SEC. 4. Any beneficiary of said institution may discontinue his connection therewith at his option, and upon withdrawing from the same shall be entitled to withdraw, also, all certificates and other papers deposited by him at the time of his admittance, and shall be remitted to all the rights and benefits secured thereby.

AN ACT to authorize the issue of certificates for interest on the "fifteen million loan."

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause certificates to be issued, in such form as he shall devise, for the interest which has accrued, or which shall accrue, on the registered stock issued under authority of the act of February the twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, entitled, "An act to raise money for the support of the Government, and to provide for the defense of the Confederate States of America." The said certificates shall be prepared and signed by the Register of the Treasury, in favor of the persons, respectively, in whose names the said stock shall be standing on the books of the Treasury, or their order, at the designated periods, and shall be sent by him to the Treasurer, assistant treasurers and depositaries located at the places where said interest is payable. The said certificates shall be countersigned by the Treasurer, assistant treasurer, or depositary, by whom they shall be delivered; and shall be receivable in payment of export duty on cotton, in the same manner as the coupons of the bonds issued under said act of February twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, now are.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 11, 1864.

His Excellency JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida, Tallahassee:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communications of the 11th and 26th January last. They have not been answered sooner, partly in consequence of the necessity from their subjects of reference to different bureaus of this Department for consideration and report, and partly in consequence of even an unusual pressure of important business, some of it of an urgent nature, in attending to which it must sometimes happen that matters, though of more intrinsic importance, yet not seeming to demand such immediate action, will be apparently unduly delayed. The high respect for and appreciation of yourself personally and the gallant and patriotic State you so worthily represent makes me regret the more that you in this instance happened to be subjected to an apparent neglect, only seeming, however, and certainly unintentional. A report from the Ordnance Bureau was received some days ago on the subject referred to it, and until the receipt of your telegram of yesterday I was under the impression that the Bureau had communicated directly with you. Orders were issued on the 1st instant to Major Humphreys, at Columbus, Ga., to furnish the cavalry equipments for Major Scott's battalion, and to the Richmond and Macon arsenals to furnish to that command all the musketoons on hand, amounting to some 300 or more. You were informed on yesterday by telegraph that the arms you applied for could be obtained from Major Humphreys. The settled policy of this Department is against the employment of men fit for field service in other capacities. No chief of a bureau, much less subordinate agents, has the right to exempt from such service men liable to conscription by employing them, except on detail made by this Department specially, which is done reluctantly, and only when indispensably required by the public interests. Orders have been issued for the due investigation of the conduct of purchasing and impressing agents in your State, in regard to the subjects mentioned in your communication, with instructions to make the proper correction of existing causes of complaint and to prevent their recurrence. So much of your communications as related to the propriety of allowing a purchase of the corn received under the tax in kind for the use of the families of soldiers was referred to Col. Larkin Smith, in charge of that subject. His reply, a copy of which is inclosed,* will, I think, be found satisfactory and fully meet your views. I had directed this to be directly communicated to you. I regret that circumstances render it inexpedient to send Perry's brigade to Florida to recruit its diminished ranks as desired by the officers and yourself. The movements of the enemy in the south and west, threatened for some time past, and now in progress, have interposed objections to any exchanges of troops that could be avoided. The reluctance felt by General Lee to part with that gallant brigade, whose courage and conduct have been so often signally displayed under his command, is a tribute well deserved by them, and should soften the disappointment they naturally feel. It is hoped that the mode proposed by him to replenish their ranks will relieve them from all apprehensions of the consolidation of regiments, and will enable them with restored numbers to raise still higher the pride their native State must feel in their achievements.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

AN ACT to authorize the Governor to call into the State service free persons of color.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the Governor of this State be, and he is hereby, authorized to call into the service of the State all free men of color, resident in this State, between the ages of sixteen and fifty-five, not physically and mentally disabled, and to place them in such branches of the service as he may deem compatible with their civil status.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That to effect this the Governor be authorized to adopt whatever system of enrollment he may deem most expedient.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That when said free persons of color shall have been called into the service they shall be subjected to the same rules and regulations and shall receive the same compensation as other persons in the same branches of the service.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Governor be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer said persons of color to the Confederate Government whenever the enrollment of said persons shall have been completed: Provided, Said persons of color shall be exempt from said service by putting an able-bodied slave in his place.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The first paragraph of General Orders, No. 138, 1863, is modified by the omission of the words "in States in which provisions have not been made on this subject" (impressment of slaves); and clause 7 of the same order is so far modified as to allow the rate of compensation for slaves impressed under the act of 26th of March, 1863, to be established by appraisers appointed under that act; provided the price thus fixed does not exceed the sum prescribed by the law of the State in which such slaves are impressed.

Maj. Gen. HOWELL COBB,
Atlanta, Ga.:

GENERAL: Your letter of the 4th instant has been received.

I am much gratified to hear such encouraging accounts both in relation to supplies and to the reserves of population. Surely they will not be held back in a struggle for all that is dear to a people.

I have regretted much to differ from you on the subject of re-enlisting and recruiting our armies. Such was my confidence in your judgment that I submitted your telegrams and letter to the President, telling him frankly your convictions made me distrust my own. He concluded to adhere to the system which the law contemplated. You have always relied rather more than myself on the spontaneous action of the people and favored the voluntary organizations. I confess I think the time for great results from such means has passed, and that the authority of law and the agencies of a general well-adjusted system of uniform operation the best means. Especially in regard to our Army do I deem a fixed and veteran organization of disciplined troops indispensable. We must keep up and even increase the veteran corps. New organizations, however spirited, cannot contend with men practiced and trained in arms. We have the better material of fighting men; but we must secure them equal advantage of training and discipline to maintain superiority. Hence, I earnestly strive to throw the new recruits into the old organizations.

It needed not your assurance to convince that you would acquiesce in the decision of the highest authority and give all your aid to carry it into effect. Your patriotism and good sense were guarantees for that to all who know and appreciate you as I do.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 12, 1864.

His Excellency Z. B. VANCE,
Governor of North Carolina:

In the pressure of business I have postponed for several days a reply to your last letter, suggesting that difficulties in relation to the steamers Don and Hansa might be solved by the Government acquiring one-fourth interest in these steamers. It has been our policy not to acquire less than a controlling interest heretofore in any contracts made. The recent legislation confirms me in this view. I am willing to place the State on the same footing with the Confederate Government in the shipments that have been made; that is, to credit to the owners the quantity taken out for the State, just as if it had been taken for the Confederate States. The Don and Hansa have taken one-fourth for your State; the agent at Bermuda and Nassau the difference between one-fourth and one-third, which the vessels would have been compelled to take if they had continued to run under arrangements with the Confederate Government. For the future it will be necessary to make the terms upon which cotton is taken out for the States and for the Confederate Government uniform, or the result will be a competition ruinous to each.

Upon application from the authorities of the State of South Carolina for the steamer Alice, and of the State of Virginia for the steamer City of Petersburg, I have at once directed the agent that cotton taken out by these steamers, for account of the States named, on the same terms as fixed for the Confederate Government, will be considered as if taken for the Confederate Government and credited accordingly. This arrangement has been satisfactory here and to Governor Bonham, and I earnestly hope will be so to you.

Congress has just legislated on the subject, authorizing shipment by private individuals only under license granted by the Confederate Government, reserving to the States the right to ship out on their steamers their own cotton. Uniform regulations will be drawn up as required by this law, and it shall be my effort to make them such as to facilitate the efforts of the State and Confederate governments in exporting cotton and introducing supplies and munitions of war.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

RICHMOND, VA., February 13, 1864.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

I feel impelled by the condition of the country earnestly to recommend to your adoption the extension of the conscription already recommended in my annual message of the 7th of December last, and to inform you that the preparations made by the enemy for the campaign of the present year warn us that our armies in the field must be re-enforced to the utmost possible extent.

The agricultural interests of the country must be protected and fostered or we shall be unable to raise the supplies necessary for the subsistence of the Army as well as of the people at home. How is this to be done?

There is no possibility of affording adequate local protection by our armies in the field, which must of necessity be kept concentrated to resist the main columns of the invading forces of the enemy. Our farms and depots can only be protected from destructive raids by the men who remain at home engaged in manufactural, agricultural, and other pursuits. There are but two modes of rendering these classes available for such purposes. One is by calling them out as militia; the other by enrolling them under Confederate authority. I propose in a few words to contrast these modes.

If those left at home are available only as militia, it will become necessary to make requisitions for them on the States in advance of any pressing necessity for their services, because of the delays which are always involved in obtaining forces under such calls. When called out it will naturally result that the men will be retained for long periods in the field or in camp, to be ready for emergencies, as they could not, if discharged, be promptly recalled when required. This method of using the reserves will tell with disastrous effect on our agriculture.

On the other hand, troops for local defense and special service, as organized under the act of 21st of August, 1861, would afford the commander-in-chief the means of calling out the men embraced in such organizations at a moment's warning, and enable him, without imprudence, to dismiss them the moment the danger had disappeared. They would probably not be absent from the fields and workshops more than two or three weeks at a time, and there would thus be no serious interruption of the productive industry of the country. If the spirit which rendered the volunteering so general among all classes of citizens at the beginning of the war were still prevalent, there would be no necessity for the proposed legislation, as the citizens would readily join the organizations provided in the law above mentioned. But as this is not the case, it is necessary that conscription for local defense should replace volunteering.

If Congress should decline to adopt this measure, which my sense of what is needed for the public defense forces me again to urge upon its attention, I am unable to perceive from what source we are to obtain the men necessary not only to repel raids but to relieve the large number of able-bodied soldiers now detailed from the Army for local service in the States.

I trust that my conviction of the pressing necessity for this legislation in aid of the public defense will be received by Congress as a sufficient justification for this renewal of the recommendation contained in the message addressed to you at the commencement of the present session.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

OFFICE OF CHIEF DISTRICT COMMISSARY,
Atlanta, Ga., February 13, 1864.

Col. L. B. NORTHROP,

Commissary-General of Subsistence, Richmond, Va. :

COLONEL: I beg leave to inclose copies of a dispatch from Major French yesterday and my reply. In this connection I inclose the correspondence between Governor Brown and myself, embracing my letters of January 18 and February 1, and his replies of January 28 and February 6, and my rejoinder of February 12. Upon these premises I propose to give you a succinct statement of the facts in the case. Some three months since Mr. R. P. Glenn, of the firm of Glenn, Carr & Wright, visited Richmond and proposed to distill whisky for this department, giving one gallon of whisky for every bushel of corn turned over to them. This agreement met with your approval and was entered into by me. I regarded it as the best that could possibly be made for the Government, the cheapest and in fact the only method by which a supply could be secured for this department. Many, I may say hundreds, of contracts had been made to pay a stipulated price for whisky for this and other departments. They all led to an abuse of distillation, a failure to furnish the required quantity, which was in nearly every case attributed to the inability to procure grain. Of course when the grain is furnished no such excuse can be made. This plan, therefore, seemed to me the only reliable and practicable plan by which the wants of the department could be supplied. I thereupon made several other contracts upon the same terms. Soon afterward I was informed that the statutes of this State required the entire product of the grain to be furnished to the Confederate States Government. I at once amended all contracts not in accordance with the statutes, requiring all whisky made from the grain turned over to the distiller to be furnished me, I paying a stipulated price, in no case exceeding that established by the commissioners for any excess over five quarts to the bushel in most cases, and one gallon in the rest. As the correspondence shows, General Johnston held a conference with me and thought it advisable in certain contingencies to increase the supply of whisky to the army to content them with a deficiency of meat, which was then creating great dissatisfaction. I thereupon addressed my letter of 18th to Governor Brown. After receiving his reply of 28th I sent my letter of February 1, simply with a desire to know whether he (or the State of Georgia) would interfere with the distillation of grain belonging to the Government. This letter brought out his extraordinary communication of February 6. My first impulse was to reply in the same tone and spirit in which it was evidently conceived and written. A sense of duty, however, to my position dictated my reply of the 12th, and here the correspondence now rests.

I wish now to state a few facts for your consideration. When the President was here some months since Governor Brown urged upon his aide, General Lee, the propriety of declaring all North Georgia impracticable, i. e., unable to furnish the tax in kind, or any other supplies, without distressing the inhabitants. Consent was given after some debate that certain counties should be so declared. Since the prospect of occupation by the enemy, and especially since the orders authorizing me to pay the market price for supplies, the patriotic citizens of these counties have astonished me with their hidden treasures which they wish to sell or exchange for the same kind in the lower portion of the State. To be sure, the quantity is utterly inadequate to the supply of the army, but enough to satisfy my mind that when soldiers' families suffer for bread it is solely because the soldier's pay of $11 per month is not sufficient to pay the prices which these patriotic farmers have fixed upon their provisions. Below here thousands upon thousands of bushels of corn belonging to the Government will be lost for want of transportation unless it can be distilled and the slops used in feeding hogs and cattle. The weevil proved our friend last year in forcing the farmer to send his corn to market. This year it is proving our bane. Thousands of bushels collected from the tax in kind have come to this place weevil-eaten and only fit for making whisky. The corn was supposed to be of the last crop. On its arrival it has proved to be corn grown the previous year, evidently hoarded and then substituted for just dues to the Government. From this stuff what can we expect to obtain except whisky, and what can we expect from the tithings of another year, unless those of the present are collected promptly and disposed of? In God's name, say I, give the army and the people all the bread they want, but let not the surplus be wasted and lost, and let enough be converted into whisky to supply the actual wants of the army.

I say nothing more of the part I have taken in this matter except that I have tried to do my duty. In common with other departments I have experienced unlooked-for opposition from the State authorities. They seem bent on subordinating the best interests and success of the Confederacy to their self-conceived notions of justice and patriotism, and an insane desire to preserve the material interests and welfare of all citizens. My report of persons employed by me you will receive in a few days through Major Locke.

SIR: I have just returned from the front, where I have held a consultation with General Johnston about feeding the army. In the frequent want of animal food he has determined to issue rations of whisky, and to do this it is necessary for me to make contracts for the same in large quantities. I have already made several, and in all cases require contractors to furnish me the entire product of the grain turned over to them. My object in addressing you is to ascertain if, under the statutes of the State, any other steps are necessary to enable my contractors to carry out their agreements. Please answer at your earliest convenience, as the demands upon me for whisky are urgent and beyond my present means of supply.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. F. CUMMINGS,

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Governor, &c., Milledgeville, Ga.:

SIR: Yours of 28th received. I do not propose to use any but the corn of the tax in kind belonging to the Government in making whisky near the railroads and navigable streams. Will you please inform me at your earliest convenience whether you will attempt to prevent the distillation of grain belonging to the Confederate States Government, being receipts from the tax in kind, whenever and wherever they may deem proper? The army needs the whisky, and I am now unable to respond to the calls upon me.

Very respectfully,

J. F. CUMMINGS,

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Milledgeville, January 28, 1864.

Maj. J. F. CUMMINGS:

SIR: In reply to your letter I state that the laws of Georgia will not tolerate any such consumption of grain by distillation as you propose. When the country is so hard pressed for bread I shall order the prompt prosecution of every man who runs a still without a license from the State, and I shall grant no license to stills in Upper Georgia. The law only authorizes me to grant license to distill a small additional quantity by Confederate distillers, and these must be located in Southern and Southwestern Georgia, over twenty miles from a railroad or navigable stream.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Milledgeville, Ga., February 6, 1864.

Maj. J. F. CUMMINGS:

SIR: Your letter inquiring whether I will "attempt to prevent the distillation of grain belonging to the Confederate States Government, being receipts from the tax in kind, wherever and whenever they may deem proper," is received. In reply I have to state that it is as much a violation of the penal laws of this State for any person, no matter what his position may be, to distill Government corn in this State without a license from the Governor as it is to distill the corn of a citizen or to commit the crime of theft or swindling; and while I am responsible as the Executive of the State I shall attempt to execute her criminal laws as well as her civil. The Legislature of this State by express statute provided how much whisky and alcohol might be made of grain within the limits of the State for the Confederate Government, with the license of the Governor, but made it highly penal for any to be made without such license, and limited the quantity beyond which the license should not be granted by the Governor. It is therefore as much a violation of the criminal laws of this State for a Confederate officer to make whisky without a license as it is for any other person to do so. The ownership of the corn has nothing whatever to do with the question. You seem to think that because the corn is tithe corn the Government agents may distill it in violation of the criminal laws of the State without guilt. If so, why may they not distill corn purchased by the Government; and if they may do this, why may they not distill any which they choose to impress? The Government claims the ownership of the corn in the one case as well as the other. If it may distill tithe corn it may impress the bread out of the mouths of the wives and children of soldiers and distill that also. No such pretensions will be acquiesced in a moment by the State.

You say the demand for whisky for the army is heavy. I reply, the demand for bread in the army and at home is much greater.

One thing is very certain, there is not corn enough in the country to furnish the people and the army with rations of bread and whisky. One or the other must be dispensed with, and in my judgment no man connected with the army, unless he is a toper, or expects to make money out of the distillation, can hesitate to decide in favor of bread. If the question is left to the decision of a soldier who is a man, whether he shall have his drink of whisky in camp or his wife and children shall have bread at home, there will be no hesitation. He will decide in favor of bread. I have lately been through Upper, Middle, and Southwestern Georgia, and have observed closely, and I am quite sure the prospects of suffering for bread are alarming. In this state of things I feel that I should merit the censure of all good men if I were to allow more corn distilled into whisky than is actually necessary for hospital purposes. What whisky is made under license hereafter to be granted must be made in Southern or Southwestern Georgia, and made as the statute requires—of grain grown over twenty miles from a railroad or navigable stream. If the Government converts the tithe corn of Upper Georgia into whisky, it must take from the people by impressment as many bushels as it thus destroys for the use of the army. Hence the mischief is just as great as if it distilled corn which its officers have impressed.

Another very serious objection to leaving this matter to your discretion is, if I am not incorrectly informed, that you consume one and one-half times more corn than is necessary. I am informed that the rule is to deliver the Government corn to the distiller, and receive in exchange for a bushel of corn one gallon of whisky—possibly in some cases five quarts. Persons who are practical distillers tell me that a bushel of corn will make two and one-half gallons of as good whisky as is now generally selling in the market at about $50 per gallon. Thus you give the distiller, if no Government officer has any part of the profits, $75 per bushel to distill the Government corn, as he can make one gallon for you and one and one-half for himself. Suppose the Government wants 25,000 gallons of whisky. This can be made of 10,000 bushels of corn. Then why distill 25,000 bushels of corn to get 25,000 gallons? Why not consume only 10,000 bushels of corn and pay the distiller a reasonable compensation in money and leave the other 15,000 bushels for bread? If these kinds of contracts are continued while the poor are suffering for bread, the country will ask, and have a right to an answer, why it is so.

The laws of Georgia and regulations of this department have wisely, I think, provided against this kind of favoritism or fraud. They require the distiller who has a license to distill for the Confederate Government to deliver every gallon made out of the grain to the Government, and allow him to retain none of it for speculation. The Government pays him a stipulated price in money for his labor, and he is required before he gets the license to file his affidavit in writing that he will make no more than is mentioned in the license, and that he will deliver it all to the Government. Why should a Confederate officer object to having the distiller put upon these terms, and prefer to give him a bushel of corn for a gallon of whisky? He who does so object and attempts to engage in or encourage such unreasonable speculation, if not peculation, in defiance of the penal laws of this State, must expect to suffer the penalties which the law prescribes. If you have occasion to complain of this decision to your superior officers, you will be expected to furnish them a copy of this letter.

Respectfully,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

OFFICE OF CHIEF DISTRICT COMMISSARY,
*February 12, 1864.*His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Governor, &c., Milledgeville, Ga.:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of 6th instant, which has been carefully noticed. I am convinced from the tenor of your letter that you have entirely misconstrued both my motives and action.

On the 18th of January I addressed you a plain inquiry, and stated that my contractors would be required to furnish me the entire product of all grain turned over to them. My subsequent communication of February 1 I addressed to you to obtain further information, and not with the most remote idea of aiding or abetting in setting at defiance the laws of the State. My letters were conceived and, as I think, couched in respectful and courteous language. Their aim was to avoid any confusion or clashing between the State and Confederate authorities, and if possible secure such concert of action as would enable me to carry out the orders received at headquarters. Since I have been a commissioned officer I have ever tried to devote my energies and industry to a faithful discharge of the arduous and often thankless duties of my position. I am satisfied from the tone of your letters that my operations have been misrepresented to you and my motives impugned, and therefore write to disabuse your mind on this point.

My first contracts, not having been in strict accordance with law, were amended so soon as I was advised of the fact by our mutual friend, Major Steele. None have since been made that did not, as I conceived, conform strictly to the statutes of the State. My contracts altogether thus far would not consume over 3,000 bushels of corn per month, a large portion of which will be refuse and weevil-eaten and wholly unfit for bread or stock feed. I expect to feed Government stock, hogs and cattle, with the slops, which are better for them than the corn before distillation. My object in all cases is to use corn not fit for bread, and as far as possible place distilleries in localities where it could not be moved out and would be destroyed and lost to the Government.

With this statement of facts, I beg leave to say that any insinuation of complicity in fraud and corruption on my part are false and slanderous, and I should be obliged to you for the names of the parties who have made them, at your earliest convenience, in order that I may properly vindicate myself. Our mutual friend General Foster, thinking that there was a needless waste of grain in making whisky, addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, which was subsequently referred to me. I have had an interview with him, and he is now satisfied with the terms of my contracts and will write you on the subject.

Very respectfully, &c.,

J. F. CUMMINGS,
Major and Commissary of Subsistence.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, February 15, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have been prevented from making an earlier answer to your letter of the 3d instant, partly by ill-health and partly by the pressure of other duties. In relation to the case of the postmaster at Ivor, Va., about which I wrote you on the 7th of January, an investigation subsequently made by a special agent of this Department shows that the complaint of the postmaster was without just foundation. It is therefore proper for me to withdraw my request for the interposition of your authority in this case. In relation to the cases presented in my letter of October 19 and November 17, our understanding of the object had in view in the passage of the law of April 14, 1863, "exempting contractors for carrying the mails, &c., from military service," and of its correct interpretation, are so different that I deem it proper to state such reasons as occur to me in support of the views presented in my former letters and in answer to yours. The only point on which there seems to be a difference of opinion between us is as to whether persons who become contractors while in the military service are entitled to exemption while they remain such contractors. I should say, in passing, that the questions were raised by officers executing the law of conscription which were in my mind as well as the one above stated, when in my letter of October 19 I said that "this Department has been very much annoyed by the impediments, seemingly of every possible kind, which have been thrown in its way by the action of the conscript officers of perfecting the contracts made during the past summer for carrying the mails." For instance, while it was assumed that no one was entitled to exemption who was in the military service at the time of making a contract, it was also assumed that no one was entitled to exemption who had not an existing contract at the date of the passage of the act exempting contractors; and in a number of cases contractors who had become such in July preceding the passage of the act of April 14, 1863, were arrested and held for military service by the conscript officers. Repeated cases of these kinds were brought to the attention of this Department. To have carried out these constructions would have entirely defeated the purposes of the law. This will be better understood by a statement of the necessity and reasons which induced the passage of the law.

On the 11th of October, 1862, Congress repealed the act of April 21, 1862, which exempted mail contractors from the performance of military service. Bids were to be received to the 31st of March, and contracts were to be awarded on the 30th of April, 1863, pursuant to previous notice by advertisement for carrying the mails for four years, from the 1st of July, 1863, in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida. There were 887 routes to be let to contract at that time in these States. On the 11th of March, within twenty days of the expiration of the time for receiving bids, only 114 bids for these contracts had reached this Department, being 773 less than the number open to competition. The then increasing depreciation of our currency deterred persons from taking contracts at a fixed rate of compensation for the period of four years as a mere business operation, and the question had to be met whether the Government would allow the postal service to go down, or, to prevent this, would exempt persons from military service who would take contracts to carry the mail. My recommendation to Congress, through the President, for the passage of a law to exempt contractors presented precisely this case as creating the necessity for such a law, and for these reasons, and to meet this necessity, Congress passed and the President approved this law. The policy of exempting mail contractors from military service was determined by the proper law-making authority, upon a case presented and on facts distinctly set forth, so that it is impossible to misunderstand the object of the law. Your objection is, however, that though this may be true as to those not enrolled in the military service at the time of making contracts with this Department, it has not the effect of exempting such persons as were in the military service at the time of making such contracts.

On this point I might rest the case on the decision and authority of the Confederate and State courts, notwithstanding the opinion expressed in your letter that "by every rule of reason and usage the settled construction given by an Executive Department of the Government to an act of Congress for its action is entitled to more consideration and weight of authority than an exposition by a subordinate judicial tribunal." I must express my dissent from the correctness of the principle announced in the lines above quoted. The true rule, as I understand it, is that the settled construction of an act of Congress by the department of Government charged with its execution, is strong persuasive evidence to the courts in favor of the correctness of that construction in cases of doubt. But under our system of Government this is the first case in which I ever heard of the assumption by any one that the construction of an act of Congress by an Executive Department of the Government was entitled to more consideration and weight of authority than its exposition by a judicial tribunal of competent jurisdiction. I use the expression of "competent jurisdiction" instead of the expression "subordinate judicial tribunal," because the decision of a judge of the district court of the Confederate States in a case over which he has rightful jurisdiction is conclusive as to the right of the Government and all of its departments, and of all other parties to the suit, until appealed from and reversed. Such is the effect in the case Ex parte Lane, decided in the Confederate district court held in this city, a copy of the opinion in which case I sent you with my letter of October 19. I have not been furnished with copies of the opinions of any other courts on this subject, but have seen in the newspapers and learned from other sources what purported to be the leading points in a decision made by the supreme court of the State of Georgia, which showed that that court had decided in a similar case to that of Lane, that a contractor for carrying the mails, though in the military service at the time the contract was made, was entitled under the law of April 14, 1863, to exemption. The same decision was made by a State court of Virginia of competent jurisdiction in the cases of John Surface and John C. Kinzer, and I have seen from the newspapers and heard from other sources that similar decisions have been made in several other courts in different States, while I have only heard of one judge of a State court who held a contrary opinion. So far, therefore, assuming this information to be correct, the authority of the courts would seem to be almost uniform against your construction of the act of 14th of April, 1863, exempting mail contractors. I doubt not that this law has been so conclusively settled by the courts that a disregard of the principles of these decisions by an officer of the Army by attempting to coerce military service from a mail contractor would lay him liable to a civil suit in damages for an unlawful arrest and false imprisonment. And they certainly seem sufficiently conclusive to control the action of the Executive Departments of the Government, if the courts are to be regarded as the expositors of the law, and if the military is subordinate to the civil authority. If the doctrine should prevail that the construction of statutes by the Executive Departments of the Government is of paramount authority to the decisions of courts of competent jurisdiction, then there is an end, of course, to civil liberty, except in so far as it may be enjoyed by the forbearance of those departments. The form of our Government does not admit of this, nor would our people endure it. But if it were admitted that the construction of this statute by the departments could override judicial decisions, would the construction of the War Department or that of the Post-Office Department prevail? Each is interested, and who should determine which is the more interested? There must be an arbiter of this question. If this arbitrament is to depend on the possession of soldiers and bayonets, then of course it is a question not of law and right, but of force and power. But if the courts of the country are to be the arbiters, then the question is one for judicial solution, according to law and the principles of justice.

You inform me that "the views of this (the War) Department on this question of construction have been given fully in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives during the present session, and unless Congress shall otherwise direct, these views will continue, as heretofore, to be the rule of its action." I have not seen your response to the resolution of the House on this subject, and would in nowise feel bound by a document never brought to my notice, and which, while entitled to respect, is of no more binding authority than the opinion of a coequal branch of the Executive Government. The fact that Congress passed the law exempting mail contractors, with the express understanding that it was necessary to deprive the Army of the service of this small number of men who were necessary to keep up the postal service, and that the courts have decided that such was the effect of the law they passed, together with my protest in my last report to Congress against the action of the military authorities on the subject, are deemed sufficient to preserve the rights of this Department against any supposed assent to adverse views; and besides, it cannot rightly be assumed that Congress consents to the correctness of the interpretation of a law by one of the departments because it omits to legislate in response to said interpretation. It may well and properly leave the determination of the question as to the correctness of such interpretation to the courts, where alone the question can be authoritatively decided.

I refer you to the opinion of Judge Halyburton in the case of Lane for the reasons which sustain this construction of the act of April 14, 1863, to save the trouble of copying or restating them. In reference to your suggestion that the act of April 2, 1863, authorizing the discharge of certain officers from the military service throws additional light upon the proper construction of the acts of October 11, 1862, and 14th of April, 1863, I would say that the force of this suggestion seems to consist in a supposed distinction created by the use of the word "discharge" in the act of April 2, and the word "exempt" in the act of April 14. On this point I quote from the opinion of Judge Halyburton:

It is said by the counsel for Captain Follen (the conscript officer) that the act referred to does not discharge persons who were in the service at the time when the contract was made, but only extends to those who had entered into contracts before their enlistment; that if Congress had meant to release those who were already in service, the word "discharge" would have been used, and not the word "exempt," which, it is said, is inappropriate in such a case. The word "exempt," however, is not a technical term. It does not bear in a statute a different construction from that which belongs to it in common speech, and the lexical definition of the word along with other meanings is "free from service, charge, burden, tax, duty, &c., not liable to." If, then, it were meant to release or discharge from service a soldier who is already in service, it would be not only an intelligible but a correct expression to say that he should hereafter be "exempt" from duty; that is, to say free from duty or service. If Congress had meant that the act to which we have referred should extend to men in actual service alone, they might perhaps, and probably would, have used the word "discharged" instead of "exempt." If, however, they intended that the law should embrace not only persons in the service, but others not enrolled, the word "discharged" from the service would have been inapplicable. Nor does it occur to me that they could have so well expressed their meaning in such a case by any other word as by the word "exempt" without a periphrasis.

This reasoning seems to me to be sound and to dispose of the question. It is conceded that when one enters the military service for a time agreed on, either voluntarily or by conscription, he cannot, by entering into new engagements without the consent of the Government, avoid his liability to serve out his time. Hence the necessity for the passage of the law of the 2d of April above referred to. And it was equally competent for Congress to exempt those who were in the military service, or liable to be enrolled, in order that the Government might have the benefit of their services in carrying the mails, by the act of April 14, 1863.

I have discussed this subject at this length more because of the principles involved than on account of the small number of men who may happen hereafter to be employed by this Department who would otherwise be liable to service in the Army. In my letter to you of October 19 I said:

I may also mention that there will be no other general letting of mail contracts until the summer of the year 1866, and only such additional contracts will have to be made as are rendered necessary when present contractors abandon the service; and these, it is hoped, will be but few.

In my last annual report it is shown that there are but 1,253 contractors for carrying the mails in the Confederate States, and that of these only 147 had obtained contracts at nominal rates of compensation. These are presumed to be persons otherwise liable to military service, but I have no means of knowing what proportion of them were in the military service when they entered into contracts. I said in this report:

I recognize fully the necessity of calling into the military service all who are capable of bearing arms and who can be spared from other employments. But under this law the number to be exempted was too small to affect materially the military operations, and yet the exemption of that small number, under the circumstances which induced the adoption of the policy, was necessary to keep in successful operation the postal service and to satisfy the demands of the public by the proper and speedy transmission of intelligence.

I have no subsequent information which requires a change of the views expressed in the above extract. I may add that this Department is not singular in being compelled to ask for the services of persons otherwise liable to military duty. A number of contracts, it is understood, have been made by the War Department to supply its necessities which involve exemption. And this has doubtless been the case with other departments. Some public necessities must be met in this way at a time when so large a part of the male population of the country is called into the field. I will, in all cases in which it is practicable, avoid the employment of persons in the service of this Department who are either in the Army or liable to enrollment, as I sympathize most fully with your efforts to fill up the Army.

In reference to your request that I "designate all the contractors where the parties have been discharged from the military service on writs of habeas corpus, in order that they may be reclaimed by the military authorities," I have to say that if I thought it right to aid in disregarding the judicial decisions by which these persons were discharged, I have no information which would enable me to comply with your request, except in a very few cases which have incidentally come to my knowledge. We receive bids and award contracts in the great mass of cases without seeing or knowing the contractors, and without any means of knowing whether they are in the military service or liable to enrollment, except as we infer from the low rates of their bids, and without any means of knowing who have been discharged on habeas corpus. But you will see from the foregoing that I do not think it would be proper to adopt the course you suggest.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN H. REAGAN,

AUGUSTA, GA., February 16, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

MR. SEDDON: I beg your permission to write a few words, after the style of a plain, unofficial, but earnest man, writing to a man of practical wisdom.

I feel, as intensely as it is possible to feel, the vital necessity of striking hard blows now, and striking at as many points and in as many ways as possible, so as to aid our cause and save our country.

I have perfected my plans and distributed my men, with means improvised for the purpose (since the Government has not as yet paid our force any money), and between the 1st and 15th of March, on the same day, I propose to destroy the enemy's transports, arsenals, navy-yards, stores, &c., in accordance with the outline of the plan I gave you in December.

I beg that this plan be borne in mind as our link in the chain of testimony in favor of our force. On the same day at all points we mean to strike effectually, so as to exert an influence upon the spring campaign.

Hon. John B. Clark did me the kindness to advise me by letter that the Senate had passed a bill—he did not state its provisions—which might aid in facilitating my plans, which he supposed would also be passed by the House. This led me to conclude it was the bill which you informed me in our latest interview you would propose and submit to the Military Committee, for the purpose of putting this secret service upon a systematic and legal footing, and then would give me those facilities which I asked in some written propositions submitted at your suggestion.

Mr. Seddon, please do me the kindness to take ten minutes of your overtaxed time, and give me the commission or order or direction or authority or recognition which will enable me to prosecute this work vigorously and systematically, and I promise you to render a good account of our labors.

I visit my family for a few days, with whom I have spent one week in two and a half years. I shall be much gratified to receive your orders, and for twenty days to come my address will be Hebron, S. C.

With great respect, &c.,

JOSEPH W. TUCKER.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 17, 1864.

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN,
Postmaster-General:

SIR: I have received your favor of the 25th [15th] instant in reply to mine of the 3d instant.

It has received the consideration due alike from my personal respect toward yourself, the importance of the principles involved, and the ability with which your views are presented.

It is evident that further discussion between us will not result in a change of opinions now held, and, while I am unable to concur with you, I have no hope of inducing you to agree with me, so that no good could result from any review of your letter.

I am pleased to learn from you of your being satisfied that the complaint of the postmaster at Ivor was not well founded, and thank you for the frankness with which it was communicated.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

Address of Congress to the people of the Confederate States.

JOINT RESOLUTION in relation to the war.

Resolved by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That the present is deemed a fitting occasion to remind the people of the Confederate States that they are engaged in a struggle for the preservation both of liberty and civilization; and that no sacrifice of life or fortune can be too costly which may be requisite to secure to themselves and their posterity the enjoyment of these inappreciable blessings; and also to assure them that, in the judgment of the Congress, the resources of the country, if developed with energy, husbanded with care and applied with fidelity, are more than sufficient to support the most protracted war which it can be necessary to wage for our independence; and to exhort them, by every consideration which can influence freemen and patriots to a magnanimous surrender of all personal and party feuds; to an indignant rebuke of every exhibition of factious temper, in whatever quarter, or upon whatever pretext it may be made; to a generous support of all branches of the Government in the legitimate exercise of their constitutional powers; and to that harmonious, unselfish, and patriotic co-operation which can alone impart to our cause the irresistible strength which springs from united councils, fraternal feelings, and fervent devotion to the public weal.

Approved January 22, 1864.

In closing the labors of the first permanent Congress your representatives deem it a fit occasion to give some account of their stewardship; to review briefly what, under such embarrassments and adverse circumstances, has been accomplished; to invite attention to the prospect before us, and the duties incumbent on every citizen in this crisis, and to address such words of counsel and encouragement as the times demand.

Compelled by a long series of oppressive and tyrannical acts, culminating at last in the selection of a President and Vice-President by a party confessedly sectional and hostile to the South and her institutions, these States withdrew from the former Union and formed a new Confederate alliance as an independent Government, based on the proper relations of labor and capital. This step was taken reluctantly, by constraint, and after the exhaustion of every measure that was likely to secure us from interference with our property, equality in the Union, or exemption from submission to an alien Government. The Southern States claimed only the unrestricted enjoyment of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution. Finding, by painful and protracted experience, that this was persistently denied, we determined to separate from those enemies who had manifested the inclination and ability to impoverish and destroy us. We fell back upon the right for which the Colonies maintained the war of the Revolution, and which our heroic forefathers asserted to be clear and inalienable. The unanimity and zeal with which the separation was undertaken and perfected finds no parallel in history. The people rose en masse to assert their liberties and protect their menaced rights. There never was before such universality of conviction among any people on any question involving so serious and so thorough a change of political and international relations. This grew out of the clearness of the right so to act, and the certainty of the perils of further association with the North. The change was so wonderful, so rapid, so contrary to universal history, that many fail to see that all has been done in the logical sequence of principles, which are the highest testimony to the wisdom of our fathers and the best illustration of the correctness of those principles. This Government is a child of law instead of sedition, of right instead of violence, of deliberation instead of insurrection. Its early life was attended by no anarchy, no rebellion, no suspension of authority, no social disorders, no lawless disturbances. Sovereignty was not for one moment in abeyance. The utmost conservatism marked every proceeding and public act. The object was "to do what was necessary, and no more; and to do that with the utmost temperance and prudence." Saint-Just, in his report to the convention of France, in 1793, said: "A people has but one dangerous enemy, and that is government." We adopted no such absurdity. In nearly every instance the first steps were taken legally, in accordance with the will and prescribed direction of the constituted authorities of the seceding States. We were not remitted to brute force or natural law, or the instincts of reason. The charters of freedom were scrupulously preserved. As in the English revolution of 1688, and ours of 1776, there was no material alteration in the laws beyond what was necessary to redress the abuses that provoked the struggle. No attempt was made to build on speculative principles. The effort was confined within the narrowest limits of historical and constitutional right. The controversy turned on the records and muniments of the past. We merely resisted innovation and tyranny, and contended for our birth-rights and the covenanted principles of our race. We have had our Governors, General Assemblies, and courts; the same electors, the same corporations, "the same rules for property, the same subordinations, the same order in the law and in the magistracy." When the sovereign States met in council they, in truth and substance and in a constitutional light, did not make but prevented a revolution.

Commencing our new national life under such circumstances, we had a right to expect that we would be permitted, without molestation, to cultivate the arts of peace, and vindicate, on our chosen arena and with the selected type of social characteristics, our claims to civilization. It was thought, too, by many, that war would not be resorted to by an enlightened country except on the direst necessity. That a people, professing to be animated by Christian sentiment, and who had regarded our peculiar institution as a blot and blur upon the fair escutcheon of their common Christianity, should make war upon the South for doing what they had a perfect right to do, and for relieving them of the incubus which, they professed, rested upon them by association, was deemed almost beyond belief by many of our wisest minds. It was hoped, too, that the obvious interests of the two sections would restrain the wild frenzy of excitement, and turn into peaceful channels the thoughts of those who had but recently been invested with power in the United States.

These reasonable anticipations were doomed to disappointment. The red glare of battle, kindled at Sumter, dissipated all hopes of peace, and the two Governments were arrayed in hostility against each other. We charge the responsibility of this war upon the United States. They are accountable for the blood and havoc and ruin it has caused. For such a war we were not prepared. The difference in military resources between our enemies and ourselves; the immense advantages possessed in the organized machinery of an established Government, a powerful navy, the nucleus of an army, credit abroad, and illimitable facilities in mechanical and manufacturing power, placed them on "the vantage ground." In our infancy we were without a seaman or soldier, without revenue, without gold and silver, without a recognized place in the family of nations, without external commerce, without foreign credit, with the prejudices of the world against us. While we were without manufacturing facilities to supply our wants, our ports were blockaded; we had to grapple with a giant adversary, defend 2,000 miles of sea-coast, and an inland frontier of equal extent. If we had succeeded in preventing any successes on the part of our enemy, it would have been a miracle. What we have accomplished, with a population so inferior in numbers and means so vastly disproportionate, has excited the astonishment and admiration of the world.

The war in which we are engaged was wickedly, and against all our protests and the most earnest efforts to the contrary, forced upon us. South Carolina sent a commission to Washington to adjust all questions of dispute between her and the United States. One of the first acts of the Provisional Government was to accredit agents to visit Washington and use all honorable means to obtain a satisfactory settlement of all questions of dispute with that Government. Both efforts failed. Commissioners were deceived and rejected, and clandestine but vigorous preparations were made for war. In proportion to our perseverance and anxiety have been the obstinacy and arrogance in spurning offers of peace. It seems we can be indebted for nothing to the virtues of our enemy. We are obliged to his vices, which have inured to our strength. We owe as much to his insolence and blindness as to our precaution.

The wager of battle having been tendered, it was accepted. The alacrity with which our people flew to arms is worthy of all praise. Their deeds of heroic daring, patient endurance, ready submission to discipline, and numerous victories, are in keeping with the fervent patriotism that prompted their early volunteering. Quite recently scores of regiments have re-enlisted for the war, testifying their determination to fight until their liberties were achieved. Coupled with and contributing greatly to this enthusiastic ardor was the lofty courage, the indomitable resolve, the self-denying spirit of our noble women, who, by their labors of love, their patience of hope, their unflinching constancy, their uncomplaining submission to privations of the war, have shed an immortal luster upon their sex and country.

Our Army is no hireling soldiery. It comes not from paupers, criminals, or emigrants. It was originally raised by the free, unconstrained, unpurchasable assent of the men. All vocations and classes contributed to the swelling numbers. Abandoning luxuries and comforts to which they had been accustomed, they submitted cheerfully to the scanty fare and exactive service of the camps. Their services above price, the only remuneration they have sought is the protection of their altars, firesides, and liberty. In the Norwegian wars the actors were, every one of them, named and patronymically described as the King's friend and companion. The same wonderful individuality has been seen in this war. Our soldiers are not a consolidated mass, an unthinking machine, but an army of intelligent units. To designate all who have distinguished themselves by special valor would be to enumerate nearly all in the Army. The generous rivalry between the troops from different States has prevented any special pre-eminence, and hereafter, for centuries to come, the gallant bearing and unconquerable devotion of Confederate soldiers will inspire the hearts and encourage the hopes and strengthen the faith of all who labor to obtain their freedom.

For three years this cruel war has been waged against us, and its continuance has been seized upon as a pretext by some discontented persons to excite hostility to the Government. Recent and public as have been the occurrences, it is strange that a misapprehension exists as to the conduct of the two Governments in reference to peace. Allusion has been made to the unsuccessful efforts, when separation took place, to procure an amicable adjustment of all matters in dispute. These attempts at negotiation do not comprise all that has been done. In every form in which expression could be given to the sentiment, in public meetings, through the press, by legislative resolves, the desire of this people for peace, for the uninterrupted enjoyment of their rights and prosperity, has been made known. The President, more authoritatively, in several of his messages, while protesting the utter absence of all desire to interfere with the United States, or acquire any of their territory, has avowed that the "advent of peace will be hailed with joy. Our desire for it has never been concealed. Our efforts to avoid the war, forced on us as it was by the lust of conquest and the insane passions of our foes, are known to mankind."

The course of the Federal Government has proved that it did not desire peace, and would not consent to it on any terms that we could possibly concede. In proof of this we refer to the repeated rejection of all terms of conciliation and compromise, to their recent contemptuous refusal to receive the Vice-President, who was sent to negotiate for softening the asperities of war, and their scornful rejection of the offer of a neutral power to mediate between the contending parties.* If cumulative evidence be needed, it can be found in the following resolution, recently adopted by the House of Representatives in Washington:

Resolved, That as our country and the very existence of the best Government ever instituted by man are imperiled by the most causeless and wicked rebellion that the world has seen, and believing, as we do, that the only hope of saving this country and preserving this Government is by the power of the sword, we are for the most vigorous prosecution of the war until the Constitution and the laws shall be enforced and obeyed in all parts of the United States; and to that end we oppose any armistice or intervention or mediation or proposition for peace from any quarter, so long as there shall be found a rebel in arms against the Government; and we ignore all party names, lines, and issues, and recognize but two parties in this war—patriots and traitors.

The motive of such strange conduct is obvious. The Republican party was founded to destroy slavery and the equality of the States, and Lincoln was selected as the instrument to accomplish this object. The Union was a barrier to the consummation of this policy, because the Constitution, which was its bond, recognized and protected slavery and the sovereignty of the States. The Union must, therefore, be sacrificed, and to insure its destruction war was determined on.

The mass of the Northern people were not privy to, and sympathized in no such design. They loved the Union and wished to preserve it. To rally the people to the support of the war its object was proclaimed to be "a restoration of the Union," as if that which implied voluntary assent, of which agreement was an indispensable element and condition, could be preserved by coercion. It is absurd to pretend that a Government really desirous of restoring the Union would adopt such measures as the confiscation of private property, the emancipation of slaves, systematic efforts to invite them to insurrection, forcible abduction from their homes, and compulsory enlistment in the Army, the division of a sovereign State without its consent, and a proclamation that one-tenth of the population of a State, and that tenth under military rule, should control the will of the remaining nine-tenths. The only relation possible between the two sections under such a policy is that of conqueror and conquered, superior and dependent. Rest assured, fellow-citizens, that although restoration may still be used as a war cry by the Northern Government, it is only to delude and betray. Fanaticism has summoned to its aid cupidity and vengeance, and nothing short of your utter subjugation, the destruction of your State governments, the overthrow of your social and political fabric, your personal and public degradation and ruin, will satisfy the demands of the North. Can there be a man so vile, so debased, so unworthy of liberty as to accept peace on such humiliating terms?

It would hardly be fair to assert that all the Northern people participate in these designs. On the contrary, there exists a powerful political party which openly condemns them. The administration has, however, been able thus far, by its enormous patronage and its lavish expenditures, to seduce, or by its legions of "Hessian" mercenaries to overawe, the masses, to control the elections, and to establish an arbitrary despotism. It cannot be possible that this state of things can continue. The people of the United States, accustomed to freedom, cannot consent to be ruined and enslaved in order to ruin and enslave us. Moral like physical epidemics have their allotted periods, and must sooner or later be exhausted and disappear. When reason returns our enemies will probably reflect that a people like ours, who have exhibited such capabilities and extemporized such resources, can never be subdued; that a vast expanse of territory with such a population cannot be governed as an obedient colony. Victory would not be conquest. The inextinguishable quarrel would be transmitted "from bleeding sire to son," and the struggle would be renewed between generations yet unborn. To impoverish us would only be to dry up some of the springs of Northern prosperity—to destroy Southern wealth is to reduce Northern profits—while the restoration of peace would necessarily re-establish some commercial intercourse. It may not be amiss in this connection to say that at one time it was the wish and expectation of many at the South to form a treaty of amity and friendship with the Northern States, by which both peoples might derive the benefits of commercial intercourse and move on side by side in the arts of peace and civilization. History has confirmed the lesson taught by Divine authority, that each nation as well as each individual should seek their happiness in the prosperity of others, and not in the injury or ruin of a neighbor. The general welfare of all is the highest dictate of moral duty and economic policy, while a heritage of triumphant wrong is the greatest curse that can befall a nation.

Until some evidence is given of a change of policy on the part of the Government, and some assurance is received that efforts at negotiation will not be spurned, the Congress are of opinion that any direct overtures for peace would compromise our self-respect, be fruitless of good, and interpreted by the enemy as an indication of weakness. We can only repeat the desire of the people for peace, and our readiness to accept terms consistent with the honor and dignity and independence of the States and compatible with the safety of our domestic institutions.

Not content with rejecting all proposals for a peaceful settlement of the controversy, a cruel war of invasion was commenced, which, in its progress, has been marked by a brutality and disregard of the rules of civilized warfare that stand out in unexampled barbarity in the history of modern wars. Accompanied by every act of cruelty and rapine, the conduct of the enemy has been destitute of that forbearance and magnanimity which civilization and Christianity have introduced to mitigate the asperities of war. The atrocities are too incredible for narration. Instead of a regular war, our resistance of the unholy efforts to crush out our national existence is treated as a rebellion, and the settled international rules between belligerents are ignored. Instead of conducting the war as betwixt two military and political organizations, it is a war against the whole population. Houses are pillaged and burned. Churches are defaced. Towns are ransacked. Clothing of women and infants is stripped from their persons. Jewelry and mementoes of the dead are stolen. Mills and implements of agriculture are destroyed. Private salt-works are broken up. The introduction of medicines is forbidden. Means of subsistence are wantonly wasted to produce beggary. Prisoners are returned with contagious diseases. The last morsel of food has been taken from families, who were not allowed to carry on a trade or branch of industry. A rigid and offensive espionage has been introduced to ferret out "disloyalty." Persons have been forced to choose between starvation of helpless children and taking the oath of allegiance to a hated Government. The cartel for exchange of prisoners has been suspended and our unfortunate soldiers subjected to the grossest indignities. The wounded at Gettysburg were deprived of their nurses and inhumanly left to perish on the field. Helpless women have been exposed to the most cruel outrages and to that dishonor which is infinitely worse than death. Citizens have been murdered by the Butlers and McNeils and Milroys, who are favorite generals of our enemies. Refined and delicate ladies have been seized, bound with cords, imprisoned, guarded by negroes, and held as hostages for the return of recaptured slaves. Unoffending non-combatants have been banished or dragged from their quiet homes, to be immured in filthy jails. Preaching the gospel has been refused, except on conditions of taking the oath of allegiance. Parents have been forbidden to name their children in honor of "rebel" chiefs. Property has been confiscated. Military governors have been appointed for States, satraps for provinces, and Haynaus for cities.

These cruelties and atrocities of the enemy have been exceeded by their malicious and bloodthirsty purposes and machinations in reference to the slaves. Early in this war President Lincoln averred his constitutional inability and personal unwillingness to interfere with the domestic institutions of the States and the relation between master and servant. Prudential considerations may have been veiled under conscientious scruples, for Seward, in a confidential instruction to Mr. Adams, the minister to Great Britain, on 10th of March, 1862, said:

If the Government of the United States should precipitately decree the immediate abolition of slavery, it would reinvigorate the declining insurrection in every part of the South.

Subsequent reverses and the refractory rebelliousness of the seceded States caused a change of policy, and Mr. Lincoln issued his celebrated proclamation, a mere brutum fulmen liberating the slaves in the "insurrectionary districts." On the 24th of June, 1776, one of the reasons assigned by Pennsylvania for her separation from the mother country was that in her sister colonies the "King had excited the negroes to revolt" and to imbrue their hands in the blood of their masters in a manner unpracticed by civilized nations." This, probably, had reference to the proclamation of Dunmore, the last royal Governor of Virginia, in 1775, declaring freedom to all servants or negroes, if they would join "for the reducing the colony to a proper sense of its duty." The invitation to the slaves to rise against their masters, the suggested insurrection, caused, says Bancroft, "a thrill of indignation to run through Virginia, effacing all differences of party, and rousing one strong, impassioned purpose to drive away the insolent power by which it had been put forth." A contemporary annalist, adverting to the same proclamation, said, "It was received with the greatest horror in all the colonies."

"The policy adopted by Dunmore," says Lawrence in his Notes on Wheaton, "of arming the slaves against their masters was not pursued during the war of the Revolution; and when negroes were taken by the English they were not considered otherwise than as property and plunder." Emancipation of slaves as a war measure has been severely condemned and denounced by the most eminent publicists in Europe and the United States. The United States, "in their diplomatic relations, have ever maintained," says the Northern authority just quoted, "that slaves were private property, and for them, as such, they have repeatedly received compensation from England." Napoleon I was never induced to issue a proclamation for the emancipation of the serfs in his war with Russia. He said:

I could have armed against her a part of her population by proclaiming the liberty of the serfs. A great number of villages asked it of me, but I refused to avail myself of a measure which would have devoted to death thousands of families.

In the discussion growing out of the treaty of peace of 1814 and the proffered mediation of Russia, the principle was maintained by the United States that "the emancipation of enemy's slaves is not among the acts of legitimate warfare." In the instructions from John Quincy Adams, as Secretary of State, to Mr. Middleton, at Saint Petersburg, October 18, 1820, it is said:

The British have broadly asserted the right of emancipating slaves (private property) as a legitimate right of war. No such right is acknowledged as a law of war by writers who admit any limitation. The right of putting to death all prisoners in cold blood, and without special cause, might as well be pretended to be a law of war, or the right to use poisoned weapons, or to assassinate.

Disregarding the teachings of the approved writers on international law, and the practice and claims of his own Government in its purer days, President Lincoln has sought to convert the South into a San Domingo, by appealing to the cupidity, lusts, ambition, and ferocity of the slave. Abraham Lincoln is but the lineal descendant of Dunmore, and the impotent malice of each was foiled by the fidelity of those who, by the meanness of the conspirators, would only, if successful, have been seduced into idleness, filth, vice, beggary, and death.

But we tire of these indignities and enormities. They are too sickening for recital. History will hereafter pillory those who committed and encouraged such crimes in immortal infamy.

General Robert E. Lee in a recent battle order stated to his invincible legions, that "the cruel foe seeks to reduce our fathers and mothers, our wives and children, to abject slavery." He does not paint too strongly the purposes of the enemy or the consequences of subjugation. What has been done in certain districts is but the prologue of the bloody drama that will be enacted. It is well that every man and woman should have some just conception of the horrors of conquest. The fate of Ireland at the period of its conquest, and of Poland, distinctly foreshadows what would await us. The guillotine, in its ceaseless work of blood, would be revived for the execution of the "rebel leaders." The heroes of our contest would be required to lay down their proud ensigns, on which are recorded the battle-fields of their glory, to stack their arms, lower their heads in humiliation and dishonor, and pass under the yoke of Abolition misrule and tyranny. A hateful inquisition, made atrocious by spies and informers; star-chamber courts, enforcing their decisions by confiscations, imprisonments, banishments, and death; a band of detectives, ferreting out secrets, lurking in every family, existing in every conveyance; the suppression of free speech; the deprivation of arms and franchises; and the ever present sense of inferiority would make our condition abject and miserable beyond what freemen can imagine.

Subjugation involves everything that the torturing malice and devilish ingenuity of our foes can suggest—the destruction of our nationality, the equalization of whites and blacks, the obliteration of State lines, degradation to colonial vassalage, and the reduction of many of our citizens to dreary, hopeless, remediless bondage. A hostile police would keep “order” in every town and city. Judges, like Busteded, would hold our courts, protected by Yankee soldiers. Churches would be filled by Yankee or tory preachers. Every office would be bestowed on aliens. Absolutism would curse us with all its vices. Super-added to these, sinking us into a lower abyss of degradation, we would be made the slaves of our slaves, hewers of wood and drawers of water for those upon whom God has stamped indelibly the marks of physical and intellectual inferiority. The past, or foreign countries, need not be sought unto to furnish illustrations of the heritage of shame that subjugation would entail. Baltimore, Saint Louis, Nashville, Knoxville, New Orleans, Vicksburg, Huntsville, Norfolk, New Berne, Louisville, and Fredericksburg, are the first fruits of the ignominy and poverty of Yankee domination.

The sad story of the wrongs and indignities endured by those States which have been in the complete or partial possession of the enemy will give the best evidence of the consequences of subjugation. Missouri, a magnificent empire of agricultural and mineral wealth, is to-day a smoking ruin and the theater of the most revolting cruelties and barbarities. The minions of tyranny consume her substance, plunder her citizens, and destroy her peace. The sacred rights of freemen are struck down, and the blood of her children, her maidens, and her old men is made to flow, out of mere wantonness and recklessness. No whispers of freedom go unpunished, and the very instincts of self-preservation are outlawed. The worship of God and the rites of sepulture have been shamefully interrupted, and in many instances the cultivation of the soil is prohibited to her own citizens. These facts are attested by many witnesses, and it is but a just tribute to that noble and chivalrous people that, amid barbarities almost unparalleled, they still maintain a proud and defiant spirit toward their enemies.

In Maryland, the judiciary, made subservient to executive absolutism, furnishes no security for individual rights or personal freedom; members of the Legislature are arrested and imprisoned without process of law or assignment of cause, and the whole land groaneth under the oppressions of a merciless tyranny.

In Kentucky, the ballot box has been overthrown, free speech is suppressed, the most vexatious annoyances harass and embitter, and all the arts and appliances of an unscrupulous despotism are freely used to prevent the uprising of the noble patriots of “the dark and bloody ground.” Notes of gladness, assurances of a brighter and better day, reach us, and the exiles may take courage and hope for the future.

In Virginia, the model of all that illustrates human heroism and self-denying patriotism, although the tempest of desolation has swept over her fair domains, no sign of repentance for her separation from the North can be found. Her old homesteads dismantled, her ancestral relics destroyed, her people impoverished, her territory made the battle-ground for the rude shocks of contending hosts, and then divided with hireling parasites, mockingly claiming jurisdiction and authority, the Old Dominion still stands with proud crest and defiant mien, ready to tramp beneath her heel every usurper and tyrant, and to illustrate afresh her sic semper tyrannis, the "proudest motto that ever blazed on a nation's shield or a warrior's arms."

To prevent such effects our people are now prosecuting this struggle. It is no mere war of calculation, no contest for a particular kind of property, no barter of precious blood for filthy lucre. Everything involved in manhood, civilization, religion, law, property, country, home, is at stake. We fight not for plunder, spoils, pillage, territorial conquest. The Government tempts by no prizes of "beauty or booty" to be drawn in the lottery of this war. We seek to preserve civil freedom, honor, equality, firesides, and blood is well shed when "shed for our family, for our friends, for our kind, for our country, for our God." Burke said:

A State resolved to hazard its existence rather than abandon its object, must have an infinite advantage over that which is resolved to yield rather than carry its resistance beyond a certain point.

It is better to be conquered by any other nation than by the United States. It is better to be a dependency of any other power than of that. By the condition of its existence and essential Constitution as now governed, it must be in perpetual hostility to us. As the Spanish invader burned his ships to make retreat impossible, so we cannot afford to take steps backward. Retreat is more dangerous than advance. Behind us are inferiority and degradation. Before us is everything enticing to a patriot.

Our bitter and implacable foes are preparing vigorously for the coming campaign. Corresponding efforts should be made on our part. Without murmuring, our people should respond to the laws which the exigency demands. Every one capable of bearing arms should be connected with some effective military organization. The utmost energies of the whole population should be taxed to produce food and clothing, and a spirit of cheerfulness and trust in an all-wise and overruling Providence should be cultivated.

The history of the past three years has much to animate us to renewed effort and a firmer and more assured hope. A whole people have given their hearts and bodies to repel the invader, and costly sacrifices have been made on the altar of our country. No similar instance is to be found of such spontaneous uprising and volunteering. Inspired by a holy patriotism, again and again have our brave soldiers, with the aid of Heaven, baffled the efforts of our foes. It is in no arrogant spirit that we refer to successes that have cost us so much blood and brought sorrow to so many hearts. We may find in all this an earnest of what, with determined and resolute exertion, we can do to avert subjugation and slavery—and we cannot fail to discern in our deliverance from so many and so great perils the interposition of that Being who will not forsake us in the trials that are to come. Let us, then, looking upon the bodies of our loved and honored dead, catch inspiration from their example, and gather renewed confidence and a firmer resolve to tread, with unflinching trust, the path that leads to honor and peace, although it lead through tears and suffering and blood.

We have no alternative but to do our duty. We combat for property, homes, the honor of our wives, the future of our children, the preservation of our fair land from pollution, and to avert a doom which we can read both in the threats of our enemies and the acts of oppression we have alluded to in this address.

The situation is grave, but furnishes no just excuse for despondency. Instead of harsh criticisms on the Government and our generals; instead of bewailing the failure to accomplish impossibilities, we should rather be grateful, humbly and profoundly, to a benignant Providence for the results that have rewarded our labors. Remembering the disproportion in population, in military and naval resources, and the deficiency of skilled labor in the South, our accomplishments have surpassed those recorded of any people in the annals of the world. There is no just reason for hopelessness or fear. Since the outbreak of the war the South has lost the nominal possession of the Mississippi River and fragments of her territory; but Federal occupancy is not conquest. The fires of patriotism still burn unquenchably in the breasts of those who are subject to foreign domination. We yet have in our uninterrupted control a territory which, according to past progress, will require the enemy ten years to overrun.

The enemy is not free from difficulties. With an enormous debt, the financial convulsion, long postponed, is surely coming. The short crops in the United States and abundant harvests in Europe will hasten what was otherwise inevitable. Many sagacious persons at the North discover in the usurpations of their Government the certain overthrow of their liberties. A large number revolt from the unjust war waged upon the South and would gladly bring it to an end. Others look with alarm upon the complete subversion of constitutional freedom by Abraham Lincoln, and feel in their own persons the bitterness of the slavery which three years of war have failed to inflict on the South. Brave and earnest men at the North have spoken out against the usurpations and cruelties daily practiced. The success of these men over the radical and despotic faction which now rules the North may open the way to peaceful negotiation and a cessation of this bloody and unnecessary war.

In conclusion, we exhort our fellow-citizens to be of good cheer and spare no labor nor sacrifices that may be necessary to enable us to win the campaign upon which we have just entered. We have passed through great trials of affliction, but suffering and humiliation are the school-masters that lead nations to self-reliance and independence. These disciplinary providences but mature and develop and solidify our people. We beg that the supplies and resources of the country, which are ample, may be sold to the Government to support and equip its armies. Let all spirit of faction and past party differences be forgotten in the presence of our cruel foe. We should not despond. We should be self-denying. We should labor to extend to the utmost the productive resources of the country. We should economize. The families of soldiers should be cared for and liberally supplied. We entreat from all a generous and hearty co-operation with the Government in all branches of its administration, and with the agents, civil or military, in the performance of their duties. Moral aid has the "power of the incommunicable," and, by united efforts, by an all-comprehending and self-sacrificing patriotism, we can, with the blessing of God, avert the perils which environ us, and achieve for ourselves and children peace and freedom. Hitherto the Lord has interposed graciously to bring us victory, and in His hand there is present power to prevent this great multitude which come against us from casting us out of the possession which He has given us to inherit.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to lay taxes for the common defense and carry on the Government of the Confederate States," approved April twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That an act entitled "An act to lay taxes for the common defense and carry on the Government of the Confederate States," approved April twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SECTION 1. That every person engaged, or intending to engage, in any business named in the fourth section of this act, shall, within sixty days after the passage of this act, or at the time of beginning business, and on the first day of January in each year thereafter, register with the district collector, in such form as the Commissioner of Taxes shall prescribe, a true account of the name and residence of each person, firm or corporation engaged or interested in the business, with a statement of the time for which, and the place and manner in which, the same is to be conducted, and of all other facts going to ascertain the amount of tax upon such business, for the past or future, according to the provisions of this act. At the time of such registry, there shall be paid to the collector the specific tax for the year ending on the next thirty-first of December, and such other tax as may be due upon sales or receipts in such business, at the time of such registry, as herein provided; and the collector shall give to the person making such registry a copy thereof, with a receipt for the amount of the tax then paid.

SEC. 2. That any person failing to make the registry, and to pay the tax required by the preceding section, shall, in addition to all other taxes upon his business imposed by this act, pay double the amount of the specific tax on such business, and a like sum for every thirty days of such failure.

SEC. 3. That except where herein otherwise provided, there shall be a separate registry and tax for each business mentioned in the fourth section of this act, and for each place of conducting the same, but no tax shall be required for the mere storage of goods at a place other than the registered place of business. Upon every change in the place of conducting a registered business there shall be a new registry, but no additional tax shall be required. Upon the death of any person conducting a business, registered and taxed as herein required, or upon the transfer of the business to another, the business shall not be subjected to any additional tax, but there shall be a new registry in the name of the person authorized by law to continue the business.

SEC. 4. That upon each trade, business or occupation hereinafter named, the following taxes shall be levied and paid for the year ending on the thirty-first of December, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and for each and every year thereafter, viz:

I. Bankers shall pay five hundred dollars. Every person shall be deemed a banker, within the meaning of this act, who keeps a place of business where credits are opened in favor of any person, firm or corporation, by the deposit or collection of money or currency, and by whom the same or any part thereof, shall be paid out or remitted upon the draft, check or order of such creditor; but not to include any bank legally authorized to issue notes as circulation, nor agents for the sale of merchandise for account of producers or manufacturers.

II. Auctioneers shall pay fifty dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales made: Provided, however, That on all sales at auction of stock or securities for money, the tax shall be one-fourth of one per centum on the gross amount of sales. Every person shall be deemed an auctioneer, within the meaning of this act, whose occupation it is to offer property for sale, to the highest or best bidder, at public outcry. The tax upon the auctioneers shall be deemed a tax upon the personal privilege, to be paid by each individual engaged in the business, and without regard to the place at which the same is conducted. No tax shall be required upon auction sales made for dealers in a business registered and taxed, and at their place of business, upon official sales at auction, made by judicial or executive officers, or by personal representatives, guardians or committees.

III. Wholesale dealers in liquors, of any and every description, including distilled spirits, fermented liquors and wines of all kinds, shall pay two hundred dollars and five per centum on the gross amount of sales made. Every person, other than the distiller or brewer, who shall sell, or offer for sale, any such liquors or wines, in quantities of more than three gallons at one time to the same purchaser, shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer in liquors within the meaning of this act. All persons who shall sell, or offer for sale, any such liquors or wines, in quantities less than three gallons at one time to the same person, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors.

IV. Retail dealers in liquors, including distilled spirits, fermented liquors, and wines of every description, shall pay one hundred dollars and ten per centum on the gross amount of all sales made.

V. Retail dealers, whose quarterly sales shall exceed one hundred dollars, and shall be less than five hundred dollars, shall pay twenty-five dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales made; and where quarterly sales exceed five hundred dollars, the specific tax shall be fifty dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales made. Every person whose business or occupation it is to sell, or offer to sell, groceries or any goods, wares, merchandise, or other things of foreign or domestic production, in less quantities than a whole original piece or package at one time to the same person (not including wines, spirituous or malt liquors), shall be regarded as a retail dealer under this act: Provided, however, That any mechanic who shall sell only the products of the labor of himself and his own family, shall be exempt from this tax.

VI. Wholesale dealers shall pay two hundred dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of all sales made. Every person whose business or occupation it is to sell, or offer to sell, groceries, or any goods, wares or merchandise of foreign or domestic production, by one or more original packages or pieces at one time, to the same purchaser, not including wines, spirituous or malt liquors; and every person whose business it is to sell, or offer to sell, slaves, shall be deemed as a wholesale dealer under this act; but having been registered as a wholesale dealer, such person may also sell as aforesaid as a retailer: Provided, That contractors working for and selling their own products exclusively to the Confederate States, to an amount not exceeding five thousand dollars a year, and such dealers as sell exclusively to consumers, and not to others to sell again, shall not be regarded as wholesale, but as retail dealers.

VII. Pawnbrokers shall pay two hundred dollars. Every person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive by way of pledge, favor or exchange, any goods, wares or merchandise of any kind of personal property whatever, for the repayment or security of money lent thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker under this act.

VIII. Distillers shall pay two hundred dollars and twenty per centum on the gross amount of all sales made; and also twenty per centum on the value of all liquors distilled for any other person, and the tax on distillers shall be a lien on the still or stills used, and upon the other fixtures and articles for carrying on the business, and shall have priority over all other liens or claims. Every person or copartnership who distills or manufactures spirituous liquors for others, or for sale, shall be deemed a distiller under this act: Provided, however, That distillers of fruit, for ninety days or less, shall pay sixty dollars, and also fifty cents per gallon on the first ten gallons, and two dollars per gallon on all spirits distilled beyond that quantity.

IX. Brewers shall pay one hundred dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales made. Every person who manufactures fermented liquors, of any name or description for sale, from malt, wholly or in part, shall be deemed a brewer under this act.

X. Hotels, inns, taverns and eating-houses shall be classified and rated according to the yearly rental, or if not rented, according to the estimated value of the house or property occupied, or intended to be occupied, as a hotel, inn, tavern or eating-house, as follows, viz: In cases where the actual or estimated rent shall amount to ten thousand dollars or more, they shall constitute the first class, and pay an annual sum of five hundred dollars. In cases where said rent shall be five thousand, and less than ten thousand dollars, they shall constitute a second class, and pay an annual sum of three hundred dollars. And in cases where said rent shall be two thousand five hundred dollars, and less than five thousand dollars, they shall constitute the third class, and pay an annual sum of two hundred dollars. In cases where said rent shall be one thousand dollars, and less than twenty-five hundred dollars, they shall constitute the fourth class, and pay an annual sum of one hundred dollars. And in cases where said rent shall be less than one thousand dollars, they shall constitute the fifth class, and pay an annual sum of thirty dollars. Every place where food and lodgings, or lodgings only, are provided for travelers, sojourners, or boarders, in view of payment therefor, the income or receipts from which amount to five hundred dollars from that source, shall be regarded a hotel, inn or tavern, under this act.

XI. That every place where food or refreshments of any kind are provided for casual visitors, and sold for consumption therein, and every boarding-house in which there shall be six boarders or more, shall be deemed an eating-house under this act.

XII. Brokers shall pay two hundred dollars. Any person whose business it is to purchase and sell stocks, coined money, bank notes, or other securities for themselves or others, or who deals in exchanges relating to money, shall be deemed a broker under this act.

XIII. Commercial brokers, or commission merchants, shall pay two hundred dollars and two and a half per centum upon all sales made. Any person or firm, except one registered as a wholesale dealer or a banker, whose business it is, as the agent of others, to purchase or sell goods, or seek orders therefor, in original or unbroken packages, or produce consigned by others than the producers, to manage business matters for the owners of vessels, or for the shippers or consigners of goods, or whose business it is to purchase, rent, hire or sell real estate or negroes, shall be deemed a commercial broker or commission merchant, under this act.

XIV. Tobacconists shall pay fifty dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales. Any person whose business it is to sell, at retail, cigars, snuff or tobacco, in any form, shall be deemed a tobacconist under this act; but registered wholesale and retail dealers shall not be taxed as tobacconists.

XV. Theaters shall pay five hundred dollars and five per centum on all receipts, which tax shall be paid by the owner of the building. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic representations, plays or performances, and not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater under this act. Each circus shall pay one hundred dollars, and a tax of ten dollars for each exhibition; which tax shall be paid by the manager thereof. Every building, tent, or space, or area, where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports are exhibited, shall be regarded as a circus under this act. Jugglers, and other persons exhibiting shows, shall pay fifty dollars. Every person who performs by sleight of hand shall be regarded as a juggler under this act: Provided, That no registry made in one State shall be held to authorize exhibitions in another State, and but one registry shall be required under this act to authorize exhibitions in any one State.

XVI. Bowling-alleys and billiard-rooms shall pay forty dollars for each alley or billiard-table registered, which tax shall be paid by the owner thereof. Every place or building where bowls are thrown, or billiards played, and open to the public with or without price, shall be regarded as a bowling-alley or billiard-room, respectively, under this act.

XVII. Livery stable keepers shall pay fifty dollars. Any person whose occupation or business it is to keep horses for hire or to let shall be regarded as a livery stable keeper under this act.

XVIII. Cattle brokers shall pay the sum of fifty dollars, and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales made. Any person whose business it is to buy and sell and deal in cattle, horses, hogs or sheep, shall be considered a cattle broker.

XIX. Butchers and bakers shall pay the sum of fifty dollars and one per centum on the gross amount of the sales made. Any person whose business it is to butcher and sell, or offer for sale in open market, or otherwise, the flesh of cattle, hogs or sheep, shall be deemed a butcher under this act; and any person whose business it is to bake and sell, or offer for sale, bread, shall be deemed a baker under this act.

XX. Peddlers shall pay fifty dollars and two and a half per cent. on the gross sales. Any person, except persons engaged in peddling exclusively periodicals, books, newspapers (published in the Confederate States), bibles, or religious tracts, who sells or offers to sell at retail, goods, wares or other commodities, traveling with his goods from place to place, in the streets, or through different parts of the country, shall be deemed a peddler under this act: Provided, That any peddler who sells or offers to sell dry goods, foreign or domestic, by one or more original pieces or packages at one time, and to the same person or persons as aforesaid, shall pay one hundred dollars and two and a half per cent. on the gross sales; and any person who peddles jewelry shall pay fifty dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross sales. The tax upon peddlers shall be deemed a tax on the personal privilege, to be paid by each individual engaged in the business, without regard to the place at which the same is conducted.

XXI. Apothecaries shall pay fifty dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales made. Every person who keeps a shop or building where medicines are compounded or prepared according to prescriptions of physicians, and sold, shall be regarded as an apothecary under this act.

XXII. Photographers shall pay the sum of fifty dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales made. Any person or persons who make for sale photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes or pictures on glass, metal, paper or other material, by the action of light, shall be regarded a photographer under this act.

XXIII. Lawyers, actually engaged in practice, shall pay fifty dollars. Every person whose business it is, for fee or reward, to prosecute or defend causes in any court of record, or other judicial tribunal of the Confederate States, or of any State, or give advice in relation to causes or matters pending therein, shall be deemed a lawyer within the meaning of this act.

XXIV. Physicians, surgeons and dentists, actually engaged in the practice, shall pay fifty dollars. Every person whose business it is, for fee or reward, to prescribe remedies or perform surgical operations for the cure of any bodily disease or ailment, shall be deemed a physician, surgeon or dentist, within the meaning of this act, as the case may be; and the provisions of paragraph number twenty-one shall not extend to physicians who keep on hand medicines solely for the purpose of making up their own prescriptions for their own patients. The tax upon lawyers, physicians, surgeons and dentists, shall be deemed a tax upon the personal privilege, to be paid by each individual in the business and without regard to the place at which the same is conducted: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to physicians and surgeons exclusively engaged in the Confederate service.

XXV. Confectioners shall pay fifty dollars and two and a half per centum on the gross amount of sales. Every person who sells at retail, confectionery, sweet-meats, confits or other confections, in any building, shall be regarded as a confectioner under this act.

SEC. 5. That every person registered and taxed upon the gross amount of sales as aforesaid, shall be required on the first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, to make a list or return to the assessor of the district, of the gross amount of such sales as aforesaid, viz: from the passage of this act to the thirtieth day of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, inclusive, and at the end of every three months, or within twenty days thereafter, after the said first day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, make a list or return to the assessor of the district of the gross amount of such sales made as aforesaid, with the amount of tax which has accrued or should accrue thereon, which list shall have annexed thereto a declaration under oath or affirmation, in form or manner as may be prescribed by the commissioner of taxes, that the same is true and correct, and shall, within such time as the collector may designate, by public notice, (which time shall not be less than ten nor more than thirty days from the date of such notice), pay to the collector the amount of tax thereupon, as aforesaid, and in default thereof, shall pay a penalty in double the amount of the tax.

SEC. 6. That upon the salaries of all salaried persons, serving in any capacity whatever, except upon the salaries of persons in the military or naval service, there shall be levied and collected a tax of one per centum on the gross amount of such salary, when not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars, and two per centum upon any excess over that amount, to be levied and collected at the end of each year, in the manner prescribed for other taxes enumerated in this act: Provided, That no taxes shall be imposed by virtue of this act on the salary of any person receiving a salary not exceeding one thousand dollars per annum, or at a like rate for another period of time longer or shorter.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be assessed and ascertained, on the first day of January next, or as soon thereafter as practicable, the income and profits derived by each person, joint stock company and corporation, from every occupation, employment or business, whether registered or not, in which they may have been engaged, and from every investment of labor, skill, property or money, and the income and profits derived from any source whatever, except salaries, during the calendar year preceeding the said first day of January next; and the said income and profits shall be ascertained, assessed and taxed in the manner hereinafter prescribed:

I. If the income be derived from the rent of houses, lands, tenements, manufacturing or mining establishments, fixtures and machinery, mills, springs of salt or oil, or veins of coal, iron or other minerals, there shall be deducted from the gross amount of the annual rent a sum sufficient for the necessary annual repairs, not exceeding ten per centum on said rent, except that the rent derived from houses shall be subject to a deduction not exceeding five per centum for annual repairs.

II. If the income be derived from any manufacturing or mining business, there shall be deducted from the gross value of the products of the year—first, the rent of the establishment and fixtures, if actually rented and not owned by the persons prosecuting the business; second, the cost of the labor actually hired and paid for; third, the actual cost of the raw material purchased and manufactured; fourth, if the income be derived from the production of pig metal or bloom iron, from the ore, there shall be deducted the cost of labor, food and necessary repairs.

III. If the income be derived from navigating enterprises, there shall be deducted from the gross earnings, including the value of freights on goods shipped by the person running the vessel, the hire of the boat or vessel, if not owned by the person running the same, or if owned by him, a reasonable allowance for the wear and tear of the same, not exceeding ten per centum per annum, and also the cost of running the boat or vessel.

IV. If the income be derived by the tax-payer from boat or ship building, there shall be deducted from the gross receipts of his occupation, including the value of the boat or ship when finished, if built for himself, the cost of the labor actually hired and paid by himself, and the prime cost of the materials, if purchased by him.

V. If the income be derived by the tax-payer from the sale of merchandise or any other property, real or personal, there shall be deducted from the gross amount of sales the prime cost of the property sold, including the cost of transportation, salaries of clerks actually paid and the rent of the buildings employed in the business, if hired and not owned by himself.

VI. If the income be derived by the tax-payer from any other occupation, profession, employment or business, there shall be deducted from the gross amount of fees, compensation, profits, earnings or commissions, the salaries of clerks actually paid, and the rent of the office or other building used in the business, if hired and not owned by himself, the cost of labor actually paid, and not owned by himself, and the cost of material other than machinery purchased for the use of his business, or to be converted into some other form in the course of his business, and in the case of mutual insurance companies the amount of losses paid by them during the year. The income derived from all other sources shall be subject to no deduction whatever, nor shall foreigners be subject to a tax upon any other income than that derived from property owned, or occupations or employments pursued by them within the Confederate States; and in estimating incomes there shall be included the interest, dividends, profits or other proceeds of money or credits of every description, on which such interest, dividends, profits or other proceeds shall have accrued for the year, whether received or not, and the value of the estimated annual rental of all dwelling-houses, buildings or building-lots in cities, towns or villages, occupied by the owners, or owned and not occupied or hired, and the value of the estimated annual hire of all slaves, not engaged on plantations or farms, and not employed in some business or occupations, the profits of which are taxed as income under this act. When the income shall be thus ascertained, all of those which do not exceed five hundred dollars per annum, shall be exempt from taxation. On all incomes received during the year over five hundred dollars and not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars, a tax of five per cent. shall be paid. On all incomes over fifteen hundred dollars, and less than three thousand dollars, five per cent. shall be paid on the first fifteen hundred dollars and ten per cent. on all excess. On all incomes of or over three thousand dollars and less than five thousand dollars, a tax of ten per cent. shall be paid. On all incomes of (or) over five thousand dollars, and less than ten thousand dollars, a tax of twelve and a half per cent. shall be paid; and on all incomes of (or) over ten thousand dollars, a tax of fifteen per cent. shall be paid. All joint stock companies and corporations shall reserve one-tenth of the annual earnings set apart for dividend and reserve fund, to be paid to the collector of the Confederate tax, and the dividend then paid to the stockholder shall not be estimated as a part of his income for the purposes of this act. All persons shall give in an estimate of their income and profits derived from any other source whatever, and in so doing shall first state the gross amount of their receipts as individuals or members of a firm or partnership, and also state particularly each item for which a deduction is to be made and the amount to be deducted for it: Provided, That the incomes and profits upon which the above tax is to be imposed, shall not be deemed to include the products of lands, which are taxed in kind as hereinafter described: Provided further, That in case the annual earnings of said joint stock companies and corporations set apart as aforesaid, shall give a profit of more than ten and less than twenty per cent. upon their capital stock paid in, one-eighth of said sum so set apart shall be paid as a tax to the collector aforesaid, and in case said sum so set apart shall give a profit of more than twenty per cent. on their capital stock paid in, one-sixth thereof shall be reserved and paid as aforesaid. The tax levied in this section shall be paid on the first day of January next, and on the first day of January of each year thereafter.

SEC. 8. That if the assessor shall be dissatisfied with the statement or estimate of incomes and profits derived from any source whatever, other than products in kind, which the tax-payer is required to render, or with any deduction claimed by said tax-payer, he shall select one disinterested citizen of the vicinage as a referee, and the tax-payer shall select another, and the two thus selected shall call in a third, who shall investigate and determine the facts in reference to said estimates and deductions, and fix the amount on income and profits on which the tax-payer shall be assessed, and a certificate, signed by a majority of the referees, shall be conclusive as to the amount of income and profits on which the tax-payer shall be assessed: Provided, That if any person shall fail or refuse to render the statement or estimate aforesaid, or shall fail or refuse to select a referee as aforesaid, the assessor shall select three referees, who shall fix the amount of income and profits on which the tax-payer shall be assessed, from the best evidence they can obtain, and a certificate signed by a majority of said referees, shall be conclusive on the tax-payer: And provided further, That in any case submitted to referees, if they, or a majority of them, shall find and certify that the statement or estimate of income and profits rendered by the tax-payer does not contain more than four-fifths of the true and real amount of his taxable income and profits, then the tax-payer, in addition to the income tax on the true amount of his income and profits, ascertained and assessed by the referees, shall pay ten per centum on the amount of said income tax, and the assessor shall be entitled to one-fifth of said additional ten per centum over and above all other fees and allowances: And provided further, That the assessor may administer oaths to referees, the tax-payer, and any witness before the referees, in regard to said estimate and any deduction claimed, or any fact in reference thereto, in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 9. On all profits made by any person, partnership or corporation, during the year eighteen hundred and sixty-two, by the purchase within the Confederate States, and sale during the said year, of any flour, corn, bacon, pork, oats, hay, rice, salt, iron or the manufactures of iron, sugar, molasses made of cane, leather, woollen cloths, shoes, boots, blankets and cotton cloths, a tax of ten per centum shall be levied and collected, to be paid on the first day of July next: Provided, That the tax imposed by this section shall not apply to purchases and sales made in the due course of the regular retail business, and shall not continue beyond the present year.

SEC. 10. That each farmer and planter in the Confederate States, shall pay and deliver to the Confederate Government, of the products of the present year, one-tenth of the wheat, corn, oats, rye, buck-wheat or rice, Irish potatoes, and of the cured hay and fodder; also one-tenth of the sugar, molasses made of cane, or of sorghum, where more than thirty gallons are made, cotton, wool and tobacco; the cotton ginned and packed in some secure manner, and tobacco stripped and packed in boxes; the cotton to be delivered by him on or before the first day of March, and the tobacco on or before the first day of July, next after their production. Each farmer or planter shall deliver to the Confederate Government, for its use, one-tenth of the peas, beans, and ground peas produced and gathered by him during the present year. As soon as each of the aforesaid crops are made ready for market, the tax assessor, in case of disagreement between him and the tax-payer, shall proceed to estimate the same, in the following manner: The assessor and tax-payer shall each select a disinterested freeholder from the vicinage, who may call in a third, in case of a difference of opinion, to settle the matter in dispute; or if the tax-payer neglects or refuses to select one such freeholder, the said assessor shall select two, who shall proceed to assess the crops as herein provided. They shall ascertain the amount of the crops, either by actual measurement or by computing the contents of the rooms or houses in which they are held, when a correct computation is practicable by such a method, and the appraisers shall then estimate, under oath, the quantity and quality of said crops, including what may have been sold or consumed by the producer, prior to said estimate, whether gathered or not, excepting from said estimates such portion of said crops as may be necessary to raise and fatten the hogs of such farmer, planter or grazier for pork: Provided, That the following persons shall be exempt from the payment of the tax in kind, imposed by this section, viz:

I. Each head of a family not worth more (than) five hundred dollars.

II. Each head of a family with minor children, not worth more than five hundred dollars for himself, and one hundred dollars for each minor living with him, and five hundred dollars in addition thereto for each minor son he has living or may have lost, or had disabled in the military or naval service.

III. Each officer, soldier or seaman, in the Army or Navy, or who has been discharged therefrom for wounds, and is not worth more than one thousand dollars.

IV. Each widow of any officer, soldier or seaman, who has died in the military or naval service, the widow not worth more than one thousand dollars: Provided, That in all cases where the farmer or planter does not produce more than fifty bushels of Irish potatoes, two hundred bushels of corn, or twenty bushels of peas and beans he shall not be subject to the tax in kind on said articles, or either of them; and the forage derived from the corn plant shall, also be exempt in all cases where the corn is not taxed in kind; neither shall any farmer or planter, who does not produce more than ten pounds of wool, or more than fifteen pounds of ginned cotton for each member of the family, be subject to said tax in kind. The tax assessor, after allowing the exemptions authorized in this section, shall assess the value of the portion of said crops to which the Government is entitled, and shall give a written statement of this estimate to the collector, and a copy of the same to the producer. The said producer shall be required to deliver the wheat, corn, oats, rye, buckwheat, rice, peas, beans, cured hay and fodder, sugar, molasses of cane or sorghum, wool, thus to be paid as a tithe in kind, after they have been estimated as aforesaid, in such form and ordinary marketable condition as may be usual in the section in which they are to be delivered, within thirty days from the date of notice given by the agent of collection that he is ready to receive such produce, (except cotton and tobacco shall be delivered in the manner and at the times hereinbefore provided), at some depot not more than twelve miles from the place of production, and if not delivered by the times and in the order stated, he shall be liable to pay five times the estimated value of the portion aforesaid, to be collected by the tax collector as hereinafter prescribed: Provided, That post quartermasters may direct such delivery to be made at any time within five months after the date of said estimates, under the sanction of the penalty aforesaid, and that producers shall be paid the expenses of the transportation of their tithes from the place of production to the place of delivery, at the usual rates of compensation paid by the Government in the State in which the delivery is made. Such delivery, when required to be made of grain in bushels, shall be made in bushels according to the Government standard of weight per bushel: Provided, That the Government shall be bound to furnish to the producer sacks for the delivery of such articles of grain as require to be put in sacks for transportation, and shall allow to the producers of molasses the cost of the barrels containing the same. The said estimates shall be conclusive evidence of the amount in money of the tax due by the producer to the Government, and the collector is hereby authorized to proceed to collect the same by issuing a warrant of distress from his office, under his signature, in the nature of a writ of fieri facias, and by virtue of the same to seize and sell any personal property on the premises of the tax-payer or elsewhere, belonging to him, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose of paying the tax, and the increase aforesaid and costs; and said sale shall be made in the manner and form, and after the notice required by the laws of the several States, for judicial sales of personal property; and the said warrant of distress may be executed by the tax collector, or any deputy appointed by him for that purpose, and the deputy executing the warrant shall be entitled to the same fees as are allowed in the respective States, to sheriffs executing writs of fieri facias; said fees to be paid as cost by the tax-payer: Provided, That in all cases where the assessor and tax-payer agree on the assessment of the crops, and the value of the portion thereof to which the Government is entitled, no other assessment shall be necessary; but the estimate agreed on shall be reduced to writing, and signed by the assessor and tax-payer, and have the same force and effect as the assessment and estimate of disinterested freeholders, hereinbefore mentioned; and two copies of such assessment and estimate, thus agreed on and signed as aforesaid, shall be made, and one delivered to the producer, and the other to the collector: And provided further, That the assessor is hereby authorized to administer oaths to the tax-payer and to witness in regard to any item of the estimate herein required to be made: And provided further, When agricultural produce in kind is paid for taxes, if payment be made by a tenant, who is bound to pay his rent in kind, the tenth part of said rent in kind shall be paid in kind by the tenant to the Government, as and for the tax of the lessor on said rent; and the receipt of the Government officer shall release the lessor from all obligation to include such rent in kind in his statement of income; and discharge the tenant from so much of his rent to the lessor.

SEC. 11. That every farmer, planter or grazier, or other person who slaughters hogs, shall exhibit to the assessor on or about the first of March, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, an account of all the hogs he may have slaughtered since the passage of this act, and before that time. After the delivery of this estimate to the post quartermaster hereinafter mentioned, by the assessor, the said farmer, planter, grazier, or other person who slaughters hogs shall deliver an equivalent for one-tenth of the same in cured bacon, at the rate of sixty pounds of bacon to the one hundredweight of pork; that on the first of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, an estimate shall be made, as hereinbefore provided, of the value of all neat cattle, horses, mules not used in cultivation, and asses owned by each person in the Confederate States, and upon such value the said owner shall be taxed one per centum, to be paid on the first day of January next ensuing. If the grazier, planter or farmer shall have sold beeves since the passage of this act, and prior to the first day of November, the gross proceeds of such sales shall be estimated and taxed as income, after deducting therefrom the money actually paid for the purchase of such beeves, if they have been actually purchased, and the value of the corn or peas consumed by them. The estimate of these items shall be made, in case of disagreement between the assessor and tax-payer, as herein provided in other cases of income tax: Provided, That no farmer, planter, grazier, or other person, who shall not slaughter more than two hundred and fifty pounds of net pork during any year, shall be subject to the bacon tithe imposed by this section; and every officer, soldier or seaman, in the military or naval service, or who may have been discharged therefrom on account of wounds, or physical disability, and any widow of such officer, soldier or seaman, or any head of a family, who does not own more than two cows and calves, shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this section on neat cattle.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of War shall divide the service of the Quartermaster's Department into two branches—one herein denominated post quartermasters, for the collection of the articles paid for taxes in kind, and the other for distribution to the proper points for supplying the Army, and for delivering cotton and tobacco to the agents of the Secretary of the Treasury. The tax assessor shall transfer the estimate of articles due from each person by way of a tax in kind, to the duly authorized post quartermaster, taking from the said quartermaster a receipt, which shall be filed as a voucher with the chief collector in settling his account, and a copy of this receipt shall be furnished by the chief collector to the auditor settling the post quartermaster's account as a charge against him. The post quartermaster receiving the estimate shall collect from the tax-payer the articles which it specifies, and which he is bound to pay and deliver as a tax to the Confederate Government. The post quartermaster shall be liable for the safe custody of the articles placed in his care, and shall account for the same by showing that after proper deductions from unavoidable loss, the residue has been delivered to the distributing agents as evidenced by their receipts. The said post quartermasters shall also state the accounts of the quartermasters receiving from him the articles delivered in payment of taxes in kind at his depot, and make a monthly report of the same to such officer as the Secretary of War may designate: Provided, That in case the post quartermaster shall be unable to collect the tax in kind specified in the estimate delivered to him as aforesaid, he shall deliver to the district tax collector said estimate as a basis for the distress warrant authorized to be issued, and take a receipt therefor, and forward the same to the chief tax collector as a credit in the statement of the accounts of said post quartermaster: Provided, That any partial payment of said tax in kind shall be indorsed on said estimate before delivering the same to the district tax collector as aforesaid, and the receipt given to him therefor by the district tax collector, shall specify such partial payment. When the articles thus collected, through the payment of taxes in kind have been received at the depot as aforesaid, they shall be distributed to the agents of the Secretary of the Treasury, if they consist of cotton or tobacco, or if they be suitable for forage or subsistence, to such places and in such manner as the Secretary of War may prescribe. The wool collected under this act shall be retained by the Quartermaster's Department as supplies. Should the Secretary of War find that some of the agricultural produce thus paid in and suitable for forage and subsistence, has been or will be deposited in places where it cannot be used either directly or indirectly for these purposes, he shall cause the same to be sold in such manner as he may prescribe, and the proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the Treasury of the Confederate States. Should, however, the Secretary of War notify the Secretary of the Treasury that it would be impracticable for him to collect or use the articles taxed in kind, or any of them to be received in certain districts or localities, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall proceed to collect in said district or locality the money value of said articles specified in said estimate and not required in kind, and said money value shall be due on the first day of January in each and every year, and be collected as soon thereafter as practicable; and where in districts heretofore, or which may hereafter be ascertained to be so impracticable, quartermasters or commissaries serving with troops in the field, shall have collected or may hereafter collect from producers any portion of their tax in kind, the receipts of such officers shall be held good to the producers against the collection of the money value of their tax, to the extent and value of such portions as may have been or may be hereafter collected. And where assessments in practicable localities have been made and transferred to post quartermasters, and transportation is difficult to be obtained, the supply of grain sacks insufficient, or the amount of produce receivable is too small to justify the expenses of collection, post quartermasters, with approval of their superior officer, shall be authorized to transfer the estimates to district collectors, to be collected in their money value only.

SEC. 13. That the assessors, whose duty it is under said act to estimate the taxes in kind, shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, and their duties shall be the same, and the duties shall be executed in the same manner as prescribed by sections ten, eleven and twelve of this act, in reference to the estimates and assessment of taxes in kind on agricultural products and slaughtered hogs; and there may be one assessor appointed for each practicable tax district, and he shall take the oath as assessor of taxes in kind, prescribed by section five of the act for the assessment and collection of taxes, approved May first, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, which oath shall be delivered to such officer as the Secretary of War may designate. And the assessors of taxes in kind shall be separate and distinct from the assessors of money tax, and shall be subject to the exclusive direction and control of the War Department, and shall receive the same compensation, for such time as they may be employed, as is allowed to other agents of the Quartermaster's Department.

SEC. 14. That the estimates of incomes and profits, other than those payable in kind, and the statements or bills for the amount of the specific tax on occupations, employments, business and professions, and of taxes on gross sales, shall be delivered by the assessor to the collector of the district, who shall give him a receipt for the same, and the said assessor shall file his receipt with the chief tax collector of the State, and the collector of the district holding said estimates, statements or bills, shall proceed to collect the same from the taxpayer. The money thus collected shall be paid to the chief tax collector of the State, and the estimates, statements or bills aforesaid, shall be arranged by the assessor, and general lists shall be made from them in the same manner and for the same purposes designated by section thirteen of the assessment act.

SEC. 15. That every person who, as trustee, guardian, tutor, curator, or committee, executor or administrator, or as agent, attorney in fact, or factor of any person or persons, whether residing in the Confederate States or not, and every receiver in chancery, clerk, register, or other officer of any court, shall be answerable for the doing of all such acts, matters and things as shall be required to be done in order to the assessment of the money, property, products and income under their control and the payment of taxes thereon, and shall be indemnified against all and every person for all payments on account of taxes herein specified, and shall be responsible for all taxes due from the estates, income, money or property in their possession or under their control.

SEC. 16. The income and moneys of hospitals, asylums, churches, schools and colleges shall be exempt from taxation under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 17. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to make all rules and regulations necessary to the operations of this act and not inconsistent herewith.

SEC. 18. This act shall be in force for two years after the expiration of the present year, and the taxes herein imposed for the present year shall be levied and collected each year thereafter in the manner and form herein prescribed, and for the said time of two years, unless this act shall be sooner repealed.

Approved February 17, 1864.

STATE OF GEORGIA, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Atlanta, February 17, 1864.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR,

Richmond, Va.:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of my returned communication to you of the 30th ultimo. I respectfully express my thanks for the promptness with which my communication was honored. I am fearful, however, that the indorsement of Quartermaster-General A. R. Lawton will not remove the impediments thrown in the way of my agents by military commanders. I therefore inclose you this indorsement, and beg that you will furnish me such an order as will enable me to secure the supplies which General Lawton expresses a willingness I should collect. It is far from being the intention of this department to come into competition with officers of the Confederate States. Our only desire is to relieve the necessities of Georgia troops in Confederate service. To this end we are anxious to secure supplies in Florida, which, if not collected by us, may be lost, either through the approach of the enemy or the forgetfulness of our own people. If the order solicited be granted it will assist this department materially in shoeing and clothing those troops from Georgia whose wants may exceed the supplies of the Confederate Quartermaster's Department during the coming autumn and winter, should the necessities of our country then demand their presence on the field.

Pleading, then, the necessities of our suffering troops as an apology for my importunity, and trusting to your usual promptness,

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

IRA R. FOSTER,

Quartermaster-General of Georgia.

Governor Z. B. VANCE,
Raleigh, N. C.:

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your private letter of the 4th instant informing me that upon reflection you doubt the propriety of publishing in full my letter according to the permission given in answer to your request, and that you propose to have the substance of it published in the Fayetteville Observer.*

You must pardon me for declining to have my correspondence thus changed for presentation to the public. You can use your own discretion as to the publication of my letter as it was written to you. Your letter of the 4th instant was laid on my table with a mass of correspondence and escaped my attention, which fact must form my apology for the delay in this answer.

I remain, very truly and respectfully, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Raleigh, February 17, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: You will see by the inclosed letter from J. M. Seixast the result of my efforts to get back the cotton loaned the Confederate Government and which you ordered to be returned. It amounts practically to a refusal of payment and to a stoppage of my shipments altogether, as it is utterly impossible to get a train to bring cotton from Georgia or anywhere else. If the Confederate Government is determined to impose upon the owners of these steamers the tax of one-third their capacity it seems unreasonable to deprive them of the means of running them altogether. That I have been always anxious to accommodate the General Government in every possible way I think may be safely asserted, but that I have been disinterested in doing so my reward will testify beyond a doubt.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

Z. B. VANCE.

General R. E. LEE,
Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: The pressure of business incident to the close of the session of Congress, engrossing every moment of my time, must be my excuse for not having sooner replied to your letter of the 16th instant.† I am happy to concur with you entirely in thinking it advisable to obtain supplies of provisions in exchange for cotton and tobacco, even if portions of the latter are received by the enemy in such transactions. Indeed, I had anticipated your views by instructions to the commissaries to pay for all meat brought to them from the border counties, whether from within the enemy's lines or not, at the option of the parties, in such products. Nor in my anxiety to provide for the Army have I hesitated to make contracts, some of them of large amount, with parties believed to be loyal and yet capable of carrying them out, for the delivery of provisions and other necessary stores to be brought from within the enemy's lines. Some provisions have already been obtained in this way, and strong confidence is felt that the quantity will be largely increased. Full confidence is felt in your own discretion with regard to such arrangements, and you are authorized to make them, if opportunity offers, within your command.

Very respectfully,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

SIR: My last dispatch was No. 5A, of 12th instant (duplicate of which I inclose). I have also the honor to inclose account current with your Department to 31st of December, with memorandum of payments to Lieutenant-Colonel Rhett;‡ since that date, by which you will perceive I am in advance beyond warrants on hand £108,629½=fr. 2,737,442.16, besides the drafts of Maj. R. P. Waller, of which I advised you in my last. Major Huse further owes, besides the sums I have advanced him, the sum of £127,543 12s. 4d. On the other hand, Mr. W. G. Crenshaw has a draft on me for £40,000, and there is a balance still unpaid of £35,000 on a warrant for £85,000 held by Maj. J. B. Ferguson.

Inclosed you will also find copy of a letter received yesterday from London from Major Huse, which will show you the present condition of the Isaac, Campbell & Co. accounts. I have no communications direct from Messrs. Ball, Quilter & Co. All these developments only increase my anxiety to hear that you are in possession or control of the £50,000 gold in the Confederacy. I note your remarks and instructions relative to the settlement of the account of Isaac, Campbell & Co., and will endeavor to arrange it as may seem best, with due regard to justice and the credit of the Government, which will be best preserved by avoiding any unnecessary éclat.

With regard to your remarks relative to Major Huse, I am hardly ready at this moment to expressing final opinion, but I deem it due to him to say that although he has made some very serious mistakes, I think there is no good reason to suspect his integrity, and that he has always sought what seemed the best interests of the Government, and has with all his mistakes really been of great service and done great good, and that you should take into consideration the immense labors which he has been compelled to discharge almost singly, and which forced him to place great confidence in some leading house, which was unfortunately, as you surmise, much misplaced in the case of Isaac, Campbell & Co., but I can see no reason to believe there has been any collusion with them. In confirmation of the above views, I inclose you letters from Hon. John Slidell and Emile V. Erlanger, which you will perceive do not agree with the charges of extravagance against him; and I will further add that these opinions are, I believe, concurred in by the leading houses with whom he has dealt, and by the accountants examining his accounts.

With much respect, your obedient servant,

C. J. McRAE,

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch of the 29th of December inclosing copy of the one of the 26th of September. Of the contents of the latter I had been fully informed before I wrote you on the 18th of December.

I am also in receipt of a letter from the Quartermaster-General, A. R. Lawton, approved by you, of the 17th of December, informing me that Maj. R. P. Waller, the purchasing officer of the Quartermaster's Department at Nassau, has been authorized to draw on me at sixty and ninety days' sight for £20,000. With these letters came one from Major Waller, advising that he had drawn for £11,436 18s.

1d., and that he would soon draw for the balance. Drafts for £6,648 9s. 7d. have already appeared. My dispatches to you of the 27th of November and 18th of December, Nos. 3 and 4 of series A, have fully informed you that there is no money in my hands for you or any other department of the Government. The fact is that the loan account has already been overdrawn by over £200,000, but as the warrants in excess are in the hands of our own officers or people, to wit, Major Huse, Captain Bulloch, Major Ferguson, and Captain Crenshaw, our credit does not suffer except as it is injured by these officers not being able to meet their engagements. This, however, is not the case with the drafts of Major Waller, which have passed into the hands of third parties, and I have concluded to accept them, although I do not see clearly where I am to get the money to meet them. I inclose a copy of a letter which I have to-day written to Major Waller, which I hope will meet with your approval.

I note what you say about the account of Major Huse and Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell & Co. On the 22d ultimo Mr. Bloodgood and myself wrote you on that subject. To-day we are informed by Major Huse that S. Isaac, Campbell & Co. have presented a new account, but as neither of us have seen it, and Messrs. Quilter, Ball & Co. have not reported on it, we can give you no further information, and judging from the tenor of your letter I do not suppose you care to be troubled with the matter until we are prepared to make a final report. It is quite evident that the house expected to make larger profits by their connection with our Government, and many of their accounts will not stand a strict scrutiny; but as the Government seems disposed to connect all its operations for procuring supplies with private enterprise, we shall gain nothing by having broken with that firm. The fable of the fox and the flies is as true now as it was in days of Æsop.

If some such policy as was recommended in my dispatch of the 7th of October had been adopted I could have obtained as many boats as might have been desired to run on Government account alone. I shall write you more fully on this subject by the Bermuda mail, which leaves this day week.

With much respect, your obedient servant,

C. J. McRAE,
Agent, &c.

Maj. RICHARD P. WALLER, C. S. Army,
Nassau, New Providence:

SIR: I am receipt of your letter of the 16th ultimo, advising me that you had been authorized by the Quartermaster-General, approved by the Secretary of War, to draw on me at Paris for £10,000 at sixty days, and £10,000 at ninety days. I am also in receipt of a letter from the Quartermaster-General, approved by the Secretary of War, informing me that such authority had been given to you, and asking me to meet your drafts from any funds of the War Department at my command. There are no funds of the War Department at my command, and I regret that you drew the drafts without consulting me. When the Secretary of War authorized you to draw on me I suppose he was under the impression that the proceeds of all cotton shipped to Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm & Co. on account of the various bureaux of his Department would be subject to my control. Owing, however, to the want of proper instructions Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm & Co. do not feel authorized to transfer the funds of the Department from one bureau to another on my order; besides, these gentlemen inform me that the proceeds of all cotton received by them on account of the War Department are always anticipated by drafts from yourself and the other purchasing officers at Nassau and Bermuda.

You will thus see the dilemma in which I am placed by the appearance of your drafts. To refuse them would entirely destroy your credit at Nassau, and to accept them without knowing where the money is to be had to meet them would have quite as fatal an effect here and in England, where our credit again begins to look up. I shall, however, take the latter risk, and accept the bills you have already drawn, provided they do not exceed £20,000; but you must not on any account draw again unless I should advise you that I am in funds, as it would only result in having your bills dishonored. When the Secretary of War gave you authority to draw on me he was under the entire misapprehension as to the state of our finances in Europe. Of the drafts advised of in your letter of the 16th of January the following have been presented and will be accepted:

B. Whitworth & Bro.....	400	0	0
Jerney & Mueller.....	1,600	0	0
Bowman, Tettler & Co.....	1,600	0	0
					3,600	0	0

Ninety days:

W. B. Sterrett, esq.....	1,062	10	0
Jerney & Mueller.....	1,510	19	7
R. Hagedorn, esq.....	475	0	0
					6,648	9	7

Two other drafts of £250 each, dated 14th of January, in favor of H. W. Goldning, esq., and Messrs. Servine, Morris & Co. (Nos. 265 and 269), have been presented, which are not advised of in your letter; consequently they will not be accepted until I have further advice from you. In all instances when you draw on me advise me of the same.

With much respect, your obedient servant,

C. J. MCRAE,

3 MORGATE STREET, E. C., LONDON,
February 17, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: Major Huse desires me to say that the new accounts have been received from Messrs. Isaac, Campbell & Co., but they appear to be entirely unsatisfactory. While some corrections have been properly made the accounts are deficient in many respects; the matter of commissions is sought to be evaded by deducting them.

Major Huse has handed the papers to Messrs. Quilter, Ball & Co. to elicit their opinion before submitting them to you. They will throw some important light on the accounts as originally rendered.

I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
COLIN MCKINSIE.

PARIS, February 14, 1864.

Hon. C. J. McRAE:

MY DEAR SIR: I cheerfully comply with your request to state what I know of Major Huse in connection with certain rumors respecting his mode of living, &c. I have seen much of Major Huse since I have been in Europe, and everything that I have seen has impressed me most favorably in his behalf. He lives with great simplicity and economy in the suburbs of Paris, occupying a house belonging to Messrs. Erlanger & Co., for which I have always understood that he pays no rent. He has always seemed to me to be animated by an anxious desire to perform most scrupulously and consistently the duties intrusted to him.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN SLIDELL.

PARIS, February 13, 1864.

C. J. McRAE, Esq.,

48 Avenue Gabrielle, Paris:

DEAR SIR: In the correspondence published in the New York Herald, and attributed to Mr. Charles Lamar, I read that Major Huse is said "to have received from his English friends a country house at Auteuil, near Paris, where he lives in great style." Now, I think it my duty to inform you that the country house where Major Huse lives is mine; that I am the owner of several country houses in Auteuil which I do not like to let, and that I have offered Major Huse and Colonel Bulloch the use of one of these houses, which is furnished, during their stay in Paris and as long as I should not want the house myself. I am not called to express any opinion on the character of Major Huse, but I will say so much that, when in our early negotiations about the loan we desired Major Huse to take out the proposition for the Confederate States (which he was willing to do), and offered him for the danger he would be exposed to by running the blockade a compensation, he declined it, saying that in his capacity as a Confederate officer he thought he had no right to accept it.

A man's character is easily stained by false assertions, and I think it a duty to establish truth whenever to my knowledge false statements have been made.

Believe me, dear sir, very truly, yours,

EMILE V. ERLANGER.

Your suggestion, made by letter of the same date, to break up certain of the smaller hospitals in Virginia has been referred to the Surgeon-General for consideration and report. I am inclined to think, from my personal knowledge, that the hospital at Huguenot Springs, from its vicinity to Richmond and the advantages it affords, had best be continued. In respect to the others, my impression inclines to concur with you.

GENERAL ORDERS, }	ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 21. }	Richmond, February 20, 1864.

The following act of Congress is published for the information of the Army:

AN ACT to reduce the currency and to authorize a new issue of notes and bonds.

SECTION 1. The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the holders of all Treasury notes above the denomination of five dollars, not bearing interest, shall be allowed until the first day of April, 1864, east of the Mississippi River, and until the 1st day of July, 1864, west of the Mississippi River, to fund the same, and until the periods and at the places stated the holders of all such Treasury notes shall be allowed to fund the same in registered bonds payable twenty years after their date, bearing interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, payable on the 1st day of January and July of each year.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue the bonds required for the funding provided for in the preceding section; and until the bonds can be prepared, he may issue certificates to answer the purpose. Such bonds and certificates shall be receivable, without interest, in payment of all Government dues payable in the year 1864, except export and import duties.

SEC. 3. That all Treasury notes of the denomination of one hundred dollars not bearing interest, which shall not be presented for funding under the provisions of the first section of this act, shall, from and after the first day of April, 1864, east of the Mississippi River, and the first day of July, 1864, west of the Mississippi River, cease to be receivable in the payment of public dues, and said notes, if not so presented at that time, shall, in addition to the tax of thirty-three and one-third cents imposed in the fourth section of this act, be subject to a tax of ten per cent. per month until so presented; which taxes shall attach to said notes wherever circulated, and shall be deducted from the face of said notes whenever presented for payment or for funding, and said notes shall not be exchangeable for the new issue of Treasury notes provided for in this act.

SEC. 4. That on all said Treasury notes not funded or used in payment of taxes at the dates and places prescribed in the first section of this act, there shall be levied at said dates and places a tax of thirty-three and one-third cents for every dollar promised on the face of said notes. Said tax shall attach to said notes wherever circulated, and shall be collected by deducting the same at the Treasury, its depositories, and by the tax collectors, and by all Government officers receiving the same, whenever presented for payment or for funding, or in payment of Government dues, or for postage, or in exchange for new notes as hereinafter provided, and said Treasury notes shall be fundable in bonds, as provided in the first section of this act, until the 1st day of January, 1865, at the rate of sixty-six and two-thirds cents on the dollar, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time between the 1st of April, east, and the 1st of July, 1864, west of the Mississippi River, and the 1st of January, 1865, to substitute and exchange new Treasury notes for the same, at the rate of sixty-six and two-thirds cents on the dollar: Provided, That notes of the denomination of one hundred dollars shall not be entitled to the privilege of said exchange: Provided further, That the right to fund any of said Treasury notes after first day of January, 1865, is hereby taken away: And provided further, That upon all such Treasury notes which may remain outstanding on the first day of January, 1865, and which may not be exchanged for new Treasury notes, as herein provided, a tax of one hundred per cent. is hereby imposed.

SEC. 5. That after the first day of April next all authority heretofore given to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue Treasury notes shall be, and [the same] is hereby, revoked: Provided, The Secretary of the Treasury may, after that time, issue new Treasury notes, in such form as he may prescribe, payable two years after the ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States, said new issues to be receivable in payment of all public dues except export and import duties, and to be issued in exchange for old notes at the rate of two dollars of the new for three dollars of the old issues, whether said old notes be surrendered for exchange by the holders thereof or be received into the Treasury under the provisions of this act; and the holders of the new notes or of the old notes, except those of the denomination of one hundred dollars after they are reduced to sixty-six and two-thirds cents on the dollar by the tax aforesaid, may convert the same into call certificates, bearing interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, and payable two years after the ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States, unless sooner converted into new notes.

SEC. 6. That to pay the expenses of the Government not otherwise provided for, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue six per cent. bonds, to an amount not exceeding five hundred millions of dollars, the principal and interest whereof shall be free from taxation; and for the payment of the interest thereon the entire net receipts of any export duty hereafter laid on the value of all cotton, tobacco, and naval stores, which shall be exported from the Confederate States, and the net proceeds of the import duties now laid, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay annually the interest, are hereby specially pledged: Provided, That the duties now laid upon imports and hereby pledged shall hereafter be paid in specie, or in sterling exchange, or in the coupons of said bonds.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time, as the wants of the Treasury may require it, to sell or hypothecate for Treasury notes said bonds or any part thereof, upon the best terms he can, so as to meet appropriations by Congress and at the same time reduce and restrict the amount of the circulation in Treasury notes within reasonable and safe limits.

SEC. 8. The bonds authorized by the sixth section of this act may be either registered or coupon bonds, as the parties taking them may elect, and they may be exchanged for each other under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. They shall be for one hundred dollars, or some multiple of one hundred dollars, and shall, together with the coupons thereto attached, be in such form and of such authentication as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The interest shall be payable half yearly, on the first of January and July in each year—the principal shall be payable not less than thirty years from their date.

SEC. 9. All call certificates shall be fundable and shall be taxed in all respects, as is provided for the Treasury notes, into which they are convertible. If not converted before the time fixed for taxing the Treasury notes such certificates shall from that time bear interest upon only sixty-six and two-thirds cents for every dollar promised upon their face and shall be redeemable only in new Treasury notes at that rate, but after the passage of this act no call certificates shall be issued until after the first day of April, 1864.

SEC. 10. That if any bank of deposit shall give its depositors the bonds authorized by the 1st section of this act in exchange for their deposits and specify the same on the bonds by some distinctive mark or token, to be agreed upon with the Secretary of the Treasury, then the said depositor shall be entitled to receive the amount of said bonds in Treasury notes bearing no interest and outstanding at the passage of this act: Provided, The said bonds are presented before the privilege of funding said notes at par shall cease, as herein prescribed.

SEC. 11. That all Treasury notes heretofore issued of the denomination of five dollars shall continue to be receivable in payment of public dues, as provided by law, and fundable at par under the provisions of this act, until the 1st day of July, 1864, east, and until the 1st day of October, 1864, west of the Mississippi River, but after that time they shall be subject to a tax of thirty-three and one-third cents on every dollar promised on the face thereof, said tax to attach to said notes wherever circulated, and said notes to be fundable and exchangeable for new Treasury notes, as herein provided, subject to the deduction of said tax.

SEC. 12. That any State holding Treasury notes, received before the times herein fixed for taxing said notes, shall be allowed until the 1st day of January, 1865, to fund the same in six per cent. bonds of the Confederate States, payable twenty years after date, and the interest payable semi-annually. But all Treasury notes received by any State after the time fixed for taxing the same, as aforesaid, shall be held to have been received diminished by the amount of said tax. The discrimination between the notes subject to the tax and those not so subject shall be left to the good faith of each State and the certificate of the Governor thereof shall in each case be conclusive.

SEC. 13. That Treasury notes heretofore issued, bearing interest at the rate of seven dollars and thirty cents on the hundred dollars per annum, shall no longer be received in payment of public dues, but shall be deemed and considered bonds of the Confederate States, payable two years after a ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States, bearing the rate of interest specified on their face, payable on the first day of January in each and every year.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in case the exigencies of the Government should require it, to pay the demand of any public creditor whose debt may be contracted after the passage of this act, willing to receive the same in a certificate of indebtedness to be issued by said Secretary, in such form as he may deem proper, payable two years after a ratification of a treaty of peace with the United States, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually and transferable only by special indorsement under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and said certificate shall be exempt from taxation in principal and interest.

SEC. 15. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to increase the number of depositories so as to meet the requirements of this act, and with that view to employ such of the banks of the several States as he may deem expedient.

SEC. 16. The Secretary of the Treasury shall forthwith advertise this act in such newspapers published in the several States and by such other means as shall secure immediate publicity, and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall each cause it to be published in general orders for the information of the Army and Navy.

SEC. 17. The forty-second section of the act for the assessment and collection of taxes, approved May 1st, 1863, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 18. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the application of the holder of any call certificate—which by the first section of the act “to provide for the funding and further issue of Treasury notes,” approved March 23d, 1863, was required to be “thereafter deemed to be a bond”—to issue to such holder a bond therefor upon the terms provided by said act.

Approved February 17, 1864.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Columbia, February 20, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: The Hon. A. P. Aldrich, speaker of the House of Representatives and chief of my staff, comes to you possessed of my views, and fully authorized to represent me in reference to the interest of the State in the Bee ships. After the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, in which you say “that any vessel engaged by the State and carrying out for it the amount of cotton required by others to be carried out for the Department would not be interfered with or restrained,” I am surprised that the Secretary of the Navy should be allowed to take the State’s interest in the Alice, and that he now claims the one-third in the Fannie, just arrived. I am informed, moreover, that the States of North Carolina and Virginia have similar interests which are not interfered with. There may be some misapprehension on this point, and I trust it is not correct that such distinction is made. This is a matter of such interest to the people of the State, and heretofore in the field, that I feel it my duty to send in a special representative to confer with you upon it.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
M. L. BONHAM.

Whereas, in view of the pressing importance of making extraordinary efforts to produce as large crops as possible the present year; and whereas, the recent requisition by the Confederate authorities for slave labor to work on fortifications will, if carried out, interfere seriously with the farming productions of the State: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly, That the Governor of this State be respectfully requested to confer with the authorities of the Confederate States and urge upon them the necessity, in the present emergency, of releasing the slaves from said requisition, if in the judgment of the Confederate authorities this release may be granted consistently with the necessities of the military situation.

A copy from the rolls.

WM. F. GORDON, JR.,
Clerk of the House of Delegates and Keeper of Records.

[Indorsement.]

FEBRUARY 20, 1864.

His Excellency Governor SMITH:

It is with regret that I feel constrained not to defer to the expression of desire on the part of the General Assembly to which such deference is justly due. But the importance of completing the works for the defense of the Capital of the State and the Confederacy is great, and events of constant occurrence demonstrate that rather on the completeness and sufficiency of such defenses than on the number of troops which the exigencies of the service will allow to be retained here, must the safety of the city depend. The present, too, is believed to be the season of the year when most conveniently and with least sacrifice to the planting interests can slaves be spared. At this time the important work is that merely of preparation, of plowing and repairing fences and the like, which require few hands. Later, when the planting season commences, the laboring slaves are much more needed, and it has been the effort and desire of the Department so to arrange its calls as to liberate most or all the laborers by that more important season. In view of the whole case, it is hoped that the opinion of the Department to persist in the call will not be deemed either unreasonable or productive of just complaint.

Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
 No. 22. } Richmond, February 23, 1864.

I. Clause 3, paragraph II, General Orders, No. 75, 1863, is amended by adding after the words "as clerks" the words "or detailed men."

II. Clause 3, paragraph II, General Orders, No. 7, current series, is amended as follows: Persons liable to military service may volunteer in or be assigned to any company of artillery in service on the 16th of April, 1862, having less than eighty-four men upon the rolls.

III. Non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates detached from their commands, by furlough or detail, for a longer period than thirty days, will be furnished by company commanders with but one descriptive list, upon which the soldier's account with the Government (pay, clothing, and commutation for furlough, under the act of Congress, February 7, 1863) will be stated. Soldiers in hospitals, not furnished with descriptive lists by company commanders when furloughed, will have such lists provided by the surgeon in charge.

Payments made will be indorsed on the descriptive lists, which will be returned to the soldier, and transportation furnished in kind under the act cited will be indorsed on the descriptive list and also on the furlough.

When the soldier rejoins his command the descriptive list will be returned to the company commander, who will, after recording the payments made, destroy it.

Quartermasters are prohibited from paying soldiers absent, as set forth in this order, from their commands, except in the manner herein ordered.

IV. Persons not liable to conscription who may wish to volunteer may be enrolled as volunteers, and receive transportation to the company they select. The enrollment will be communicated by the enrolling officer in each instance to the company commander.

V. Soldiers who furnish an able-bodied recruit, who is mustered into service under the provisions of the preceding paragraph, are entitled, when on furlough, to transportation home and back.

VI. The provisions of paragraph V, General Orders, No. 31, 1863, are held to apply to non-commissioned officers and privates entitled to furlough under act of Congress approved February 7, 1863. Re-elected officers are not allowed transportation, or commutation in lieu thereof, under any of the acts providing furloughs, bounty, and transportation to persons re-enlisted or mustered into the service.

In each case the commutation allowed in lieu of furlough will be paid by the quartermaster of the command to which the soldier belongs, and by no other quartermaster.

VII. Chaplains may receive the rations in kind allowed them by law, or commute them at the Government price.

VIII. The following is published for the information of the Army:

AN ACT to provide for retiring officers of the Army.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President be, and he is hereby authorized, upon the recommendation of any general commanding a department or an army, to discharge from service any officer of the Confederate States Army, or of the Provisional Army of the Confederate States, who has no command and cannot be assigned to any appropriate duty, or who is incompetent or inefficient, or who may be absent from his command or duty without leave: Provided, That any officer who may be discharged for incompetency, inefficiency, or absence from his command or duty without leave, shall be entitled to a trial before an examining board, under existing laws, if he demands it of the commanding general within thirty days: Provided further, That it shall not extend to any officer who is absent on account of his captivity.

Approved February 17, 1864.

IX. All officers, whether of Regular or Provisional Army, absent from their commands and not on duty, as well as those who are without assignment to duty by competent authority, will report their address by letter to this office, stating the circumstances of their absence from duty; and if unassigned, when and where last on duty.

By order:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 23, 1864.

His Excellency J. E. BROWN,
Governor of Georgia, Milledgeville, Ga.:

SIR: Your letter of the 29th ultimo has been received. The important business that has engaged the attention of the Department during the present month, in connection with Congress, has prevented me from affording a reply to it before this time. The reply shall be made without any reference to the acrimonious language you have thought proper to address to the Department.

The severe losses sustained in different portions of the Confederacy during the campaign of the last spring, from the cavalry raids of the enemy, and the critical condition of our affairs in Mississippi and Tennessee, impressed me with the conviction that a thorough organization of the reserve forces of every State had become necessary to avert similar disasters.

On the 6th of June last I addressed a communication to the Executive of each of the States east of the Mississippi River inviting their co-operation in the attainment of this desirable object. The plan of organization proposed was described in that letter; also, in a letter of the 19th of June, and in the published orders of the Department of the 22d of June ultimo.

The plan was to organize all the population not liable to military service under the acts of Congress, usually designated as conscription acts, in companies and regiments under the acts of Congress to provide for the local defense. The companies thus formed were not to be called into service unless they were actually needed; were to serve only while the emergency lasted, and were then to be dismissed to their homes. To secure these organizations a requisition was made for a quota of militia from each of the States, but with the declaration that these militia troops were not preferred, and that the call for militia would be fully answered if companies for the local defense were organized. In my telegram to you of the 12th of June I say:

Organizations under the law of the Provisional Congress are preferred mainly because of their longer term of duration and greater adaptation for ready call, or temporary service, and then for dismission to their ordinary pursuits. The militia called out for even a limited time would be continuously in the field. Besides militia corps, if they could be called out so temporarily, might be considered by the enemy as State troops, not, in their construction, entitled to exchange. If, however, the organizations are not formed in adequate numbers, militia, on the plan proposed by you or in the usual way, will be accepted.

On June 16 I informed you that the privilege of organizing companies for local defense, and of tendering them to the President for acceptance, is allowed to the people by the act of Congress. I am not authorized to restrict or deny it. If you will undertake to direct such organizations, and can thus obtain the whole number required in Georgia for the purpose explained, I will thankfully accept your aid, and from this time leave the matter in your hands for execution.

The authority thus confided was confided at your request, and the organizations completed in Georgia have been made under your superintendence. That the expectations of the Department were not fully answered as to the character of the organization to be formed is quite apparent, and the returns of the muster-rolls for Georgia have been so tardy that the Department has been left in ignorance for much of the time as to the nature and strength of the organizations actually made.

For a portion of the time you have claimed that these organizations were militia organizations, and were to be commanded by State officers.

The Department has accepted, with thankfulness, the co-operation you proffered, and that it has not realized from it its entire expectations or hopes has been rather a matter of regret than for censure or complaint. That an organization of the whole military strength of Georgia had become necessary for the defense of the State, the events that have occurred since June last sufficiently attest. The fall of Vicksburg and Port Hudson; the defeat sustained by our troops at Jackson and Gettysburg; the evacuation of Tennessee by Generals Bragg and Buckner; the accumulation of force by the enemy on the coast of South Carolina and Georgia, and the concentration of the army of General Grant at Chattanooga, have all contributed to menace Georgia with an invasion of a very formidable character. The invasion actually took place; and but for the advantage obtained by our troops at Chickamauga the most fatal consequences may have ensued. Nor has the Department at any time felt that degree of security in respect to the sea-coast of Georgia that authorized any diminution of the force collected for the defense of Savannah. The situation on the frontier of Georgia for the last six months has all the time been so critical that a judicious administration did not justify the disbanding of any troops under the control of the Department.

I have no disposition to depreciate the importance of a full supply of provisions for the Army and people. No one can be more profoundly impressed with the existence of the necessity than myself. The duty imposed upon the Department of reconciling the claims of the different branches of service for support is among the most difficult and delicate that it has to perform. That undue preference has not been given to the Army is evinced by the fact that the disasters it has sustained have been owing principally to the deficiency of its numbers. In consequence of the inability of this Government to maintain the numbers of the Army to that standard that would enable it to compete with that of the enemy we must ascribe the lamentable condition of many parts of the Confederacy at this time which are in his occupation. Congress, in view of this fact, have been continually employed in increasing the draft from those employed in industrial pursuits to fill the diminished ranks of the Army. The Department may regret the necessity for this, but unless the cause of the Confederacy is to be abandoned it can see no other course for it to pursue than to execute the laws passed by Congress in the spirit with which they have been made. A cordial acquiescence and support of that legislation is called for by every motive of patriotism, every sentiment of loyalty, and every consideration of public honor and private interest.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Columbus, February 23, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: Allow me to urge upon your consideration the policy and justice of placing conscripts in the oldest and veteran regiments, so far as South Carolina is concerned. Whilst I would not desire to make distinctions among those which first entered the field, I would mention Kershaw's and Jenkins' brigades especially as being entitled to a share—perhaps the largest share. Under your predecessor a regiment of mounted men in this State, now commanded by Colonel Aiken, was allowed to be organized almost entirely of conscripts, which the law contemplated should have gone into the old regiments. When the call was made up to forty the conscripts were allowed to remain here and join regiments which had not been in active service already, whereby the ranks of some have been swollen to more than the maximum, and even so far as to form new additional companies. This is unjust to the old regiments which have been thinned by battle and disease, and may ultimately be subjected to consolidation, whilst those seeing but little service have been enabled to keep full ranks.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

M. L. BONHAM.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., February 25, 1864.

Maj. THOMAS L. BAYNE,
Ordnance Bureau, Richmond, Va.:

MAJOR: Nothing has occurred since my last telegram to affect or remove the entire interruption of all operations connected with my special service in Florida, which was caused by the unexpected advance of the enemy from Jacksonville. Since their very decided repulse at Olustee they have fallen back beyond Baldwin, and it is conjectured that they are awaiting re-enforcements, as it is reported—how authentically I am not aware—that all their transports have sailed for Hilton Head. As you will readily conjecture, the fact that East Florida has suddenly become the theater of active military operations most materially affects the views I presented in my last communication in regard to the several plans of operation I expected to be developed in that portion of the State. I can therefore only repeat more in detail the information I telegraphed. The Saint Mary's was sunk and her cargo, I presume, was destroyed. Of this fact and of the reported loss of cotton at Camp Finegan and Baldwin, I have, however, no certain information. Lieutenant Buckman has been engrossed by his ordnance duties, and I apprehend has been unable to advise me on these points, even if it were possible for him to obtain accurate information. The military movements now in progress indicate a purpose to contest most energetically the effort of the enemy to establish themselves permanently in Florida. How soon or how effectual these movements may be, it is not for me to conjecture. I can but repeat the fact that at present I am entirely unable to do anything, and must await the results of the campaign to ascertain what changes in the condition of things may occur.

Captain Hobart has reported and has been advised of the remittances of funds, but I have deemed it entirely inexpedient to make any purchases of cotton, as there exists no reasonable prospect of its exportation now, no vessels being looked for at any point on the coast pending the military operations now in progress. This complete suspension of the efforts which I hoped to make for the accomplishment of results here is exceedingly unpleasant, and the irksome inaction which it has occasioned presses heavily upon me. I consider it my duty to await the developments of the coming month before expressing decided opinions as to the prospects of substantial success, and will therefore remain at or within reach of this place, unless otherwise instructed by you. Beyond the receipt of the acknowledgment of the approval of Captain Hobart's bond, I am entirely without any communication or advices from the Department since I left Richmond.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. BLAIR HOGE,
Major, &c.

[First indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to the Secretary of War for notice and return.

ORDNANCE BUREAU:

Major Hoge may now be recalled unless the Treasury Department should, under the new plan, require his services.

I respectfully ask that Maj. J. B. Hoge may be ordered to report here to give such information as may be desired, and for conference in regard to ports of Florida, and that Capt. Edward Hobart may be left in charge.

Col. IRA R. FOSTER,

Quartermaster-General of Georgia, Atlanta, Ga.:

SIR: I have received your letter of the 17th instant requesting an order to purchase supplies in Florida to manufacture clothing for Georgia troops in the Confederate service. In reply you are respectfully informed that no special permits are ever given, but purchases made for a State are not liable to impressment, and I know no law prohibiting removal of supplies from Florida.

CHARLESTON, S. C., February 25, 1864.

Hon. EDWARD SPARROW,
La Grange, Ga.:

DEAR SIR: I have to thank you for the courtesy of sending me a copy of the army bill as reported from your committee before its passage through the Senate and for your flattering request that I should make any suggestions which I might think would improve it. The constant pressure of official duties of an urgent character prevented me from availing myself of your kindness to present my general views touching the subject-matter of your bill in time for consideration before Congress had acted, and any partial suggestions I felt could be of no value.

In November, 1861, an elaborate plan, prepared with much labor by an officer of my staff, was submitted to prominent statesmen providing for systematic means of raising and keeping on an efficient footing a proper force for the conduct of this war on the scale it must grow to. The plan submitted was a careful adaptation of the French and Prussian systems of conscription, and the Landwehr, modified to suit existing conditions, and it had my full approval at the time; but unfortunately no one then appeared to comprehend that it were as much a sheer impossibility to carry on this colossal war with a volunteer force—that is, by voluntary contributions of brawn and muscle, flesh and blood, as with voluntary gifts of bread and beef, powder and lead, swords and guns. The plan received no countenance whatsoever and fell stillborn. An attempt was made, as will be remembered, by the act of December 11, 1861, to induce the men to re-volunteer with an ill-success which history should have taught us to expect. Then it was that in April, 1862, the first so-called act of conscription was resorted to. This to a certain degree met the necessities of the hour and was effective; but it lacked a great deal of what it might have been if it had been drawn up with knowledge of the details and working of European systems.

Many of the defects of the act of 16th of April, 1862, ought to have been avoided and should be remedied. The act is at direct variance indeed (unnecessarily and without gain) with the fundamental principle of our Government, State sovereignty, and organized State governments. It would not only have been more consonant with our polity, but more effective and far more economical, I am convinced, if the State authorities had been required to recruit and furnish the men of their respective State quotas; and the last bill is open to the same objections. The present system is expensive to a degree far from commensurate with results. It fills the country with functionaries the substantial duties of whom could be performed, I am satisfied, by the local State authorities in addition to their local duties, and thus save many officers and men for the military service who are now kept from the field.

The plan of which I speak as having been drawn up in 1861 was based on this cardinal principle that the States should severally furnish their quotas of men on the requisition of the central executive, under regulations made by Congress. The companies and regiments were, so to speak, localized or sectionalized; that is, all between certain ages were enrolled in the several districts of the country, the company being the unit, and there was a reserve left at home, which was a part of the company in the field, and from which were drawn the men to fill vacancies. Enrollments were made by the local magistracy, and in ways so carefully guarded that it must have been more efficiently done than now. All people at home were made interested in keeping skulkers in the field by details of administration carefully elaborated, yet simple in operation.

We have not acted wisely in ignoring the systems which, under similar conditions, have worked so effectively in recruiting the armies of France and Prussia in great emergencies, and in adopting one which is the most expensive and irresponsible in the world.

At the same time we ought to provide a permanent and real conscript system, after the French plan, for a small regular force, for the true conscription method of recruiting takes time to be established in a country.

It is not too late to modify existing laws and adopt the State system even now; but with this modification there should go hand in hand a reorganization of the Provisional Army somewhat as follows: A regiment of infantry should be made to consist, in active service, of two battalions of eight companies or three battalions of six companies each, instead, as now, of one battalion of ten companies—that is, we should conform to European organizations in such a war as this. There would be an advantage in this in many ways, it is believed, including the economy resulting from a reduction of the number of officers. Brigades would then be made to consist of not less than forty-eight companies, and the companies should be kept as near to the standard of 90 or 100 men as possible.

If I can find the time before the assembling of Congress again, I may submit the details of these plans for your consideration as a legislator. Meantime, with high consideration,

I am, sincerely, yours,

G. T. BEAUREGARD.

SPECIAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 46½. } Richmond, Va., February 26, 1864.

I. For the more thorough and efficient conduct of this Bureau the following orders regulating the distribution of duties and the transaction of business are published for the guidance of the several officers herein on duty.

II. The Bureau will be divided into several offices, to wit: The reception office, the office of orders, the appointment office, the office of organization, the judge-advocate's office, the adjutant-general's office, the office of inspection, and the office of the Adjutant and Inspector General. Each will be charged with specific duties, and will be independent of the others, the several officers receiving orders from and being responsible to the Adjutant and Inspector General and the Secretary of War directly.

III. The reception office will be charged with the keeping of the files and general records; the reception and opening of the mails and all official papers; the indorsing, entering, and distributing of all papers to the offices charged with action upon them, the recording of such action, and the filing of papers, or, when necessary, their transmission from one office to another and from the Bureau. Upon this office will also devolve the reception of and attention to visitors. It will occupy the first and second in the suite of rooms in the main building.

IV. The office of orders will be charged with keeping the record of the general and special orders, and with action upon all papers and applications requiring for their completion solely the issuing of a special order, such, for instance, as applications for leaves of absence, furloughs, transfers, details, discharges and return of soldiers, resignations and assignment of officers, &c. This office will occupy two rooms next in suite to the reception office.

V. The appointment office will be charged with the register of commissioned officers appointed and with the duty of acting upon all applications for appointment, preparing nomination lists, issuing letters of appointment, and entering confirmations. It will occupy the first and second rooms in the building adjacent to the main building, formerly occupied by the Commissary-General.

VI. The office of organization will take charge of the muster-rolls, rosters, returns, and reports, and act upon all matters relating to the organization of the Army, such as the raising, muster, consolidation, recruiting, or disbanding of companies, battalions, and regiments, the succession of officers by election or promotion; questions of rank between officers of the line, &c.; all matters bearing mainly not upon individuals, but upon organized bodies of troops. This office will occupy the rooms adjacent to the appointment office, and the building in the rear, upon the second and third floors of which the rolls will be kept.

VII. The judge-advocate's office will take action upon all papers and applications relating to courts-martial and courts of inquiry and will occupy for the present the room in the main building next to the office of orders.

VIII. The adjutant-general's office will be charged with the duty of acting upon all papers which cannot properly be devolved upon other offices, and upon all papers submitted to or devolving specially upon the Adjutant and Inspector General, and with the preparation of the general orders. It will for the present occupy rooms with the judge-advocate's office.

IX. The office of inspection, which will devolve upon the assistant inspector-general, to be assigned to duty in this Bureau, will take charge of inspection reports, and will attend to the duties of inspection in the several armies and staff departments, and of enforcing obedience to the laws, orders, regulations, and usages of the service.

X. The office of the Adjutant and Inspector General will contain the confidential files and records of the Bureau, and will take cognizance only of such matters as are beyond the ordinary duties of routine and which cannot properly devolve upon the officers hereinbefore designated. It will occupy the last room in the suite in the main building.

XI. Capt. John W. Riely is assigned to duty in the reception office; Lieut. Col. John Withers, in the office of orders; Lieut. Col. E. A. Palfrey, in the appointment office; Maj. Sam. W. Melton, in the office of organization; Maj. C. H. Lee, in the judge-advocate's office; Lieut. Col. H. L. Clay, in the adjutant-general's office.

XII. Maj. W. S. Barton, assistant adjutant-general, is assigned to duty in the office of organization in this Bureau, and will be charged specially with the duty of acting upon the reports of examining boards.

XIII. Colonel Withers will, as heretofore, have charge of the disbursement of the office fund, to which duty the chief clerk, Mr. H. C. Wall, is, under his supervision, specially assigned. Among the specific duties thus devolved will be the supplying of and attention to stationery, furniture, printing, blanks, outside work, and generally whatever involves expenditure.

XIV. The officers on duty in this Bureau will be required to take final and decisive action upon all matters within the scope of their capacity and the limits of whatever authority may be delegated to them, and will submit to the Adjutant and Inspector General such papers and applications only as require a higher discretion, and to the Honorable Secretary of War such only as demand the exercise of authority not delegated; the rule hereafter to control the distribution of duties and the transaction of business in this Bureau being that officers should do nothing which can be as well done by their subordinates.

XV. Each paper submitted to the Honorable Secretary of War or to the Adjutant and Inspector General will be prepared for their action by indorsement, exhibiting succinctly but clearly the contents of the paper and of its inclosures, in such manner as to present the points for decision and the facts stated bearing upon them, together with the facts appearing of record in the Bureau, and the maturely considered opinion of the officer charged with the office to which the subject-matter of the paper may relate. The indorsements, so far as they exhibit the contents of papers and their inclosures, will be made in the reception office.

XVI. No paper will be placed finally upon the files until the writer or party concerned is notified of the action taken upon it; and to avoid the duplication of papers and the unnecessary accumulation of business, such notification will be given by written communication at the earliest possible moment. If it be deemed unimportant and unnecessary to retain a paper on file as a record or for reference, the notification will be indorsed thereon, and it will be returned to the writer, the action having been first recorded in the "indorsement book" in the reception office.

XVII. The door will be opened to the public at 11 o'clock and closed at 1 o'clock. Before and after these hours no person will be admitted without the sanction in each instance of the Adjutant and Inspector General, except the heads of departments, commanding generals, the chiefs of bureaus, and the clerks of the Bureau of War.

XVIII. The officer on duty in the reception office will attend to the application of each visitor, and if possible meet his purpose without communication with the other offices. When indispensable the visitor will be directed, or, if need be, conducted, to the officer upon whom may devolve the subject-matter in hand. The doors between the reception office and the other offices will be habitually closed, and visitors will not pass them without permission. It is desirable that this Bureau be regarded strictly as a place of business, and the duty is devolved upon the reception office of protecting the other offices from unnecessary intrusion and embarrassment in the continuous transaction of business. The officer in charge will, in addition to the regular hours, attend in this office one hour, between the hours of 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening, and a clerk or employé will remain on duty at all hours, day and night.

XIX. The doors of the office of the Adjutant and Inspector General will be habitually closed, and visitors will not be permitted to pass them without consultation with the officer in charge of the adjutant-general's office, who will, if possible, himself answer the purpose desired. He will confer with the Adjutant and Inspector General, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock each day, in reference to such papers submitted as may be beyond his discretion. He will receive the decision orally, and commit it to writing by indorsement or by separate communication.

XX. The officers of this Bureau will proceed at once to make preparations for rearranging the rooms, papers, records, and furniture in accordance with the requirements of these orders, which will, if practicable, be put into full operation by the 15th of March. Maj. Sam. W. Melton is charged with their prompt and thorough enforcement.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 26, 1864.

Mr. Thomas F. Beale is hereby authorized to enlist a company of men, not to exceed ten in number, for secret service under the regulations prescribed by this Department for such organizations. When he shall have enlisted and mustered into the service for the war eight men, he will receive the commission of first lieutenant in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States, without pay. Transportation will be furnished him for his recruits to the place of rendezvous and to such points as he may select to operate against the enemy.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 26, 1864.

His Excellency CHARLES CLARK,
Governor of Mississippi:

SIR: Hon. Mr. Watson, of your State, has communicated your wish to be definitely informed as to the views of the Department regarding the operation of the recent legislation of Congress on the militia as existing in an organized condition in your State. Some of those organizations, it is understood, were constituted under an emergency with the consent of the President, and included men at the time subject to conscription. Another portion of the men, by the recent act of Congress, it is supposed, have likewise been subjected to like liability.

Mr. Watson represents that your preference would be for the retention, as organized militia, of all or some of these companies, and has desired me thus to convey to you the views of the Department.

My convictions of expediency are decided against the employment of troops under distinct governments in the same field of action, and it is believed that, as the armies of the Confederacy must necessarily be the larger and more regular organizations and be under more efficient discipline, and in more continuous action, it is very desirable that all capable of military duty should be in some form embodied in the Confederate armies, and subject to the direction of our Commander-in-Chief. My deference, however, for your views, and the desire I unfeignedly have to cordially co-operate with the Governors of each State in the great struggle in which we are engaged, would cause me to yield my own judgment if the laws I am bound to administer did not seem to me to control the matter.

In the Constitution, as I interpret it, three classes of troops only were contemplated—the armies of the Confederacy, troops of war, which a State may keep in time of war, and the militia. The militia, in its wide and constitutional sense, I consider the population capable of arms, which constitutes the material out of which the Confederate Army and the State troops are to be drawn, or which, if not so engrossed, may be organized and employed in temporary service as militia, more strictly called. The power of the Confederacy to raise armies enables it, in my opinion, to engross the whole of the militia in its widest sense, but not to encroach upon or withdraw from the troops of war which a State may have regularly employed. In other words, I consider the Army of the Confederacy and the troops of war may either have been constituted from the militia or the arms-bearing population, and that when so constituted they are, respectively, the Army of the Confederacy and the army of the State. As to these, when constituted, neither government can encroach on the other; but the militia, unless appropriated as troops of war regularly organized, are liable to the superior claims of the Confederate Government.

Such superior claims have been exercised upon all between the ages of seventeen and fifty years, under the recent act of Congress, and consequently all State organizations that are not troops of war, permanently enlisted as such, but militia, whether organized or at large, are subjected to conscription. Those between eighteen and forty-five are devoted to filling the old organizations and to specific details; the others within the prescribed ages to designated purposes. It becomes my duty to see that they are so devoted and employed. I have no warrant or right to yield them to other (even State) organizations.

With this explanation, you will readily understand that, as far as any troops organized and existing under State authority are properly "troops of war" of the State, in the language of the Constitution, they are exempt from the control or interference of the Department, but that all white residents between seventeen and fifty years of age not so embodied as troops of war must be claimed for the military service of the Confederacy in some of the various forms designated by the acts of Congress on the subject. I may regret that it is not in my power to exercise a more liberal discretion in conformity with your wishes, but your judgment and patriotism are confidently relied on to approve my adherence to the provisions of the law.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

DEMOPOLIS, February 27, 1864.

Richmond:

This will be handed you by Mr. Minor Major, a citizen of Missouri, who comes to me properly authenticated. He has been employed in the work of destroying the property of the enemy on the rivers, and is a member of an organization of a formidable character extending through the North, of which I have known for some time past and of which you have heard. He goes to Richmond on matters connected with his work, and I think you will be interested in hearing from him of the associations with which he is connected. Properly used, these associations could be of great value to our cause.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. POLK,
Lieutenant-General.

Governor J. E. BROWN,

Milledgeville, Ga.:

YOUR EXCELLENCY: On the recommendation of General Lee, and from the disadvantages found to result to the service from the absence of officers who [are] likewise members of the Legislature, it has been concluded not to grant furloughs to attend the sessions. GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 25. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, Va., February 29, 1864.

I. The following acts of Congress are published for the information of the Army:

1. JOINT RESOLUTION to declare the meaning of "An act allowing hospital accommodations to sick and wounded officers."

Resolved by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That the true intent and meaning of "An act allowing hospital accommodations to sick and wounded officers," approved the twenty-ninth day of April, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, were to cause to be furnished not only medicines, medical and other attendance and lodging, but subsistence also.

Approved February 13, 1864.

2. AN ACT to increase the commutation value of hospital rations.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the commutation value of rations of the sick and wounded, and of all employés in hospitals, be fixed at such rates, not to exceed two and a half dollars, as the Secretary of War shall designate.

Approved February 15, 1864.

3. AN ACT to amend "An act regulating the granting of furloughs and discharges in hospitals," approved May 1, 1863.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That an act regulating the granting of furloughs and discharges in hospitals, approved on May first, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to provide that the period of disability therein named which entitles soldiers, sick and wounded in hospitals, to furloughs, shall be extended to sixty days, or upwards, in which case the Board of Examiners may grant furloughs for sixty days.

Approved February 17, 1864.

II. Paragraph I, General Orders, No. 69, last series, is so amended that soldiers, sick or wounded in hospitals, will not be granted furloughs unless they are likely to remain unfit for military duty for sixty days, in which case they may be furloughed for that period.

III. Hospital funds accrue in all hospitals—regimental, field, or other hospitals.

IV. Paragraph VIII, General Orders, No. 8, current series, is hereby revoked. Rations in kind (such as are issued to soldiers in the field) will be issued to all attendants in field hospitals, and, when required by the surgeon in charge, to the female attendants in general hospitals. The rations of all male attendants in general hospitals in cities and towns will be commuted, the amount to be drawn by the surgeon in charge and expended by him for their subsistence.

V. The commuted value of rations of the sick and wounded, and of all employés in regimental, field, or other hospitals, will be, until further orders, $2.50.

VI. General Orders, No. 71, last series, is amended as follows: For officers, sick or wounded in hospital, rations will be drawn, or, when required by the surgeon in charge, their value commuted at the price fixed in the preceding paragraph.

VII. The last two preceding paragraphs will not have effect in the Trans-Mississippi Department.

VIII. The following order is published in connection with paragraphs VIII and IX, General Orders, No. 22, 1864:

Officers in the Trans-Mississippi Department belonging to commands east of the Mississippi River will immediately return to their respective commands. In cases where such officers have no command, or are unassigned to any by proper authority, action under the "Act of Congress to provide for retiring officers of the Army," approved February 17, 1864, will be taken by the general commanding that department, who will also adopt proper measures to carry into effect these orders.

IX. Supplies of provisions, in transitu to arsenals, armories, and ordnance depots, for the use of operatives, under the order of commanding officers of the same, will not be interfered with by officers of other departments.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, February 29, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: I desire to call your attention most earnestly to the difficulties and complications arising from the conscription of principals of substitutes in this State.

Chief Justice Pearson has decided recently that the law is unconstitutional, and further that the act of Congress suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus does not apply to these men. He therefore continues to grant the writ, and the execution being resisted by the enrolling officers by orders from the Conscript Bureau, the result will be a direct and unavoidable collision of State and Confederate authorities. I have taken the ground that the decision of a single judge at chambers does not possess the binding force and effect of an adjudicated case, but it only operates to discharge the individual. It certainly does this much, and until it is overruled it is final and absolute, made so expressly by the statutes of this State. It cannot be overruled except by the supreme court, which does not meet until June next. In the meantime, if the man is discharged I am bound to protect him, and if the process of the court is resisted I am forced by my oath of office to summon the military power of the State to enforce it. There is no escape from this conclusion.

An agreement was proposed by Chief Justice Pearson at Salisbury and accepted by Governor Bragg as counsel for the Government, subject to the approval or disapproval of the same, to remove one case to the supreme court by certiorari, and to bind over all others applying for writs to appear and abide the decision thus to be rendered. This gave general satisfaction and had a quieting effect upon the whole State.

Since it has been understood, however, that the Confederacy would not recognize the arrangement the excitement is becoming very great, and I fear much trouble will result.

Knowing, as I trust you do, my great anxiety to avoid collision with the Confederate authorities and everything else that might tend to hinder its efficiency, yet it cannot be supposed that I am to omit a plain and obvious duty prescribed by my official oath. I therefore earnestly request that you will order a suspension of the enrollment of the principals of substitutes in North Carolina at least until time sufficient be allowed to exhaust all efforts at an amicable arrangement. I do not know a better one than that made at Salisbury, and which, though it would deprive the Government of the services of these men until June, would yet give still greater advantages by preserving that peace and harmony between the respective governments without which all our labors will be in vain.

You will observe that I make no comment whatever upon the correctness of the chief justice's opinions. As an executive officer I consider that I have no right to do so; neither, with all due respect, do I consider you to have any such discretion; and however unfortunate it may be to the efficient and equal working of the Government that the laws of Congress are at the mercy, so to speak, of the various judges of the various States, I submit that it is not possible to avoid it, in the absence of the Supreme Court of the Confederacy to give harmony and uniformity of construction. We can only obey the judges we now have, and even this is infinitely preferable to the assumption of judicial power by executive officers, and making their will the law.

Hoping an early response, I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,
Z. B. VANCE.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, N. C., February 29, 1864.

Hon. C. G. MEMMINGER,
Secretary of the Treasury, Richmond, Va.:

DEAR SIR: Upon a recent visit to the county of Wilkes, in this State, I was informed that a number of inoffensive citizens in that and the adjacent counties had been robbed of their property and effects by the Fiftieth Regiment North Carolina Troops, employed there for the purpose of arresting deserters. It has occurred to me that some compensation should be made to these people for the losses they have sustained, in many cases a large part of their property having been taken away. And the mode I propose is to appoint a commission or commissioners in the region where the depredations have been committed and ascertain the loss of each individual and credit the amount on his current taxes. Should this proposition meet your views and the measure be carried into effect promptly, I feel satisfied it will go far to compose the dissatisfaction of my people who have suffered so severely in that section, and bring to the support of the Government a large class of persons who think and feel they are out of the pale of its protection. Your early consideration of this measure will enable me to effect much in the restoration of confidence amongst the people where its benefits are to be received.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
Z. B. VANCE.

P. S.—I would suggest that the tax collectors could do this. Justice and good policy both require it.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., February 29, 1864.

Z. McDaniel is hereby authorized to enlist a company of men, not to exceed fifty in number, for secret service against the enemy, under the regulations prescribed by this Department for such organizations. When he shall have enlisted and mustered his company into the service for the war he will receive a commission as captain in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States, without pay. Transportation will be furnished to him for his recruits to the place of rendezvous and to such points as he may select for his operations.

J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 26. } Richmond, March 1, 1864.

The following act of Congress and regulations are published for the information and guidance of all concerned:

AN ACT to organize forces to serve during the war.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That from and after the passage of this act, all white men, residents of the Confederate States, between the ages of seventeen and fifty, shall be in the military service of the Confederate States for the war.

SEC. 2. That all the persons aforesaid, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, now in service, shall be retained, during the present war with the United States, in the same regiments, battalions and companies to which they belong at the passage of this act, with the same organization and officers, unless regularly transferred or discharged, in accordance with the laws and regulations for the government of the Army: Provided, That companies from one State, organized against their consent, expressed at the time, with regiments or battalions from another State, shall have the privilege of being transferred to organizations of troops in the same arm of the service from the States in which said companies were raised, and the soldiers from one State in companies from another State shall be allowed, if they desire it, a transfer to organizations from their own State in the same arm of the service.

SEC. 3. That, at the expiration of six months from the first day of April next a bounty of one hundred dollars, in a six per cent. Government bond, which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, shall be paid to every non-commissioned officer, musician and private who shall then be in the service, or, in the event of his death previous to the period of such payment, then to the person or persons who would be entitled by law to receive the arrearages of his pay; but no one shall be entitled to the bounty herein provided who shall, at any time during the period of six months next after the said first day of April, be absent from his command without leave.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be relieved from the operation of this act by reason of having been heretofore discharged from the Army, where no disability now exists, nor shall those who have furnished substitutes be any longer exempted by reason thereof: Provided, That no person heretofore exempted on account of religious opinions, and who has paid the tax levied to relieve him from service, shall be required to render military service under this act.

SEC. 5. That all white male residents of the Confederate States between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty years shall enroll themselves, at such times and places, and under such regulations as the President may prescribe, the time allowed not being less than thirty days for those east, and sixty days for those west of the Mississippi River; and any person who shall fail so to enroll himself, without a reasonable excuse therefor, to be judged of by the President, shall be placed in service in the field for the war, in the same manner as though he were between the ages of eighteen and forty-five: Provided, That the persons mentioned in this section shall constitute a reserve for State defense and detail duty, and shall not be required to perform service out of the State in which they reside.

SEC. 6. That all persons required by the fifth section of this act to enroll themselves may, within thirty days after the passage hereof, east of the Mississippi River, and within sixty days if west of said river, form themselves into voluntary organizations of companies, battalions or regiments, and elect their own officers—said organizations to conform to the existing law; and having so organized, to tender their services as volunteers during the war, to the President; and if such organization shall furnish proper muster-rolls, as now required, and deposit a copy thereof with the enrolling officer of their district (which shall be equivalent to enrollment), they may be accepted as minute men for service in such State; but in no event to be taken out of it. Those who do not so volunteer and organize shall enroll themselves as before provided, and may, by the President, be required to assemble at places of rendezvous, and be formed into companies, battalions and regiments, under regulations to be prescribed by him, and shall have the right to elect their company and regimental officers; and all troops organized under this act for State defense shall be entitled, while in actual service, to the same pay and allowances as troops now in the field.

SEC. 7. That any person who shall fail to attend at the place of rendezvous, as required by the authority of the President, without a sufficient excuse, to be judged of by him, shall be liable to be placed in service in the field for the war, as if he were between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years.

SEC. 8. That hereafter the duties of provost and hospital guards and clerks, of clerks, guards, agents, employes, or laborers in the Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments, in the Ordnance Department, and clerks and employes of navy agents, as also in the execution of the enrollment acts, and all similar duties, shall be performed by persons who are within the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, and who, by the report of a board of army surgeons, shall be reported as unable to perform active service in the field, but capable of performing some of the above-named duties, specifying which; and when those persons shall have been assigned to those duties as far as practicable, the President shall detail or assign to their performance such bodies of troops or individuals, required to be enrolled under the fifth section of this act, as may be needed for the discharge of such duties: Provided, That persons between the ages of seventeen and eighteen shall not be assigned to these duties: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the President from detailing artisans, mechanics, or persons of scientific skill to perform indispensable duties in the departments or bureaus herein mentioned.

SEC. 9. That any quartermaster or assistant quartermaster, commissary or assistant commissary, (other than those serving with regiments and brigades in the field), or officer in the Ordnance Bureau, or navy agent, or provost-marshal, or officer in the conscript service, who shall hereafter employ or retain in his employment any person in any of their said departments or bureaus, or in any of the duties mentioned in the eighth section of this act, in violation of the provisions hereof, shall, on conviction thereof, by a court-martial or military court, be cashiered; and it shall be the duty of any department or district commander, upon proof by the oath of any credible person, that any such officer has violated this provision, immediately to relieve such officer from duty; and said commander shall take prompt measures to have him tried for such offense, and any commander as aforesaid failing to perform the duties enjoined by this section, shall, upon being duly convicted thereof, be dismissed from the service.

SEC. 10. That all laws granting exemptions from military service be, and the same are hereby repealed, and hereafter none shall be exempted except the following:

I. All who shall be held unfit for military service, under rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

II. The Vice-President of the Confederate States; the members and officers of Congress and of the several State Legislatures, and such other Confederate and State officers as the President or the Governors of the respective States may certify to be necessary for the proper administration of the Confederate or State governments, as the case may be.

III. Every minister of religion authorized to preach according to the rules of his church, and who, at the passage of this act, shall be regularly employed in the discharge of his ministerial duties; superintendents and physicians of asylums for the deaf, dumb and blind and of the insane; one editor for each newspaper being published at the time of the passage of this act, and such employes as said editor may certify on oath to be indispensable to the publication of such newspaper; the public printer of the Confederate and State governments, and such journeymen printers as the said public printer shall certify on oath to be indispensable to perform the public printing; one skilled apothecary in each apothecary store, who was doing business as such apothecary on the tenth day of October, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and has continued said business, without intermission, since that period; all physicians over the age of thirty years who now are, and for the last seven years have been, in the actual and regular practice of their profession, but the term physician shall not include dentists; all presidents and teachers of colleges, theological seminaries, academies, and schools, who have been regularly engaged as such for two years next before the passage of this act: Provided, That the benefit of this exemption shall extend to those teachers only whose schools are composed of twenty students or more; all superintendents of public hospitals established by law before the passage of this act, and such physicians and nurses therein as such superintendent shall certify on oath to be indispensable to the proper and efficient management thereof.

IV. There shall be exempt one person as overseer or agriculturist on each farm or plantation upon which there are now, and were, upon the first day of January last, fifteen able-bodied field hands, between the ages of sixteen and fifty, upon the following conditions: 1. This exemption shall only be granted in cases in which there is no white male adult on the farm or plantation not liable to military service, nor unless the person claiming the exemption was, on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, either the owner and manager, or overseer of said plantation: but in no case shall more than one person be exempted for one farm or plantation. 2. Such person shall first execute a bond, payable to the Confederate States of America, in such form, and with such security, and in such penalty, as the Secretary of War may prescribe, conditioned that he will deliver to the Government, at some railroad depot, or such other place or places as may be designated by the Secretary of War, within twelve months then next ensuing, one hundred pounds of bacon, or, at the election of the Government, its equivalent in pork, and one hundred pounds of net beef, (said beef to be delivered on foot), for each able-bodied slave on the farm or plantation within the above said ages, whether said slaves be worked in the field or not, which said bacon or pork and beef shall be paid for by the Government at the prices fixed by the commissioners of the State under the impressment act: Provided, That when the person thus exempted shall produce satisfactory evidence that it has been impossible for him, by the exercise of proper diligence, to furnish the amount of meat thus contracted for, and leave an adequate supply for the subsistence of those living on the said farm or plantation, the Secretary of War shall direct a commutation of the same, to the extent of two-thirds thereof, in grain or other provisions, to be delivered by such person as aforesaid at equivalent rates. 3. Such person shall further bind himself to sell the marketable surplus of provisions and grain now on hand, and which he may raise from year to year while his exemption continues, to the Government or to the families of soldiers, at prices fixed by the commissioners of the State under the impressment act: Provided, That any person, exempted as aforesaid, shall be entitled to a credit of twenty-five per cent. on any amount of meat which he may deliver within three months from the passage of this act: Provided further, That persons coming within the provisions of this exemption shall not be deprived thereof by reason of having been enrolled since the first day of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

In addition to the foregoing exemptions, the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, may exempt or detail such other person as he may be satisfied ought to be exempted on account of public necessity, and to insure the production of grain and provisions for the Army and the families of soldiers. He may, also, grant exemptions or details, on such terms as he may prescribe, to such overseers, farmers or planters, as he may be satisfied will be more useful to the country in the pursuits of agriculture than in the military service: Provided, That such exemptions shall cease whenever the farmer, planter or overseer, shall fail diligently to employ, in good faith, his own skill, capital and labor, exclusively, in the production of grain and provisions, to be sold to the Government and the families of soldiers at prices not exceeding those fixed at the time for like articles by the commissioners of the State under the impressment act.

V. The president, treasurer, auditor and superintendent, of any railroad company engaged in transportation for the Government, and such officers and employés thereof as the president or superintendent shall certify, on oath, to be indispensable to the efficient operation of such railroad: Provided, That the number of persons exempted by this act on any railroad shall not exceed one for each mile of such road in actual use for military transportation, and said exempts shall be reported by name and description, with the names of any who may have left the employment of said company, or who may cease to be indispensable to the efficient operation of its road, at least once a month, to the Secretary of War, or such officer as he may designate for that purpose: And provided further, That such president or superintendent shall, in each such monthly report, certify on oath that no person liable to military service has been employed by his company since the passage of this act, in any position in which it was practicable to employ one not liable to military service and capable of performing efficiently the duties of such position. And in cases where railroads have fallen into the hands of the enemy, and a portion of the rolling-stock of such roads is being used on other roads not in the enemy's hands, the president and superintendent of said first-named roads shall be exempt.

VI. That nothing herein contained shall be construed as repealing the act approved April fourteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, entitled "An act to exempt contractors for carrying the mails of the Confederate States, and the drivers of post-coaches and hacks from military service:" Provided, That the exemptions granted under this act shall only continue whilst the persons exempted are actually engaged in their respective pursuits or occupations.

SEC. 11. That the President be, and he is hereby authorized, to grant details, under general rules and regulations to be issued by the War Department, either from persons between forty-five and fifty years of age, or from the army in the field, in all cases when, in his judgment, justice, equity and necessity require such details, and he may revoke such orders of details whenever he thinks proper: Provided, That the power herein granted to the President to make details and exemptions shall not be construed to authorize the exemption or detail of any contractor for furnishing supplies of any kind to the Government, by reason of said contract, unless the head or Secretary of the Department making such contract shall certify that the personal services of said contractor are indispensable to the execution of the contract: Provided further, That when any such contractor shall fail diligently and faithfully to proceed with the execution of such contract, his exemption or detail shall cease.

SEC. 12. That in appointing local boards of surgeons for the examination of persons liable to military service, no member composing the same shall be appointed from the county or enrolling district in which they are required to make such examination.

Approved February 17, 1864.

I. The superintendence of the measures necessary for the enrollment, examination, enlistment, assignment, detail, and exemption of all persons not belonging to the Army, in the States east of the Mississippi River, who are placed in the military service by the above act of Congress, is devolved on the Bureau of Conscription; and all officers and persons assigned or to be employed in the conscription service, or upon other duty imposed upon the Bureau, will be subject to its orders, and their various acts and decisions may be revised therein, under the orders and instructions of the War Department.

II. The Bureau of Conscription, under the orders of the Department, will proceed to organize in every State efficient agencies for the performance of the necessary duties imposed by this order. These agencies will consist of a commandant of conscripts in each State, a suitable number of camps of instruction, under the charge of commanders, and enrolling officers, and drill-masters, to be appointed or assigned under acts of Congress or the orders of the War Department. The Bureau of Conscription will, by instructions to these officers, designate the duties that they shall perform, the reports that they shall make, and will determine the effect of their certificates and other official evidence they may be required to give. In the performance of the duties of making exemptions and details, the Bureau of Conscription may from time to time organize within the States temporary boards to obtain information and advice relative to the necessity or propriety of exemptions or details to be granted under the provisions of the above act of Congress.

III. All applications for exemption or detail under this act, except as hereafter excepted, and except such details as are required for the service of any of the military bureaus, or for service in any of the departments of the Government, will be made in writing to the enrolling officer of the appropriate county or district, and be supported by the affidavit of the applicant and other testimony under oath. The enrolling officer will indorse his opinion on each and every application, and transmit it to the commandant of conscription for his approval, with a certificate for approval. If the enrolling officer approve the application, he may grant a certificate of exemption for a period not exceeding sixty days, which shall remain in force for that period unless countermanded by the commandant of conscripts. Every applicant for exemption or detail, whose claim shall be refused by the enrolling officer and commandant of conscripts, will be allowed an appeal to the Bureau of Conscription and the War Department. But until the application has been made to the enrolling officer and the commandant of conscripts, applications will not be entertained by the War Department.

IV. Applications for exemptions to insure the production of provisions for the Army and families of soldiers, and for the exemption of overseers, farmers, or planters, or because their services will be more useful to the public as agriculturists than in the military service, or of persons between the ages of forty-five and fifty, because justice, equity, or necessity require the detail, or because their employment is necessary to the public, will be made to the enrolling officer in writing, with an affidavit of the person making it, and accompanied with proof of one or more credible witnesses. The application should show with precision the conditions of the alleged private or public necessity, advantage, convenience, justice, or equity. Among the facts to be stated are the ability of the party to produce the provision or supply the want or requirement, the condition of the family, whether any of the members belong to the Army, and whether some person not liable to military service cannot be procured to perform the service. If the decision of the local enrolling officer be favorable, he will transmit the same to the commandant of conscripts for approval, who may, if he approve, grant an exemption or detail for sixty days, and indorse his action thereon, which will be transmitted to the Bureau of Conscription. The Bureau will prepare special instructions to guide the action of those officers in reference to this class of cases.

V. Applications for certificates of exemption under the third article, tenth section, of the act aforesaid, and sixth article of the same section, will be made in all cases to the local enrolling officer, and his certificate must be approved by the Congressional district enrolling officer. Applications for exemption under the fifth article of the tenth section, relative to the exemption of officers and agents employed on railroads may be made directly to the commandant of conscripts for the State, who will grant the certificate of exemption authorized by law upon a compliance with the conditions contained in the act of Congress by the officers therein mentioned.

VI. The attention of all officers of the Government, and especially of those belonging to the military departments mentioned therein, is directed to the language and purport of the eighth section of the act of Congress above recited. Congress has manifested in various enactments the policy to withdraw from the civil service all persons capable of performing duty in the field, and this section of the act is an emphatic declaration of that intention, accompanied with a severe penalty to be imposed upon the officer who may frustrate it. The Bureau of Conscription will proceed to enroll for duty all persons who may be so employed. But, to prevent the inconvenience and disorder that would follow from the instantaneous execution of the law, details may be granted until the 10th day of April next, for such of those persons as the head of any department or the chief of any bureau or the principal officer of the same in any State shall certify to be necessary for that time to carry on the business in which they are employed. In the meantime, it is made the duty of the officers controlling this class of persons to substitute, as far as practicable, persons who are designated in this act as proper to fill such employments for those that are made liable to service by the act.

VII. Conscripts unfit for duty in the field, but capable of performing other duties named in the eighth section of the act recited, will be received and recommended accordingly by the board of examiners for conscripts, who in their reports will state distinctly for what service or for which department of the Army such conscripts are best fitted; and commandants of conscripts will assign them in accordance with such recommendations, or, failing to do this, will report for assignment through the Bureau of Conscription, to the chief or head of the department in which they have been recommended for service, the names of such conscripts. All certificates of exemption for disability will be signed by the Examining Board, and be approved by the enrolling officer of the Congressional district; and when the certificate sets forth that the disability is decided and permanent, it will exempt the party from molestation by enrolling officers, unless otherwise ordered from the Bureau of Conscription.

VIII. The examining boards will forward one copy of the monthly report of conscripts examined, through the enrolling officer of the Congressional district, to the commandant of conscripts, who will refer the same, with remarks, to the Bureau of Conscription. The boards will also forward one copy direct to the Surgeon-General.

IX. Medical officers and employed physicians on examining boards for conscripts will not be assigned to Congressional districts of which they are residents. The employed physicians will receive the pay and allowances of assistant surgeons.

X. Medical officers detailed for duty on examining boards for conscripts will be directed to report for orders to the commandants of conscripts of States.

XI. Besides the officers of the Confederate and State governments particularly named in the act of Congress, the officers of the Government of the Confederate States whose nominations have been made by the President and confirmed by the Senate, or who have been appointed by the judges of the district courts, under the authority confided by any act of Congress, will be exempted from military service until further orders; also the judges or justices of any supreme, superior, or circuit court of any State; also the judges of probate, clerk of any court of record, ordinary, sheriff, one tax collector in each county, and recorder of deeds and wills, if there be such an officer existing by law, and such other officers of the State provided by law as the Governor shall certify to be necessary to the proper administration of the State government.

XII. All persons who have been exempted on account of religious faith under act of Congress approved 11th of October, 1862, and who have paid the tax or $500 therein provided for, will be exempt from enrollment in the military service.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 27. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,

I. The attention of the Army is called to the second and third sections of the act of Congress entitled "An act to organize forces to serve during the war," approved 17th of February, 1864.

SEC. 2. That all the persons aforesaid, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, now in service, shall be retained, during the present war with the United States, in the same regiments, battalions and companies to which they belong at the passage of this act, with the same organization and officers, unless regularly transferred or discharged, in accordance with the laws and regulations for the government of the Army: Provided, That companies from one State, organized against their consent, expressed at the time, with regiments or battalions from another State, shall have the privilege of being transferred to organizations of troops in the same arm of the service from the States in which said companies were raised, and the soldiers from one State in companies from another State shall be allowed, if they desire it, a transfer to organizations from their own State in the same arm of the service.

SEC. 3. That, at the expiration of six months from the 1st day of April next a bounty of one hundred dollars in a 6 per centum Government bond, which the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, shall be paid to every non-commissioned officer, musician and private who shall then be in the service. or, in the event of his death previous to the period of such payment, then to the person or persons who would be entitled by law to receive the arrearages of his pay; but no one shall be entitled to the bounty herein provided who shall, at any time during the period of six months next after the said first day of April, be absent from his command without leave.

II. The generals of departments will ascertain whether there be in their respective departments any company or companies from one State associated with companies belonging to another State, either in battalions or regiments, who were placed in such organizations against their consent, expressed at the time, and will report the same to the Adjutant and Inspector General as soon as practicable, with a recommendation that they be transferred, if they now desire it, to some organization of troops in the same arm of the service from the State in which the said companies were raised.

III. Measures will be taken by the commanding generals of departments to place in companies of the same arm of the service in which they are serving, raised in States to which they respectively belong, the privates who are serving in companies raised in other States. This privilege will be freely granted to all privates making the application. A private will be considered as belonging to that State in which he was residing for twelve months prior to his enlistment. Measures will also be taken to have proper rolls prepared on the 1st of April, proximo, or as soon after as practicable, and returned to the Office of the Adjutant and Inspector General, so as to secure to all the persons designated in the third section of the above-recited act the benefits conferred by it.

WAR DEPARTMENT,

Richmond, Va., March 2, 1864.

Governor Z. B. VANCE,

Raleigh, N. C.:

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I am duly in receipt of yours of 17th ultimo. I have already written you of the difficulty of transporting to Wilmington a sufficiency of cotton to meet our urgent and pressing wants. Lieutenant-Colonel Sims, chief of the railroad bureau, to whom I had referred your letter, returns it indorsed:

All the rolling-stock that can be found is now employed in running cotton to Wilmington, and instructions have been sent out to load all trains with Government cotton to the exclusion of that owned by private parties. Nothing more can be done without diverting some of the corn trains.

You will see, therefore, that every effort is being made to transport the Government cotton to Wilmington. On 26th ultimo Mr. Seixas was enabled to borrow 600 bales of cotton from some parties in Wilmington, and I at once telegraphed him to pay over 300 of them to your agent. The balance of the debt will be canceled as rapidly as possible.

Your obedient servant, very respectfully,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
Columbia, March 2, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: In reply to yours of 21st of January declining to discharge soldiers appointed to the military academy of the State, I ask leave to call your attention to the resolution of the Legislature, a copy of which I inclose.* Many of these boys entered the service before they were sixteen years old, have fought gallantly, made good soldiers, and deserve to be placed on the roll of honor, which a grateful State has provided for such services. While no one can be more anxious than myself to fill the ranks of the Army, yet I cannot be insensible to the claims of the State and the duty which she owes to those gallant youths who have so well maintained her character and honor in the field. I cannot agree with you, without some qualification, that the Army is the best school of instruction. To one who has been well grounded in all the elementary branches it may be, but to one who can barely read and write, it is certainly better to allow him the opportunities which the State has afforded by this resolution, and thus fit him to command and to become an educated and accomplished officer. I ask also to call your attention to the fact that the number to be appointed is but six a year, and all of these do not come from the Army—not more than half—as some are the sons of deceased soldiers, and are taken from civil life. It is also proper to state that the appointments made by the Board of Visitors are entirely distinct and not included in the application here made. I respectfully suggest that the discharges now claimed are too few to make a material diminution of the Army. I therefore think it is due to the Legislature that I press upon you the propriety of discharging from service such appointments as I have made or may hereafter make under this resolution.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. L. BONHAM.

His Excellency M. L. BONHAM,
Governor of South Carolina, Columbia, S. C.:

SIR: Your letter of the 23d ultimo is received. In reply I have the honor to say that conscripts are devoted to the organizations existing on the 16th of April, 1862, when the first act passed. In making assignments, however, the principle, which has been considered most equitable, has been to assign in the ratio of deficiencies in each company until the minimum fixed by law is attained in all, and the Conscript Bureau has been instructed to observe this rule. I trust its equity and policy will commend it to your approval.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

GENERAL ORDERS, {
No. 28. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,

I. Paragraph V, General Orders, No. 13, 1864, is thus amended:

Officers of the Quartermaster's Department will, upon the requisition of company commanders, issue clothing directly to soldiers and take their individual receipts therefor.

II. Paragraph II, General Orders, No. 67, 1863, is amended as follows:

If any cavalryman "shall not keep himself provided with a serviceable horse, he shall serve on foot," and be transferred to any regiment of infantry from the State from which he volunteered or was conscribed that the department commander may order.

III. The following act of Congress is published for the information of the Army:

AN ACT to allow commissioned officers of the Army rations and the privilege of purchasing clothing from the Quartermaster's Department.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That from and after the passage of this act, all commissioned officers of the armies, whilst on duty in the field, or in the naval service, whilst afloat, of the Confederate States, shall be entitled to one ration in kind each, in quantity and quality, the same as are now allowed by law to privates, and shall draw and receive the same under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That all commissioned officers of the armies of the Confederate States shall be allowed to purchase clothing, and cloth for clothing, from any quartermaster, at the price which it cost the Government, all expenses included: Provided, That no quartermaster shall be allowed to sell to any officer any clothing or cloth for clothing which would be proper to issue to privates, until all privates entitled to receive the same shall have been first supplied: Provided, That the officer offering to purchase shall give his certificate, on honor, that the articles are necessary for his own personal comfort and use, and in no case shall more than one suit per annum be allowed to be so purchased by any officer: Provided, That no law or army regulation shall hereafter be construed to allow an officer to purchase or draw from subsistence stores, more than one ration a day, or for less price than the cost thereof, including transportation.

SEC. 3. That no officer under the rank of brigadier-general shall hereafter be entitled to forage, or commutation for forage, for more than one horse, except when on service in the field.

Approved February 17, 1864.

IV. Rations in kind, the same in quality and quantity as are now allowed by law to privates, will be issued to regimental commissioned officers whilst on duty in the field, upon provision returns approved by the commanding officer of the regiment, and to general and staff officers upon their own certificates.

V. One ration a day in kind may be purchased by any officer not in the field, who is upon duty under orders from this office or from any department commander, at cost, including transportation.

VI. Officers retired in accordance with the act to provide an invalid corps, approved February 17, 1864, are not entitled to draw or purchase rations unless assigned to duty by orders under the provisions of that law.

VII. The Quartermaster-General will issue instructions to quartermasters and assistant quartermasters to carry into effect section 3 of the above act and so much of section 2 of the same act as relates to his department.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

CIRCULAR } CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
 No. 7. } WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
 Richmond, Va., March 4, 1864.

Commandants of conscripts will forthwith order all officers engaged in conscription service in their respective States to be examined by such medical boards as may be designated by the commandant, with the view of ascertaining what officers are fitted for service in the field.

The certificates of the Examining Board will recite the exact status of the officers, and also the extent of any alleged disability, and whether said disability has arisen from wounds or disease received or contracted while in the service of the Confederate States.

The certificates will be forwarded to this Bureau with remarks by the commandants.

By command of Col. John S. Preston, superintendent:

C. B. DUFFIELD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Official regulations to carry into effect the act "to impose regulations upon the foreign commerce of the Confederate States to provide for the public defense."

I.—AS TO THE SEA.

1. The owners of any vessel intending to sail from a Confederate port with a cargo consisting in whole or in part of cotton, tobacco, military and naval stores, sugar, molasses, or rice, shall, before lading on board of any such articles, file with the collector of the port from which the vessel is to sail a copy of her register with a declaration of the names of the owners and officers thereof, the place of their birth and of their residence for the preceding year, together with the port or place to which the said vessel proposes to sail. The said declaration shall also set forth the quantity and value, in Confederate currency, of the cargo proposed to be taken out, as also the consent of the said owners that one-half of the tonnage of the said vessel may be employed by the Confederate Government for its own use, both on the outward and homeward voyage, at the rate of freight hereinafter mentioned. The collector shall submit a statement as to the owners and officers to the military commandant of the port, and if he shall not object to their loyalty or to the sailing of the vessel for reasons of military necessity the collector shall grant a permit for the lading of the said vessel, one-half for account of the owners and one-half for account of the Confederate States.

2. Before the said lading shall be completed the owners of the vessel shall execute to the Confederate States a bond in double the value of the vessel, with security deemed adequate by the collector, conditioned that she will pursue the voyage designated, and that she will return with reasonable dispatch to a Confederate port after her outward cargo shall be discharged, with a cargo consisting one-half of articles not prohibited by the laws of Confederate Government and the other half of such articles as the Government shall offer for shipment from such port, at the rate of freight hereinafter mentioned.

3. Each shipper of any portion of the cargo proposed to be laden on board the said vessel shall, before the lading thereof, make application to the collector for a permit to lade the same, which application shall declare the articles to be shipped and the quantity and value thereof in Confederate currency, the port of destination, and the name of the consignee. A permit shall be granted by the collector if the application is deemed satisfactory. The lading shall be had under the inspection of a revenue officer, who shall be charged with the duty of seeing that the goods laden conform to the permit.

4. Before the completion of the lading on board or the granting a clearance each shipper of any portion of the cargo shall execute and deliver to the collector a bond to the Confederate States in double the value of his shipment in Confederate money, with security deemed adequate by the collector, with condition that at least one-half the net proceeds of said shipment shall be invested in goods or articles not prohibited by law, and that the said goods or articles shall be shipped by the same or some other vessel to the Confederate States within sixty days from the unloading of said cargo; or that the said half of the net proceeds shall be paid in coin or sterling exchange to the proper agent of the Confederate States, to be reimbursed to the shipper by the delivery to him of cotton at the port of departure in the Confederate States at the rate of 10 pence sterling per pound for middling uplands.

5. The freight to be paid by the Confederate States on all cotton and tobacco shipped from a Confederate port shall be 5 pence sterling per pound, payable on delivery at the port of destination in coin or sterling exchange. Return freight shall be at the rate of £25 per ton, payable on its delivery in the Confederate port, in cotton at 10 pence sterling per pound for middling uplands, and at a proportionate price for cotton of other qualities. In calculating the ton of freight by weight, 2,240 pounds shall be allowed; by measure, 40 cubic feet shall be allowed.

6. If the outward-bound vessel shall consent, at the request of the Government, to take two-thirds of her cargo for account of the Confederate States, the outward freight shall be 6 pence sterling per pound; and whenever the Government is not prepared to fill up any portion of the tonnage reserved for its use at the time at which any vessel may be made ready to sail, the owners may fill up the same on their own account; but no vessel shall, without consent of the Government, sail on her outward voyage until one-third of her cargo shall be laden for the use of the Government.

7. The rate of freight for articles other than cotton and tobacco shall be adjusted at the same relative rate and be payable in the same way.

8. The Government reserves the right to limit or prohibit the shipment of resin, turpentine, or any manufacture thereof, whenever deemed dangerous to its own shipment.

9. Upon the completion of the lading of the vessel, and before receiving her clearance, there shall be delivered to the collector, in addition to the usual manifest, another, setting forth the names, ages, and description of her officers and crew and of every passenger intending to sail in her. The said last-mentioned manifest shall be delivered to the commandant of the port, who shall thereupon cause the entire vessel to be searched, and if satisfied that the parties on board are persons who may safely be permitted to leave the Confederacy, and the passengers have the proper passports, he shall certify the same on the manifest and return the same to the collector, whereupon, and not before, a clearance shall be granted to the vessel, and she shall be permitted to sail.

10. The owners of each vessel and of each portion of a cargo sailing from a Confederate port shall be allowed to take up their respective bonds by producing to the collector the certificate of the proper agent of the Confederate Government at the port of delivery, setting forth the particulars showing that the said party has complied with the obligation of the said bond so far as the same was practicable; and the collector, upon being duly satisfied, shall be authorized to surrender the said bonds.

11. Nothing in these regulations shall be so construed as to conflict with the proviso of the law which declares "that nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the Confederate States, or any of them, from exporting any of the articles herein enumerated on their own account;" nor shall a bond be required of a State in any case.

12. The penalties of all bonds executed in conformity with these regulations shall be recovered in full on proof of breach of the conditions of the bond, and without proof of any damage suffered by the Confederate States in consequence of such breach, and all bonds shall be executed in such force as to give effect to this regulation.

13. Vessels sent into the Confederacy for the purpose of exporting cotton received in payment of any Confederate bond or obligation shall be subject to these regulations only as far as relates to such portion of the tonnage, if any, as may remain vacant after the lading of the cotton received in payment as aforesaid.

14. The regulations for overland commerce with neutral countries will be issued separately within a few days.

Approved.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 29. } Richmond, March 5, 1864.

I. The following acts of Congress are published for the information of the Army:

AN ACT to prevent the procuring, aiding, and assisting persons to desert from the Army of the Confederate States, and for other purposes.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That every person not subject to the Rules and Articles of War, who shall procure or entice a soldier or person enrolled for service in the Army of the Confederate States to desert; or who shall aid or assist any deserter from the Army, or any person enrolled for service, to evade their proper commanders, or to prevent their arrest to be returned to the service; or who shall knowingly conceal or harbor any such deserter; or shall purchase from any soldier or person enrolled for service any portion of his arms, equipments, rations or clothing, or any property belonging to the Confederate States or any officer or soldier of the Confederate States, shall, upon conviction before the district court of the Confederate States, having jurisdiction of the offense, be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

Approved January 22, 1864.

AN ACT to aid any State in communicating with, and perfecting records concerning its troops.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That upon the application of the Governor of any of the Confederate States, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant passports and transportation to an officer of such State, duly commissioned according to the law of said State, to communicate with its troops for such purposes, and at such times and places as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and such officer shall be allowed to purchase for himself supplies from the commissary stores, on the same terms with officers of similar rank in the service of the Confederate States, and according to the regulations which govern them: Provided, Such supplies shall not exceed those which a colonel of the Confederate States is allowed to purchase: Provided, That these agents shall be charged with the duty of obtaining from the officers in command of companies, final statements of deceased soldiers, to be filed in the Second Auditor's Office, to facilitate the settlement of such claims.

Approved February 16, 1864.

AN ACT creating the office of ensign in the Army of the Confederate States.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That there shall be appointed by the President, to each regiment of infantry in the Army of the Confederate States an officer to be known as ensign, with the rank, pay and allowances of a first lieutenant, whose duty it shall be to bear the colors of the regiment, but without right to command in the field.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to authorize the promotion of officers, non-commissioned officers and privates for distinguished skill or valor.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President is hereby authorized upon the recommendation of the general commanding a department or a separate army in the field, to fill any vacancy in the commissioned officers of a regiment or battalion, by the promotion to the same, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of any officer, non-commissioned officer or private who may have distinguished himself by exhibiting peculiar valor or skill on the battle-field: Provided, That the officer, non-commissioned officer or private so recommended and nominated for promotion, shall belong to the regiment or battalion in which the vacancy may have occurred.

SEC. 2. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the above provisions are hereby repealed.

Approved February 17, 1864.

(6.)

AN ACT to amend the act entitled "An act to provide and organize engineer troops to serve during the war," approved twentieth March, eighteen hundred and sixty-three.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the above-recited act be so amended that there shall be allowed to each regiment of engineer troops two quartermaster-sergeants.

Approved February 17, 1864.

(7.)

AN ACT to amend the acts of April first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and September twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the acts approved twenty-first April, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and twenty-third September, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, regulating the increase and rank of the Corps of Engineers of the Provisional Army, be amended to read as follows: That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional number of officers in the Engineer Corps, of the Provisional Army: Provided, That the whole corps shall not exceed one hundred and twenty, and that the number of officers in each grade be limited to three colonels, four lieutenant-colonels, eight majors, forty-five captains, thirty-five first lieutenants, and twenty-five second lieutenants.

* Relates to the sustenance of prisoners of war, and is published in Series II, Vol. VI, p. 964.

SEC. 2. There may be appointed six military store-keepers, with the pay and allowances of captain of infantry, who shall give such bond for the faithful performance of their duty as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the said store-keepers shall be appointed from persons who are disqualified for active service by reason of wounds received in the military service, or disease contracted whilst in the Army, or from persons over forty-five years of age.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to provide and organize engineer troops to serve during the war," approved March twentieth, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That an act "to provide and organize engineer troops to serve during the war," approved twentieth March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, be amended to read as follows: That there shall be selected, in such manner as the Secretary of War may direct, from each division of infantry in service, or from every twelve regiments when not formed into divisions, one company of engineer troops, to consist of one hundred men, chosen with a view to their mechanical skill and physical fitness, and that the men assigned to such company shall be required to serve in the same only during the balance of their term of service respectively. These companies may be formed or recruited from conscripts and volunteers.

SEC. 2. That each company shall consist of eight sergeants, seven corporals, forty artificers and forty-five laborers, and that two musicians may be added.

SEC. 3. That the commissioned officers of each company shall consist of one captain, one first lieutenant and two second lieutenants; and that the original vacancies in these companies shall be filled by the transfer of officers of corresponding grade from the Engineer Corps, if practicable, and where not, then from the other corps or from the line or staff of the Army, reference being always had to their qualifications as engineers, or by selection; but no one shall be selected who is not now serving in or with the Army, unless he is a military or civil engineer.

SEC. 4. That the companies shall be organized into regiments of ten companies each, and that the field and staff officers shall consist of one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, one major, one adjutant with the rank of first lieutenant, one quartermaster-sergeant, and one sergeant-major; and that the original vacancies in the regiments shall be filled in the manner provided for filling the same in the companies by the third section of this act.

SEC. 5. That in each regiment two of the companies shall be assigned to duty as pontoniers, and each be furnished with a bridge train complete.

SEC. 6. That the officer in charge of the Engineer Bureau, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall prescribe the number, form, and dimensions of the wagons, pontoons, trestles, tools, implements, arms and other necessities for all the troops organized by this act.

SEC. 7. That vacancies in the established regiments to and including the rank of captain, shall be filled by promotion regimentally, according to seniority, except in case of disability or other incompetency. The field officers shall be appointed by selections from the captains of the regiments or battalions, except in the case of original appointment or vacancy caused by promotion to original vacancy of higher rank.

SEC. 8. That the monthly pay of the engineer troops shall be as follows: Of a colonel, two hundred and ten dollars; of a lieutenant-colonel, one hundred and eighty-five dollars; of a major, one hundred and sixty-two dollars; of a captain, one hundred and forty dollars; of a first lieutenant, one hundred dollars; of a second lieutenant, ninety dollars; and the adjutant shall receive ten dollars per month in addition to his pay as lieutenant.

SEC. 9. That the pay of the enlisted men per month shall be as follows: The sergeant-major and quartermaster-seargent, each thirty-four dollars; sergeants, thirty-four dollars; corporals, twenty dollars; artificers, seventeen dollars; laborers and musicians, thirteen dollars.

SEC. 10. The mounted engineer troops may be selected from the cavalry, and be organized according to the provisions of this act, for engineer troops, as hereinbefore specified.

SEC. 11. Officers of the Engineer Corps and of the engineer troops of the Provisional Army of equal rank may, with mutual consent, be transferred: Provided, The relative rank of no officer of either corps be prejudiced thereby.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to amend the Sixty-fifth Article of War.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the Sixty-fifth Article of War be so amended as to read as follows: Articlesixty-five. Any general officer commanding an army or commanding a force of cavalry not with and under the immediate command of the commander of an army, or other officer commanding a separate department, may appoint general courts-martial whenever necessary. But no sentence of a court-martial shall be carried into execution until after the whole proceedings shall have been laid before the officer ordering the same, or the officer commanding the troops for the time being; neither shall any sentence of a general court-martial in time of peace, extending to the loss of life, or the dismissal of a commissioned officer, or which shall, either in time of peace or war, respect a general officer, be carried into execution until after the whole proceedings shall have been transmitted to the Secretary of War, to be laid before the President of the Confederate States for his confirmation or disapproval and orders in the case. All other sentences may be confirmed and executed by the officer ordering the court to assemble, or the commanding officer for the time being, as the case may be.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to organize military courts to attend the Army of the Confederate States in the field, and to define the powers of said courts."

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the act entitled "An act to organize military courts to attend the Army of the Confederate States in the field, and to define the powers of said courts," be so amended as to authorize the President to establish one in North Alabama, which shall sit at such times and places as said court may direct, and shall have all the powers and jurisdiction given to said military courts by said act; but the judges thereof shall give ten days' notice of the times and places of holding said courts before the same are held: Provided, however, That said court shall cease to exist after one year from the passage of this act, unless longer continued by Congress.

Approved February 13, 1864.

AN ACT to authorize the President to establish additional military courts.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That in addition to the military courts now authorized by law, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a military court to attend any division of cavalry in the field, and also one for each State within a military department, whenever, in his judgment, such courts would promote the public interest; which courts shall be organized, and have the same powers and duties, and the members thereof appointed as provided by law.

Approved February 16, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to organize military courts to attend the Army of the Confederate States in the field, and to define the powers of said courts," approved October ninth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That when two or more army corps are united in the same army, charges shall be referred to said courts, and their proceedings be subject to review by the army commander, as in the case of general courts-martial; and that the jurisdiction of each of said courts shall extend to any person connected with the army of which the corps to which the court is attached may be a part, without being limited to members of the particular corps to which said court may be attached.

SEC. 2. That when the corps to which any military court may be attached shall, from any cause, cease to exist as such, the Secretary of War shall assign the members and officers of such court to any other unsupplied corps, or other subdivision of any of the armies of the Confederate States, where a military court may be needed; and exchanges and transfers of individual members and officers from any one court to another, may be made by the Secretary of War, on application of the parties concerned; the consent of the commander or commanders of the army or armies to which the particular courts may belong having been first obtained to such exchange or transfer.

SEC. 3. That the fourth section of the act of which this is amendatory be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to extend the jurisdiction of the military courts to all offenders below the grade of lieutenant-general.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to confer additional powers upon courts-martial and military courts.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That any military court or court-martial convened within the Army of the Confederate States shall have power to summon as a witness before it any citizen of the State in which said court may, at the time, hold its session; and any citizen disobeying said summons, upon information given thereof by the judge-advocate of said military court or court-martial to the judge of the district court of the Confederate States for the district in which said citizen may reside, shall be subject to the same penalties as for disobedience of an order of said district court; or, on application of the judge-advocate, such citizen witness may, by military force, be arrested and brought before said military court or court-martial by order of the commander of the Army, and may be held in close confinement until he or she shall consent to testify.

SEC. 2. That any citizen witness appearing upon being summoned, as provided in this act, shall be paid such reasonable amount for his or her attendance as the commander of the Army shall deem reasonable, which payment shall be made by any paymaster, upon the certificate of said commander, specifying the amount.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to authorize commanders of corps and departments to detail field officers as members of military courts, under certain circumstances.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That commanders of corps and departments be, and they are hereby, authorized to detail field officers as members of military courts, whenever any of the judges of said courts shall be disqualified by consanguinity or affinity, or unable, from sickness or other unavoidable cause, to attend said courts.

Approved February 6, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to punish drunkenness in the Army," approved April twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the jurisdiction conferred upon courts of inquiry in the act above recited is hereby repealed, and the said jurisdiction is hereby conferred, for the punishment of the offence therein named, upon the military courts and general courts-martial convened in the Army of the Confederate States; and the proceedings therein shall be subject to review as in other cases.

SEC. 2. That any citizen of the Confederate States is hereby authorized to make report of any violation of the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment, in the same manner as officers of the Army are now required to do.

SEC. 3. Upon any trial for drunkenness, it shall be lawful to prove, without special charge, that the accused is of intemperate habits; and if the court shall find that he is of such habits, he shall be cashiered or otherwise punished, at the discretion of the court.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to authorize the organization of auxiliary bureaus of the War Department west of the Mississippi River.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That under the direction of the President, such bureaus or agencies of the War Department may be organized west of the Mississippi River as the public service may require, which shall be auxiliary to the similar bureaus of said Department established by law, and shall perform such duties as may be directed by instructions from the Secretary of War, or the general commanding in the Trans-Mississippi Department, acting under the authority of the War Department.

SEC. 2. Such staff officers and clerks may be assigned to duty, or appointed by the President in these bureaus, as may be necessary for the service; and under authority from the President, the general commanding in the Trans-Mississippi Department may assign such officers to duty, or make appointments therein, subject to the approval of the President: Provided, That no clerk employed under this act shall be allowed a salary exceeding $2,000 per annum, or be liable to military duty.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT authorizing chaplains, in certain cases, to draw forage for one horse.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That chaplains in the Army, in actual service in the field, shall be entitled to draw forage for one horse: Provided, The chaplain has a horse in his use.

Approved January 22, 1864.

AN ACT relating to the appointment of a general and lieutenant-generals.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President may appoint one general in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States, when, in his discretion, it shall be deemed necessary and proper, for the command of the Trans-Mississippi Military Department, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That the President may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint lieutenant-generals in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States, when, in his discretion, it shall be deemed necessary for the command of any one of the military departments.

SEC. 3. That the officers appointed under the provisions of this act, shall continue to hold the rank herein provided, so long as they shall efficiently discharge the duties in command of said several departments, and no longer, but will resume thereafter their former rank in the service.

Approved February 17, 1864.

A BILL to repeal an act to organize bands of partisan rangers, approved April twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and for other purposes.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the act of Congress aforesaid be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That organizations of partisan rangers acting as regular cavalry at the passage of this act, shall be continued in their present organization: Provided, They shall hereafter be considered as regular cavalry and not as partisan rangers.

SEC. 2. That all the bands of partisan rangers organized under the said act, may, as the interests of the service allow, be united with other organizations, or be organized into battalions and regiments, with the view to bringing them under the general conditions of the Provisional Army as to discipline, control and movements, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War shall be authorized, if he deems proper, for a time, or permanently, to except from the operation of this act such companies as are serving within the lines of the enemy, and under such conditions as he may prescribe.

Approved February 17, 1864.

AN ACT to increase the compensation of certain civil officers and employes in the President's Office and in the Executive and Legislative Departments, at Richmond, for a limited period.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the salaries and compensation of all civil officers and employes in the President's Office, and in the Executive and Legislative Departments, at Richmond, whose compensation or salaries do not exceed the sum of $2,000 per annum, shall be increased from the passage of this act to the 15th of May, 1864, at the rate of 100 per cent. per annum: Provided, The same shall not be thereby increased beyond the rate of $3,000 per annum; and the salaries of all said officers whose compensation is above $2,000, and does not exceed the sum of $3,000 per annum, shall, for the same period of time, be increased at the rate of 50 per cent. per annum; but it is hereby expressly declared that the increased compensation provided for by this act, shall not be paid to any officer or employé in any Executive Department of the Government, who is liable to perform military duty, or is able to bear arms in the field, unless such officer or employé shall first obtain a certificate from the head of the department in which he is engaged, that his services are absolutely necessary to the Government, and that his place cannot be supplied by any one known to the head of the department who is not subject to military duty, which said certificate shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury before the money is paid; and it shall be the duty of the said Secretary, at the beginning of each session, to communicate a list of all such certificates to Congress: Provided, That no clerk who, by virtue of a military commission, receives rations, or commutation of rations, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act.

NITER AND MINING BUREAU,
Richmond, Va., March 5, 1864.

Capt. WILLIAM GABBETT,
Supt. Districts Nos. 8 and 9, Blue Mountain, Ala.:

The attention of district superintendents of the niter and mining service is called to General Orders, Nos. 18 and 26, current series.

In all districts exposed to the enemy a military organization, with simple drill for an irregular force moving rapidly, will be arranged by each superintendent, to embrace all the workmen who can be conveniently assembled on short notice. To retain unquestioned control over the men it is essential that each superintendent should command as field officer, always bearing in mind that "military orders must be subordinate to work." Beyond this the organization will conform as closely as possible to the "local defense act." Arms will be furnished on requisition.

When such organization is completed the superintendent will report the fact to the general commanding district or department, and, representing the urgent requisitions for ordnance stores upon the niter and mining service, will state the wish of the Secretary of War that their force shall only be called off in extreme cases and returned at the earliest moment.

All interruptions of work in violation of General Orders, No. 18, will be promptly reported for the action of the Secretary of War, with a concise statement of names, dates, and facts. To the officer so offending, if claiming to act under superior orders, a calm protest will be made, if possible in writing, fixing a distinct responsibility upon his actions for damage thereby inflicted upon the service. At the same time all reasonable aid will be extended to officers of the enrolling service acting in the proper discharge of their duties.

Special attention is directed to the absence of restriction upon the labor of the niter and mining service in the act "to organize forces for the war."

The officers of this service, thus placed upon honor, are expected to exercise unusual vigilance in sending to the Army every man that can possibly be spared by substituting therefor exempt and negro labor. Clerical work must be performed by those who cannot render field service, special care being taken to employ, where practicable, refugee ladies in needy circumstances.

In all these arrangements results must first be studied. Returns of material must be increased, not diminished. Where this can be done by substituted labor especial credit will be awarded, but until the Secretary of War shall see proper to recall the conscript labor at present employed usefully and effectively, the superintendent can continue existing arrangements rather than risk a deficient supply.

The charge indicated in these instructions calls for a peculiar degree of devotion and personal forbearance. While the frequent misappreciation of labors so important is deeply to be regretted, yet, under the orders of the Secretary of War, it remains for the corps to press on quietly, resolutely, and most earnestly in the effort to do double duty during the present critical campaign.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: In obedience to your instructions I returned home after the adjournment of Congress and proceeded at once to encourage the raising and organization of volunteer companies, battalions, and regiments, to be composed of persons between seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty years of age, under the late military bill for State defense, &c. I wrote Governor Brown, asking his co-operation, and inclose herewith an exact copy of his reply, from which it appears that the question of the propriety of the proposed organization of this class of troops will be submitted to the Legislature, soon to assemble in extra session. In my efforts to get volunteers I find the young men disposed to come promptly forward, but the men over forty-five, with few exceptions, refuse to volunteer, giving as a reason that it will be time enough to do so when called out by order of the President. In view of this state of affairs I beg to suggest that it would greatly facilitate volunteering if the President would issue his order allowing a limited time within which to volunteer, and upon failure to do so to be enrolled. I have about twenty companies in process of organization, and hope to be able to send you before the expiration of the present month the muster-rolls of two or more regiments. Please send me such instructions as may be necessary, and if deemed advisable submit this letter and inclosure to the President.

Col. L. J. GARTRELL:

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter I state that I can make no statement about the enrollment of men between forty-five and fifty till I know the pleasure of the Legislature soon to assemble. When last in session they passed an act directing me to have enrolled all such for State defense, and I do not know that they will recognize the right of the Confederate Government now to take them all out of the hands of the State. If conscription is legal and constitutional, as our courts hold, for raising armies in the proper sense of that term, it does not follow that Congress is authorized to take into its own hands the internal police regulations of the States and deprive the States of the power to execute their own laws or to suppress internal insurrections.

I am, very respectfully, &c.,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 5, 1864.

His Excellency Z. B. VANCE,
Governor of North Carolina:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 29th ultimo relative to an apprehended collision between the Confederate and State authorities in the enforcement of the recent law of Congress abolishing conscription. You cannot deprecate more a collision of such a character, nor be more anxious to avoid it, than myself, and yet I am unable to perceive how naturally or rightfully, in the enforcement of the law, such collision can occur.

The decision of Judge Pearson on the constitutionality of the law abolishing substitution appears, to my humble judgment, strange and clearly incorrect, and, being contrary to the general course of decision and received opinion, and only in a case at chambers, cannot be considered as settling the law. An appeal has therefore been directed in the particular case, and the enrolling officers directed to proceed in enrolling under the law. Judge Pearson's decision, found even inaccurate, is, of course, until reversed, the law of the particular case, and will be respected as such. No effort will therefore be made to arrest or enroll the man temporarily discharged by him, and how then can any possible obligation be imposed on you to execute the judgment or protect that man? You have, I presume, been inaccurately informed, or have incorrectly presumed the action of the enrolling officers would be against that man. In other cases arising under that special law, or others imposing military service, when persons seeking to avoid military service sue out writs of habeas corpus, officers are instructed not to appear with the person, but to make return according to the precise and clear provision of the late law, that the person is held by authority of the President for attempting to avoid military service. The act, then, by its plain language, not susceptible of doubt or misconstruction, suspends the writ so long as the writ is in force. It cannot be presumed that any judge will be guilty of the judicial usurpation of disregarding such return and attempt to enforce the writ. Should such assumption be practiced, collision would only result from the wanton, unauthorized attempt by violence to take from the Confederate officer the person of the petitioner, or to take the officer himself for punishment. In such event the State authorities could clearly not be justified in such acts of aggressive violence, and it is not deemed necessary to advert to what, under his oath of office, would be the plain duty of the President to see to the due enforcement of the laws and the protection of Confederate officers acting in conformity to them. You will the more readily appreciate this obligation, because in another aspect, under a mistaken conception of the proposed action of the Confederate Government, you have seen no alternative to the discharge of a kindred duty.

In view of the facts as they exist, and of the proposed action of the Confederate Government, I trust all apprehension of collision may be dismissed, and yet there will not be the necessity of foregoing, during the ensuing critical campaign (on which the civil liberties of all may depend), the services of a considerable number of efficient soldiers, which the arrangement you suggest would withdraw, to await a judicial adjudication, which, I am happy to think, cannot be doubtful.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, {
No. 30.

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,

I. The following act of Congress concerning impressments, and the instructions of the War Department respecting it, are published for the information and direction of all concerned:

AN ACT to amend "An act to regulate impressments," approved March twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and to repeal an act amendatory thereof, approved April twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and sixty-three.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That in all cases where property is impressed for the use of the Army or Navy, or for other public use, under said act, the same shall be paid for at the time of said impressment, unless an appeal shall be taken from said valuation, as hereinafter provided, according to the valuation agreed upon between the parties, or ascertained by loyal and disinterested citizens of the city, county, or parish in which the impressment may be made, in the manner and according to the regulations provided in the first, second, and third sections of the above-recited act, or in the eighth section thereof, where it is applicable.

SEC. 2. Whenever the officer making the impressment of property, under the act hereby amended, shall believe that the appraisement is fair and just, he shall indorse his approval upon the appraisement, and make payment accordingly; but if he shall believe that it is not fair and just, then he shall refuse to approve, and indorse the reasons of his refusal on the certificate, and shall have the right to appeal from the decision of the appraisers, by reporting the case to the commissioners appointed under said act, to which this is an amendment, for their decision, whose judgment shall be final, and in the meantime the property shall be held and appropriated by the officer impressing the same, who shall give a receipt therefor to the owner, who shall also have the right of appeal, as herein provided.

SEC. 3. The said commissioners shall have power to summon and examine witnesses to enable them to fix the value of property impressed, which shall be a just compensation for the property so impressed, at the time and place of impressment, and when the commissioners shall have fixed the value of property in cases of appeal, they shall furnish the owner and impressing officer with a statement of such value, which valuation by the commissioners shall be within three months from the time of impressment.

SEC. 4. That said commissioners shall be sworn faithfully to discharge all their duties under this act, and the act to which this is an amendment.

SEC. 5. That the tenth section of the act, to which this is an amendment, be stricken out, and the following inserted instead thereof: "No slave laboring on a farm or plantation exclusively devoted to the production of grain or provisions, shall be taken for public use without the consent of the owner, except in case of urgent necessity, and upon the order of the general commanding the department in which said farm or plantation is situated."

SEC. 6. That the act amendatory of the above-recited act, approved April twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and so much of the first section of said act as requires an affidavit to be made by the owner or his agent, that such property was grown, raised or produced by said owner, or held, or has been purchased by him, not for sale or speculation, but for his own use or consumption, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 7. That no impressment shall be made under this act, or the act to which this is amendatory, for the use or benefit of contractors with the Government.

SEC. 8. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the impressing officer to enter an appeal from any decision of the local appraisers, under the seventh section of the act to which this is amendatory.

Approved February 16, 1864.

II. Impressments according to this act, and the act to which this is an amendment, may be made for necessary supplies for the Confederate armies in the field, and for their accumulation in magazines and at posts and depots, and to carry on the various operations of the military bureaus connected with the War Department, whenever the same cannot be obtained by contract.

III. They may be made under orders from the generals commanding armies, departments, corps, divisions, and by commanders of detached parties, when a necessity arises therefor. These orders may be executed by appropriate officers of the staff belonging to the army. The chiefs of the various bureaus will designate the officers and persons who shall be competent to make impressments under the authority conferred upon them.

IV. Before any impressment shall be made the impressing officer or his agent will make an offer to the owner, his bailee or agent, in writing, for the purchase of the property, describing the property he wishes to purchase, the price he is willing to pay, and the mode of payment, and stating that upon a refusal to accept the same compensation will be made according to the acts of Congress for the regulation of impressments. This notice will be considered as binding the property until the completion of the negotiation for the sale and transfer of the same to the impressing officer. The property will remain in the custody of the owner and at his risk during the pending of these proceedings, unless a delivery of the same be thereupon made to the impressing officer, with his consent. In case of a change of possession under these circumstances, the Confederate States will be regarded as the owner and the property held for its use and at its risk.

V. In all cases in which the offer of an impressing officer is refused he will proceed to adjust the price according to the first section of the act above recited; that is, by the judgment of two loyal and disinterested persons of the city, county, or parish in which the impressment may be made—one to be selected by the owner, his bailee or agent, and one by the impressing officer. In the event of their disagreement, these two will select an umpire of like qualification. The persons thus selected will proceed to assess just compensation for the property so impressed, whether the absolute ownership or the temporary use thereof be required. If the impressing officer believes that the appraisement is fair and just, he will indorse his approval and pay for the property, and the right in the object impressed will become the property of the Confederate States. But if he does not approve of the appraisement, he will decline to approve it, and indorse the reasons for his refusal on the certificate, and forthwith report the case to the commissioners appointed under the fifth section of the act to which the act above recited is an amendment; and in the meantime the property will be taken and a receipt, describing the property and the proceedings for the adjustment of the price and the appeal, given to the owner. The impressing officer will immediately report the case to the appraisers, with a statement of the quality and condition of the property, and his opinion upon the subject.

VI. No officer or agent will impress the necessary supplies which any person may have for the consumption of himself, his family, employés, or slaves, or to carry on his ordinary mechanical, manufacturing, or agricultural employments.

If any question arise as to the fact whether the supplies are necessary, or whether there be a surplus, it will be determined by appraisers mutually selected according to the preceding section, and in this case the decision of the appraisers will be binding on the officer, who will not be allowed an appeal therefrom.

VII. These regulations are published as a substitute for the regulations contained in General Orders, Nos. 37 and 161, series of 1863.

By order:

DEAR SIR: I have to thank you for your two letters of the 23d and 28th ultimo on the subject of the decision of Judge Pearson in North Carolina.* After very careful consideration I cannot see my way clear to any other course than a firm but temperate execution of the acts of Congress for recruiting the Army by enrolling and placing in the service all the men liable to military duty in North Carolina in the same manner and to the same extent as in other States. To yield to any exceptional arrangement by which conscripts in that State shall be kept out of the field until the stress of the impending campaign is passed necessarily involves the result of creating wide and well-founded dissatisfaction in all the other States and in the Army. It would also be a dereliction of duty, for I cannot see that there is any great or pressing necessity which would justify me in refraining from the execution of the law until the will of Congress on the subject could be expressed. It is only in case of such necessity that my sense of duty would permit me to postpone temporarily the execution of any law. The decision of Judge Pearson releasing the conscript in the case before him will of course be respected until the action of the appellate court, for the case was before him prior to the passage of the law suspending the writ of habeas corpus; and although I do not believe that his decision is right, the public interest will not suffer by awaiting the result of the appeal in the one case before him. But I understand that both the other judges of the supreme court of North Carolina have refused writs of habeas corpus since the passage of the law and since Judge Pearson's decision, on the express ground that the act of Congress covers the case of the principals of substitutes, and thus we know that the appellate court will reverse the decision of Judge Pearson. The court of appeals of Virginia has just given an elaborate and unanimous opinion confirming the legislation of Congress as constitutional. In other States like decisions have been rendered, and if, under such circumstances, Judge Pearson should pursue the factious course you anticipate, and should attempt (in defiance of the very words of the law which I am sworn to execute) to put a Confederate officer in prison for contempt for making the exact return to a writ of habeas corpus which the law orders to be made, and which the law says should be sufficient to stop any further action of the judge, I shall not shrink from the issue. I am confident that it will be impossible to mislead or deceive the people of North Carolina on so plain a point, and with this conviction you will see that it is not possible for me to sanction any arrangement which practically relieves for several months the whole body of principals in North Carolina that have furnished substitutes from the operation of a law passed on my own recommendation, and which has already produced such salutary effects in the Army.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

By command of the Secretary of War:

JNO. WITHERS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 9, 1864.

Mr. Thomas E. Courtney is hereby authorized to employ a band of men, not exceeding twenty-five in number, for secret service against the enemy, who will not be liable to conscription while so employed. The band shall operate according to the rules and regulations of this Department for such organizations, and under the restrictions contained herein or that may be prescribed hereafter. This authority may be revoked or the organization disbanded at any time at the pleasure of this Department. Such work as may be necessary may be executed at the workshops of this Department, and powder, chemicals, &c., be furnished. The work and materials furnished to be paid for at the cost thereof to the Government. Transportation for his men and materials will be furnished. The services to be rendered shall be without pay or compensation other than as herein provided.

For the destruction of property of the enemy or injury done, a percentage shall be paid in 4 per cent. bonds, in no case to exceed 50 per cent. of the loss to the enemy, and to be awarded by such officer or officers as shall be charged with such duty by this Department.

The waters and railroads of the Confederate States used by the enemy are properly the subjects and arenas of operations against the enemy's property, whether public or private. Passenger vessels of citizens of the United States on the high seas and private property in the waters and [on] railroads, or within the territory of the United States, is not to be the subject of operations, except as to such articles being the growth and production of the Confederate States as may have been thence removed to the United States. But the public property of the enemy may be destroyed wherever it may be found.

While flag-of-truce boats pass between any point within the lines of the enemy to any point within the Confederate lines no torpedo or other engine of destruction shall be so placed or used as to endanger their safety.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 31. } Richmond, March 10, 1864.

I. The following act of Congress, "for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in certain cases," with the instructions of the War Department, is published for the information of all concerned:

AN ACT to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in certain cases.

Whereas, the Constitution of the Confederate States of America provides, in article first, section nine, paragraph three, that "the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in case of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it;" and whereas, the power of suspending the privilege of said writ, as recognized in said article first, is vested solely in the Congress, which is the exclusive judge of the necessity of such suspension; and whereas, in the opinion of the Congress, the public safety requires the suspension of said writ in the existing case of the invasion of these States by the armies of the United States; and whereas, the President has asked for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, and informed Congress of conditions of public danger which render the suspension of the writ a measure proper for the public defence, against invasion and insurrection: Now, therefore,

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That during the present invasion of the Confederate States, the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus be, and the same is hereby, suspended; but such suspension shall apply only to the cases of persons arrested or detained by order of the President, Secretary of War, or the general officer commanding the Trans-Mississippi Military Department, by the authority and under the control of the President. It is hereby declared that the purpose of Congress in the passage of this act is to provide more effectually for the public safety, by suspending the writ of habeas corpus in the following cases, and no others:

First.—Of treason, or treasonable efforts or combinations to subvert the Government of the Confederate States.

Second.—Of conspiracies to overthrow the Government, or conspiracies to resist the lawful authorities of the Confederate States.

Third.—Of combining to assist the enemy, or of communicating intelligence to the enemy, or giving him aid and comfort.

Fourth.—Of conspiracies, preparations and attempts to incite servile insurrection.

Fifth.—Of desertions or encouraging desertions, of harboring deserters, and of attempts to avoid military service: Provided, That in cases of palpable wrong and oppression by any subordinate officer, upon any party who does not legally owe military service, his superior officer shall grant prompt relief, to the oppressed party, and the subordinate shall be dismissed from office.

Sixth.—Of spies and other emissaries of the enemy.

Seventh.—Of holding correspondence or intercourse with the enemy, without necessity and without the permission of the Confederate States.

Eighth.—Of unlawful trading with the enemy, and other offenses against the laws of the Confederate States, enacted to promote their success in the war.

Ninth.—Of conspiracies or attempts to liberate prisoners of war held by the Confederate States.

Tenth.—Of conspiracies, or attempts or preparations to aid the enemy.

Eleventh.—Of persons advising or inciting others to abandon the Confederate cause, or to resist the Confederate States, or to adhere to the enemy.

Twelfth.—Of unlawfully burning, destroying or injuring, or attempting to burn, destroy or injure, any bridge or railroad, or telegraphic line of communication, or other property, with the intent of aiding the enemy.

Thirteenth.—Of treasonable designs to impair the military power of the Government, by destroying or attempting to destroy, the vessels or arms, or munitions of war, or arsenals, foundries, workshops or other property of the Confederate States.

SEC. 2. The President shall cause proper officers to investigate the cases of all persons so arrested or detained, in order that they may be discharged, if improperly detained, unless they can be speedily tried in the due course of law.

SEC. 3. That during the suspension aforesaid, no military or other officer shall be compelled, in answer to any writ of habeas corpus, to appear in person, or to return the body of any person or persons detained by him by the authority of the President, Secretary of War, or the general officer commanding the Trans-Mississippi Department; but upon the certificate, under oath, of the officer, having charge of any one so detained, that such person is detained by him as a prisoner, for any of the causes hereinbefore specified, under the authority aforesaid, further proceedings under the writ of habeas corpus shall immediately cease and remain suspended so long as this act shall continue in force.

SEC. 4. This act shall continue in force for ninety days after the next meeting of Congress, and no longer.

A true copy:

JAMES M. MATTHEWS,

Law Clerk,

Approved February 15, 1864.

II. There will be appointed by this Department, for each military department of the Confederacy east of the Mississippi River, one or more competent persons as commissioners to investigate the cases of persons who may be arrested or detained by any military authority for any cause specified within the above-recited act. Information of all such arrests will be given to him by the department commander as soon as practicable after they are made, and he will proceed to investigate the same. If, upon examination, a reasonable and probable cause for detention does not appear, he will certify the fact to the general or other officer in command, who will immediately discharge the prisoner from arrest; but if a reasonable and probable cause does appear, the commissioner will forthwith transmit to this department a copy of the evidence taken in the case, with his opinion thereon, for instructions, and meanwhile the prisoner shall remain in custody.

III. In all cases in which a person who has been enlisted in the Army under any of the acts of Congress to provide for the public defense, or to raise troops to serve during the war, or to provide for local defense and special service, or who has been enlisted or enrolled for service under the acts of Congress further to provide for the public defense, or has been placed in the military service by the act of Congress to organize forces to serve during the war, approved 17th of February, 1864, or shall be held in custody for desertion or encouraging desertions, of harboring deserters, and of attempts to avoid military service, or of holding correspondence or intercourse with the enemy without necessity and without the permission of the Confederate States, or of combining to assist the enemy, or of communicating intelligence to the enemy, or of giving him aid and comfort, or for any other cause specified in the act aforesaid; and in all cases in which any person not belonging to the military service shall be held in custody by any military authority for any of the causes mentioned in the act shall apply to any court or officer in the Confederate States for a writ of habeas corpus, it will be the duty of the officer having the command or custody of such person forthwith to report the case, with all the relevant facts, to the War Department for instructions as to the proper answer to be made to such writ, and in the meantime to retain the custody and control of such person under this order, a copy of which will be communicated to the officer or court issuing the writ, as affording the reason why time should be given to make a more complete return.

IV. In all cases when the requisite delay cannot be obtained, it will be the duty of the officer having command and custody of persons embraced in the preceding section, or who may have in custody as prisoners any person charged under any of the sections of the above-recited act of Congress, to make a special return in writing and under oath that the body of such person so detained by him is detained by the authority of the Secretary of War, and that he declines, under and by virtue of his authority and the act of Congress aforesaid, to produce the body of such person, or to make further appearance or return to the said writ.

V. The commanding general of the Trans-Mississippi Department will perform the functions devolving upon the War Department, under these orders, in that portion of the Confederacy.

By order:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 10, 1864.

His Excellency M. L. BONHAM,
Governor of South Carolina, Columbia, S. C.:

SIR: I have received your letter of the 2d instant with regard to the discharge of soldiers appointed cadets in the military academy and inclosing resolutions of the Legislature of your State by the appointment of such cadets.

In reply I have the honor to say that the State cadets appointed by Your Excellency in pursuance of the resolutions of the General Assembly will be permitted to attend such military institutions within the State as may be designated by you. I had not previously been aware of the limited scope of the appointing power, or that when applied to youths in service it was intended as a reward for peculiar merit. At the same time, as many other States have military institutions, and it will be difficult to make generally known the difference between these special instances and the other cadets whom I have refused to discharge, I would earnestly recommend that appointments be made, as far as possible, from those not in service. Greater dissatisfaction than Your Excellency is aware of is frequently engendered in a command by a discharge which seems based on partiality or a special exception.

I have also received your letter of the 4th instant* urging the propriety of stationing in the upper part of your State a force sufficient for its protection in the event that General Longstreet should evacuate East Tennessee. The contingency referred to by Your Excellency has not yet arisen, and I trust there will be no occasion for the employment of troops within the important section mentioned for its defense from raids of the enemy.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

Additional regulations to carry into effect the act entitled "An act to impose regulations upon the foreign commerce of the Confederate States to provide for the public defense," approved February 6, 1864.

II.—OVERLAND COMMERCE WITH MEXICO.

1. The owner of any wagon, cart, or vehicle, or of any boat or other vessel, and of any horse, mule, or other animals employed in transporting cotton, tobacco, or naval stores from the Confederacy to Mexico, shall, before receiving any article for transportation, require of the owner thereof the collector's permit for its exportation, as hereinafter set forth, and shall, before loading any article for transportation, present to the military commander of the department, or officer assigned by him to that duty, a declaration setting forth a full description of all the vehicles, vessels, and animals to be used by him, and their value in Confederate currency, and the names and value of the slaves, if any, employed as teamsters or otherwise in his business of transportation, and the names, and such other particulars as may be required, of the free persons so employed, and the point of departure, the route to be pursued, and the place of destination; and the commander or other officer as aforesaid shall, if satisfied of the loyalty and fidelity of the applicant, and that the application may be safely granted, indorse thereon his consent and approval, and grant a license to the applicant as a public carrier of exports to Mexico for the single trip, or for any length of time, not exceeding one year, that may be deemed proper.

2. Any person desiring to export to Mexico overland any cotton, tobacco, or naval stores shall, before placing the same on any wagon, cart, or other vehicle, or pack-mule, or other animal, or on board any boat or vessel, present to the military commander of the department whence the merchandise is to be exported, or to the officer assigned by him as aforesaid, a declaration stating the quantity and value in Confederate currency of the articles he proposes to export, the name of the licensed carrier to be employed by him, the point of departure, the route to be pursued, the name of the consignee, and the place of destination in the neutral country; and if the officer to whom the application is made shall be satisfied of the loyalty and fidelity of the applicant, and that the permission may be safely granted, he shall indorse on the application his approval.

3. The applicant shall, before loading the merchandise which he intends to export, file with the collector of the district whence the exportation is to be made his application indorsed as aforesaid, and shall execute and deliver to him a bond to the Confederate States, with security deemed adequate by the collector, in an amount double the value in Confederate money of the merchandise embraced in his application, with condition that at least one-half the net proceeds of said merchandise at the place of destination shall be invested in goods and merchandise not prohibited by law, and that said goods and merchandise shall be brought into the Confederate States within sixty days after the delivery of the exported articles at their place of destination in Mexico; and the collector shall thereupon deliver to the applicant a permit to load the articles embraced in said application.

4. No licensed carrier shall depart on the trip for which permits have been granted until he shall have delivered to the collector of the customs a manifest, verified by his oath, setting forth the names of all owners of the cotton or other articles which he is about to carry, and the quantity received from each owner, and shall have obtained from the collector a clearance authorizing his departure.

5. The military commander of any department from which exports are conveyed to Mexico shall establish by general orders, to be published by him, as many convenient points as may be necessary for the assemblage and departure of all vehicles or means of transportation used in the business, and detail officers for the examination, search, and seizure of all vehicles, teams, and slaves employed as drivers whenever engaged in the infraction or evasion of these regulations, or the law which they are intended to enforce.

6. All vehicles, animals, slaves, or other means of transportation, and all cotton or other articles that may be seized, whether by the officers of the revenue or by military authorities, for any violation of law or of these regulations, shall be, without any waste, spoliation, impressment, or injury of any kind, forthwith conveyed and delivered to the nearest marshal or deputy marshal of the Confederate States, and a detailed receipt taken from him setting forth a full description of the property seized and delivered to him for safe custody. And it shall be the duty of said marshal or deputy marshal to keep the property so surrendered in safe custody until the further order of the judge or a commissioner of a district court of the Confederate States having jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and the said marshal or deputy marshal shall forthwith, upon the receipt by him of the property seized, give information to the collector of the district or to the district attorney, or both, if practicable, of all the facts in relation to the seizure of the property and its delivery to him for safe-keeping.

7. No military authority shall presume, under any circumstances, to seize property while being carried under the provisions of the law and of these regulations for any other cause than a violation of said provisions, nor in case of seizure to dispose of the property seized in any other manner than that prescribed in the foregoing regulations. But in cases where there is great risk of the property falling into the hands of the enemy it shall be competent for the proper military authorities to require the licensed carrier to suspend his trip till the danger be passed, or to pursue a different route from that originally designated, or even in cases of imminent danger to abandon the trip.

8. The bonds to be taken under these regulations shall be subject to the provisions of the twelfth regulation relative to exportation by sea, and said bonds may be taken up on the production to the collector of satisfactory evidence that the party has complied with the conditions of the bond as far as practicable.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 32. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, March 11, 1864.

I. The act of Congress relative to the employment of free negroes and slaves in certain capacities and the instructions of the War Department relative to its execution are published for the information of those concerned:

AN ACT to increase the efficiency of the Army by the employment of free negroes and slaves in certain capacities.

Whereas, the efficiency of the Army is greatly diminished by the withdrawal from the ranks of able-bodied soldiers to act as teamsters, and in various other capacities in which free negroes and slaves might be advantageously employed: Therefore,

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That all male free negroes and other free persons of color, not including those who are free under the treaty of Paris of eighteen hundred and three, or under the treaty with Spain of eighteen hundred and nineteen, resident in the Confederate States, between the ages of eighteen and fifty years, shall be held liable to perform such duties with the Army, or in connection with the military defenses of the country, in the way of work upon fortifications or in Government works for the production or preparation of material of war, or in military hospitals, as the Secretary of War or the commanding general of the Trans-Mississippi Department may, from time to time, prescribe, and while engaged in the performance of such duties shall receive rations and clothing and compensation at the rate of eleven dollars a month, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may establish: Provided, That the Secretary of War or the commanding general of the Trans-Mississippi Department, with the approval of the President, may exempt from the operations of this act such free negroes as the interests of the country may require should be exempted, or such as he may think proper to exempt, on grounds of justice, equity, or necessity.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ for duties similar to those indicated in the preceding section of this act, as many male negro slaves, not to exceed twenty thousand, as in his judgment, the wants of the service may require, furnishing them, while so employed, with proper rations and clothing, under rules and regulations to be established by him, and paying to the owners of said slaves such wages as may be agreed upon with said owners for their use and service, and in the event of the loss of any slaves while so employed, by the act of the enemy, or by escape to the enemy, or by death inflicted by the enemy, or by disease contracted while in any service required of said slaves, then the owners of the same shall be entitled to receive the full value of such slaves, to be ascertained by agreement or by appraisal, under the law regulating impressments, to be paid under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may establish.

SEC. 3. That when the Secretary of War shall be unable to procure the service of slaves in any military department in sufficient numbers for the necessities of the Department, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the preceding section, then he is hereby authorized to impress the services of as many male slaves, not to exceed twenty thousand, as may be required, from time to time, to discharge the duties indicated in the first section of this act, according to laws regulating the impressment of slaves in other cases: Provided, That slaves so impressed shall, while employed, receive the same rations and clothing, in kind and quantity, as slaves regularly hired from their owners; and, in the event of their loss, shall be paid for in the same manner and under the same rules established by the said impressment laws: Provided, That if the owner have but one male slave between the age of eighteen and fifty, he shall not be impressed against the will of said owner: Provided further, That free negroes shall be first impressed, and if there should be a deficiency, it shall be supplied by the impressment of slaves according to the foregoing provisions: Provided further, That in making the impressment, not more than one of every five male slaves between the ages of eighteen and forty-five shall be taken from any owner, care being taken to allow in each case a credit for all slaves who may have been already impressed under this act, and who are still in service, or have died or been lost while in service. And all impressments under this act shall be taken in equal ratio from all owners in the same locality, city, county or district.

THOMAS S. BOCOCK,
Speaker House of Representatives.
R. M. T. HUNTER,
President pro tem. of the Senate.

Approved February 17, 1864.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

II. The Bureau of Conscription will direct the enrollment of all the persons described in the first section of the act aforesaid east of the Mississippi River who are not unfit for the service required from them, by reason of physical or mental incapacity or imbecility, and will assign them to the performance of the duties mentioned in the act, or similar duties in any of the military bureaus, or with troops in the field, as there may be any call for such service.

III. Applications for an exemption on the grounds that the interests of the country require it, or because it is demanded by justice, equity, or necessity, will be made to the enrolling officer in writing, and will be disposed of by him according to the general directions contained in the regulations published in Orders, No. 26, 1864, under the "act to organize forces to serve during the war."

IV. For the execution of the sections in the foregoing act, relative to the employment and impressment of slaves, the provisions of Orders No. 138, of the 24th of October, 1863, will afford the requisite rules for the guidance of the military bureaus and commanding generals, with modifications hereafter mentioned. First. That slaves shall not be impressed when the services of free negroes can be obtained. Second. Slaves under the age of eighteen and above the age of fifty are exempt. Third. The hire for slaves impressed shall be according to the rates fixed by the appraisers under the act to regulate impressments. Fourth. The limitation as to the term for which slaves shall be impressed for service shall be for twelve months, instead of the term fixed by said orders, if the exigency shall require it.

V. All impressments for service in the various military bureaus under this act will be by special order upon application to the War Department, disclosing the efforts that have been made to provide other labor specified in the act, the necessity for the impressment, and the plan proposed to secure it.

VI. The general commanding the Trans-Mississippi Department will superintend the execution of the law for that department.

SIR: In the Richmond Enquirer of this date you will find a publication of the orders relative to the writ of habeas corpus.* The Department requests that you will undertake the office of chief commissioner for the fulfillment of the duties imposed by the writ and the orders for the State of North Carolina. You will be at liberty to detail from the class of men between forty-five and fifty competent assistants, who, while on that duty, will be relieved from other duty. Congress failed to make an appropriation for executing the duties imposed by this act upon the Department, but that omission can be supplied at the next session. You will keep an accurate account of the expenses and return it previously to the 1st of May next.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

RICHMOND, March 12, 1864.

Mr. THOMAS SHARP,
Richmond, Va.:

SIR: You will proceed without delay to Nassau and thence to Nova Scotia for the purpose of purchasing and forwarding to some Confederate port via Nassau the machinery and material described in the inclosed memorandum,† to be used in the manufacture of army shoes. You will apply for funds on reaching Nassau to Maj. R. P. Waller, quartermaster at that point, who is authorized to advance you the sum of £3,500, enough to triplicate the order in behalf of the shoe establishment at Atlanta, which, with the risks of the blockade, will probably secure the receipt of two complete sets. Be sure to separate the three lots in shipping them and so pack the same that whatever may come to hand may be complete. Use all possible dispatch in the business and communicate from time to time your success to this office. It may be that some of the material and shoemakers' tools can be purchased in Nassau and forwarded without delay from there. Major Cameron, quartermaster at Wilmington, will aid you in securing passage from Wilmington, and your necessary personal expenses, of which you will render an account on your return, can be defrayed from the funds you will receive.

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

P. S.—Should you have the funds to spare you can purchase a small quantity of the chemicals mentioned in your letter of the 13th ultimo, with a view of making some experiments to shorten the process of tanning.

RICHMOND, March 12, 1864.

Maj. R. P. WALLER,
Quartermaster, Nassau, New Providence:

SIR: The bearer, Mr. Thomas Sharp, goes abroad for a short time to purchase a lot of machinery, material, and tools for the manufacture of shoes. His instructions will inform you more fully of the precise character of his mission and the things to be purchased. He will require £3,500 to meet his expenditures, and I write to authorize you to advance the sum to him; but fearing at the same time that you may not be able to do so promptly, I have to direct, with the sanction of the Secretary of War, that you draw, if necessary, for the amount on Mr. Colin J. McRae, financial agent of the Confederate States at Paris, and deliver proceeds to Mr. Sharp. In a couple of months the department will be able to command quite a considerable quantity of leather, and it is all-important that it should secure some facilities in the way of machinery to make the same rapidly into shoes. The receipt of these appliances will also render the department in a great measure independent of detailed labor. Your experience will tell you that this will in time prove a far better investment of a portion of the means at the command of this department than even shoes or blankets, so do not let Mr. Sharp be disappointed in the receipt of the funds.

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

P. S.—Forward the inclosed letter to Mr. McRae, with the draft, or in advance thereof.

W. D. HENNEN, Esq.:

SIR: You will find in the Richmond papers the orders relative to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, with the act on that subject.*

The Department desires that you will undertake the charge of commissioner for carrying into effect the act and orders under it in the department of General Longstreet. The orders sufficiently express the duties you have to perform. You are also requested to afford counsel to the commander of conscripts and the enrolling officers in cases that may arise in which the interposition of that writ may be claimed. You are authorized to detail one or more assistants from the class between forty-five and fifty, or to designate some gentlemen above that age to aid you, if the duties become too onerous for your personal attention.

Congress failed to make an appropriation to carry into effect this act, but will doubtless do so at its next meeting in May. You will keep an accurate account of the expenses, and send to this Department previously to the meeting of Congress.

A reasonable and proper compensation will be allowed to you for the duties you may be required to perform.

I. The Bureau of Conscription will proceed to enroll all persons between the ages of seventeen and eighteen years, and between the ages of forty-five and fifty years, under the fifth section of the act of Congress to organize forces to serve during the war.

II. Persons liable to enrollment will present themselves to the enrolling officer, in the States east of the Mississippi River, within thirty days from the day when notice shall be given in the district or county by the enrolling officer for persons of this class to appear for enrollment. The failure to comply with this notice will subject the defaulter to a liability to be called into the general service with the class of persons between eighteen and forty-five, unless he shall have a valid excuse therefor, to be judged of by the Bureau of Conscription.

III. Any person liable to enrollment under this act may join any company for local defense which has been formed under General Orders, No. 86, issued 22d of June, 1863, for the war, or any other company for local defense which has been accepted into the service, and which, by the terms of its enlistment, is liable to serve anywhere within the State; or persons of this class may form new companies for local defense and special service, under General Orders, No. 86, 1863, for the war, and select their own officers.

Governor of North Carolina, Raleigh, N. C.:

SIR: The notice to which reference is made in your letter of the 8th instant* having been given by authority of the Navy Department, your communication was transmitted to the Secretary of the Navy, who, in his response, expresses some surprise that a notice given in conformity to regulations adopted by the President, under the authority and in pursuance of an act of Congress, should cause indignation on your part. He presumes the vessel referred to is the Hansa, and adds that the nature of the interest owned by the State of North Carolina in her is not explained by you. Under the late regulations I have no authority over the subject, which rests now mainly with the Secretary of the Treasury, and any remonstrance you deem requisite should appropriately be addressed to him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

RALEIGH, March 15, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I had the honor to receive this morning your letter of the 12th instant requesting me to act as commissioner for North Carolina under the orders relative to the writ of habeas corpus. The appointment is one that I do not desire, but, nevertheless, I will accept it, desirous, as I am, to serve the Government in any capacity that my services may be needed. I suppose that in doing so I shall be allowed to attend to some important business of a professional kind in two or three counties the coming spring terms of the superior courts in relation to which I am under prior engagements. What assistants I may need I know not. It will, of course, depend very much upon circumstances. One competent clerk or more I shall certainly need. I will keep an account of all expenses, but would suggest that some authority be given to procure stationery from the proper officer here.

Upon my return from Richmond I found a letter from Chief Justice Pearson. I send herewith an extract, from which you will see that he is disposed to raise a question as to the constitutionality of so much of the habeas corpus act as suspends the writ in cases of "attempts to avoid military service" by suing out the writ. I shall decline to send him any argument on the subject, but shall inclose him the order issued with the act. This letter of Judge P[earson] was written before the decision of his associate, Battle, was made and published, refusing to issue a writ where it appeared upon the face of the petition that the party was attempting to avoid military service. It is said Judge Manly, the other judge of the supreme court, has acted in the same manner, and I hope Judge Pearson will not persist in his course.

Very respectfully,

THS. BRAGG.

* See Series I, Vol. LI, Part II, p. 828.

Extract of Judge Pearson's letter, dated Richmond Hill (his home), March 5, 1864:

Since my return home I have issued a good many writs, but have declined to act in any case without a return from the enrolling officer. In the matter of Rosser, Captain Pearson, enrolling officer, returned by filing a certificate under oath, "the party is detained by order of the Secretary of War for attempts to avoid military service." I entered on it, "March 4, 1864. The return of the enrolling officer is so general as not to raise the question whether Congress has power to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in civil cases, or whether Congress intended to suspend the privilege of habeas corpus in civil remedies. The case awaits such motion as the party may be advised by his counsel."

So the matter stands. I anticipate there may be motion for a rule to show cause why the return should not be so amended as to raise the question by adding that the party was arrested as a conscript, and the attempt to avoid military service is by suing out the writ. But I can't say what course will be taken. Probably the enrolling officer may make the addition so as to raise the question.

He then invites an investigation of the subject by me and requests me to send him a written argument, or that he will go again to Salisbury and hear an argument if I prefer it, &c., "provided the question is presented in the return."

GENERAL ORDERS, }	ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 34. }	Richmond, March 16, 1864.

I. The following act of Congress and orders are published for the information of the Army:

AN ACT to provide an invalid corps.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That all officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates and seamen, who have or shall become disabled by wounds, or other injuries received, or disease contracted in the service of the Confederate States, and in the line of duty, shall be retired or discharged from their respective positions as hereinafter provided. But the rank, pay and emoluments of such officers, and the pay and emoluments of such non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates and seamen, shall continue to the end of the war or as long as they shall continue so retired or discharged.

SEC. 2. That all persons claiming the benefits of this act, shall present themselves for examination, to one of the medical examining boards now established by law. Upon the certificate of such Board that such permanent disability exists, such persons shall be retired or discharged as aforesaid.

SEC. 3. That all persons retired or discharged as aforesaid, shall periodically, and at least once in six months, present themselves to one of said boards for further examination, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, the result of which examination shall be reported by such Board to the said Secretary. And if any such person shall fail so to report himself to such Board, whenever he shall be required so to do, he shall be dropped from said retired or discharged list, and become liable to conscription, under the terms of the law, unless such failure shall be caused by physical disability.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War may assign such officers, and order the detail of such non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates and seamen, for such duty as they shall be qualified to perform. If any such non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates and seamen, shall be relieved from disability, they shall be restored to duty in their respective commands.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War shall make all needful rules and regulations for the action of the medical boards as aforesaid.

SEC. 6. That vacancies caused by the retirement of officers under this act, shall be filled as in case of the death or resignation of such officers.

SEC. 7. This act shall be in force from its passage.

Approved February 17, 1864.

II. Applications will be made by officers and soldiers who wish to be retired or discharged under this act through their commanding officers for authority to appear before one of the medical examining boards now established by law. Commanding officers will indorse fully the facts connected with the alleged disability and forward the application to the general commanding, who will return it to the applicant with his approval or the reason why it is withheld. The indorsement will be the authority to the Board, which will be composed of three medical officers, for the examination of the applicant.

III. If the application be approved by the commanding general, and the Board find the soldier permanently disabled by wounds or other injuries received or disease contracted in the service, it will retire the soldier and forward to the Adjutant and Inspector General the original application and certificates; or, if the Board find a soldier totally unfit for duty in any department of service, he may, if he prefer it, be discharged upon certificates of disability, under the regulations and usage of the service, as before the enactment of the law providing an invalid corps. If the application be disapproved, the Board may, nevertheless, proceed with the examination. If they find the applicant permanently disabled from either of the causes stated in the act, they will not retire him, but forward the original application and their certificate to the Surgeon-General for final action at this office.

IV. A corresponding course will be pursued when the applicants are officers, except that the Board will not retire, but forward the certificates, through the Surgeon-General, to the Adjutant and Inspector General.

V. If the Board examining the officer or soldier find him disabled for service in the field, but fit for duty in some department of service, the duty he can best perform will be indicated in the certificate, which will be forwarded to the Adjutant and Inspector General.

VI. Officers recommended under the act to relieve the Army of disqualified, disabled, or incompetent officers, approved October 13, 1862, to be retired because of wounds or other injuries received or disease contracted in the service, will receive, upon their written application to the Adjutant and Inspector General, authority to appear before one of the medical examining boards for retiring officers and privates, under the act above recited, approved February 17, 1864.

VII. Officers or soldiers retired under the provisions of this act will present themselves once in six months to one of the boards of surgeons indicated in paragraph II of these orders for further examination, the result of which will be certified as directed in paragraph III of these orders. If prevented by physical disability from so presenting himself the cause of such failure will be established by the certificate of a surgeon of the Army, or of a citizen physician and the enrolling officer of the district in which the person may at the time be residing. As soon as the physical disability is removed the officer or soldier will appear before the Board for re-examination.

VIII. Failure to appear periodically, as provided by the preceding paragraph, will be reported by the Medical Examining Board and proper enrolling officer to the Adjutant and Inspector General.

IX. Officers retired under the act of Congress above recited are entitled to commutation of quarters and fuel only when assigned to duty (as provided in section 4 of said act) at a station without troops where public quarters cannot be furnished in kind. They will receive pay from any post quartermaster upon exhibiting evidence of their retirement from active service and the certificate of last payment required by paragraph IV, General Orders, No. 28, and paragraph I, General Orders, No. 126, 1863.

X. Soldiers retired from the service as herein provided will be furnished with descriptive lists, which, in addition to the usual history given, will exhibit the fact that they have been placed on the retired list and designate the post at which they will be entitled to receive pay and allowances. They will report to the commandant of such post—which will be nearest their places of residence—and deliver to him their descriptive lists.

XI. Post commanders are required to take possession of descriptive lists of all soldiers reporting to them and from the data therein given, at the end of every two months, to prepare muster-rolls upon which these soldiers will receive pay from the post quartermaster or assistant quartermaster. They will append to each roll a certificate that it has been made out in accordance with statements presented in descriptive lists of the soldiers on file in his office.

XII. Officers of the Quartermaster's Department will issue necessary clothing to retired soldiers upon requisitions made by the commandants of the posts at which they are stationed, taking their receipts upon receipt rolls, Form No. 53, Regulations for the Quartermaster's Department.

XIII. Retired soldiers will have their rations commuted at $1.25 per day, to be paid by the commissary at the post designated, under the orders of the commanding officer.

XIV. When the soldier shall be returned to his command, his disability for field service having been removed, the post commander will note upon his descriptive list the dates to which payment may have been made him on account of pay and rations commuted and the articles of clothing issued, and return it to him to be delivered to his company commander, or, if he belongs to the non-commissioned staff, to the adjutant of his regiment or battalion.

XV. The following forms will be observed:

CIRCULAR }
No. 8. }

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,

I. General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, is herewith made a part of this circular,* and commandants of conscripts are enjoined to proceed to the rapid and vigorous execution of its provisions, under the instructions and interpretations herein prescribed.

II. Under the terms of the eighth section of the act of Congress, published in General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, and the terms of Circular No. 55 of the Bureau, last series, commandants will proceed to organize the service in their respective States. In addition to the organization therein provided for, and in further pursuance of paragraph II of the said General Orders, No. 26, commandants will forthwith organize in each county a board, to consist of not more than three of the most reliable and intelligent citizens between the ages of forty-five and fifty years, and who have been enrolled and detailed for the service. These boards will be charged with aiding the local enrolling officer in obtaining information concerning all applications for exemption and detail for agricultural or other industrial pursuits, and also in furnishing all other information which may be needed in the duties imposed upon the enrolling officers. The local and Congressional enrolling officer will be required to supervise the action of these boards, and promptly report to the commandant unfitness or delinquencies on the part of the persons detailed for them. So long as the duties are properly performed the persons so employed will be exempted from other service. Care will be used in the beginning to select proper men, and in view of the grave duties herein devolved upon the enrolling officer, he will at his discretion require the written opinion of the Board on claims for exemption or applications for detail, and may call on them for special information concerning matters pertinent to the service. In every case referred by the local or Congressional district enrolling officer to the commandants an opinion as to the merit must be indorsed or accompany the case, and the like rule will be rigidly observed by commandants in referring to this Bureau.

III. Commandants will order the immediate enrollment and examination of all persons within the prescribed ages who are found in the employment of any department of the Government and who are not specially exempted by the act of Congress; and such as are found fit for service in the field may be detailed until the 10th day of April next, provided an application is made according to the terms of the sixth paragraph of General Orders, No. 26, herein cited.

IV. Commandants of conscripts will forthwith transmit to this Bureau recommendations for physicians to be employed in accordance with paragraph IX, General Orders, No. 26, herein cited. Much complaint reaches this Bureau concerning irregularities in the medical examinations. Loose or irregular examinations must not be permitted, and commandants will promptly report any well-ascertained delinquency in the matter.

V. Forms for consolidated reports by the commandants of conscripts will be forwarded; also forms for the records of the Congressional district and local enrolling officers. These records must be accurately kept and the reports based on them must be in clear and intelligible form or they will be returned for revision and correction.

VI. Persons and classes enumerated in the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of section 10, except those referred to in the latter clause of the fourth article of said tenth section of the act of Congress recited, shall be exempted. All other persons referred to in said act shall be detailed.

VII. Exemptions by examining boards.

1. Persons who shall be determined by the Board of Examination to be incapable of performing active service in the field and any of the duties mentioned in the eighth section of the said act of Congress from causes of a permanent nature shall be exempted from military service by the said Board, who shall grant certificates thereof, which shall specify the causes of the incapacity, reciting in full the nature and degree of the disease or other incapacity and the probable duration of the disability caused by it; and the parties shall not be subject to future examination unless specially ordered by the Board of the Congressional district in which such parties reside, or by the commandant of conscripts for the State, or by this Bureau.

2. When in the opinion of enrolling officers the causes for which exemption was granted to a person, after examination by the Medical Board, have ceased to exist, they will make a report to the Board, stating the name of the person, when enrolled, when examined, and the disease and other cause of disability with the reasons for believing it to have disappeared, and that the person is capable of performing active service in the field, or some of the duties mentioned in the said eighth section of the act aforesaid. The Examining Board will then order the party to be brought before it for re-examination. When a person is re-examined by the Board his former certificate shall be surrendered and canceled. If again found unfit for duty a new certificate of exemption shall be issued to him.

3. Every certificate of exemption granted by a Board of Examination shall be approved by the Congressional district enrolling officer, which shall protect the person exempted from molestation by the officers of conscription and from re-examination unless the Board of Examination, or the commandant of conscripts, or the Bureau of Conscription shall order the same.

VIII. Exemption of specified classes and individuals.

1. Applications for exemption under the third and sixth articles of the tenth section of the act aforesaid shall be made to the enrolling officer of the county in which the applicant resides, who will thoroughly investigate the case, and if satisfied by competent evidence that exemption should be allowed, shall issue a certificate thereof, which must be submitted to the enrolling officer of the Congressional district for his approval.

2. Applications for exemptions under the fifth article of the tenth section of the act aforesaid shall be made to the commandant of conscripts for the State, who will grant the certificate of exemption authorized by law, to continue during compliance with the conditions prescribed by said act. Exemption, except for the president, treasurer, auditor, and superintendent, shall not be allowed to any officers and employes of a railroad company, unless the president or superintendent shall certify on oath that the parties applied for are indispensable to the efficient operation of such railroad; that the persons exempted on said railroad shall not exceed one for each mile thereof in actual use for military transportation; that the exempts for such road shall be reported by name and description once a month to the commandant of conscripts for the State through which such road passes (or to the Bureau of Conscription), together with the names and descriptive list of any one who may leave the employment of the railroad company, or who may cease to be indispensable to the efficient operation of the said road.

3. The exemption of overseers or agriculturists on each farm or plantation upon which there are now, and were on the 1st day of January last, fifteen able-bodied hands between the ages of sixteen and fifty, will be allowed for the space of twelve months, and the certificate of exemption shall be granted by the officer taking the bond required by law, upon being informed by the commandant for that State that the bond is approved.

4. The bond required to be given upon the exemption of an overseer or agriculturist, under the fourth article of section 10 of the said act, shall be taken by the enrolling officer of the county or district in which such party resides, with the advice and assistance of the temporary Board aforesaid. It shall be payable to the Confederate States of America, in a penalty double the estimated value of the products to be delivered to the Government, and conditioned for the faithful performance of the requirements of the fourth article of the tenth section of the said act. The value of the said products shall be assessed by the enrolling officer, who shall take the said bond, with the assistance of the said temporary Board, according to the market value thereof at the time and place of assessment. The said bond may be secured by a deposit of the amount of the penalty thereof in notes issued from the Treasury Department of the Confederate States, with any of the depositaries of the said Treasury, or by personal security, the nature of the security to be at the option of the principal obligor in the said bond. Should the person so exempted elect to give personal security, the sureties tendered by him shall justify their sufficiency under oath before some justice of the peace, but shall not be accepted unless the enrolling officer taking the said bond, under the advice of the said temporary Board, shall deem them sufficient. Such bonds shall, after due execution, be transmitted to the commandant of conscripts for the State for file in his office, to be surrendered to the obligors when the conditions thereof are fully complied with; and the receipt of any quartermaster or commissary specifying that the amount of produce required by the bond has been duly delivered and accepted will entitle the person to have the bond canceled; and copies of such receipts should be forwarded to the commandant of conscripts, to be by him forwarded to the Quartermaster-General or the Commissary-General, through this Bureau.

IX. Exemption on account of religious faith.

Persons entitled to exemption as provided for in paragraph XII, General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, will on application receive certificates thereof from the Congressional district enrolling officer, on producing satisfactory evidence that they have complied with the requirements of the law.

X. Exemption of officers of Confederate and State governments.

Certificates of exemption for officers of the Confederate and State governments will be given by the commandants for the States.

XI. Investigation of applications for exemption.

1. All other applications for exemption shall be made in writing to the enrolling officer of the county or district in which the applicant resides; shall be supported by his affidavit and other sworn testimony, and dealt with according to the provisions of paragraph III, of General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series.

2. Every application for exemption should be carefully, minutely, and thoroughly investigated by the local enrolling officer, with the aid of the temporary Board to be organized under the second clause of paragraph II of this circular, and be thereafter transmitted to the commandants of conscripts for the State, with a report of facts and their respective opinions on the merits of the application. The report of facts should be somewhat in detail, setting forth in regular order the facts developed in the investigation, giving briefly the reasons for the opinion expressed, and instead of being put in the form of an indorsement, will be made on a separate sheet of paper. The investigation should not be confined to an examination of the application and the papers that accompany it, or merely into the truth of the statements therein made, but should be directed with a view of ascertaining all the facts and circumstances of the case, and the exact condition of the parties with relation thereto.

XII. Details.

Agricultural details: 1. The officers of conscription will give the most careful attention to the provisions of paragraph IV, General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, in connection with the last clause of the fourth article of the tenth section of the act of Congress cited. This paragraph embraces the whole system of details provided by law to maintain the industrial production of the country, in view of the public defense.

2. The investigation of every case presented must be the most precise and accurate which can be attained by the enrolling officer (with the co-operation of the temporary boards), and all action must be in direct view of the necessities indicated. Commandants will institute such modes of inquiry and report as will furnish the fullest testimony. The policy of the law is to enforce the largest amount of production in every case in which the detail is made. The schedule of terms hereto appended will, it is believed, meet a majority of the cases that are likely to be presented. Where it is doubtful whether the case is covered by the classification, commandants will in general decide by reference to the plain intent of the law, or refer the matter to this Bureau, with full testimony and opinion. In all details there must be satisfactory evidence of the necessity, as expressed in General Orders, No. 26, current series.

Schedule of terms: 3. Where there are two or more farms contiguous, or within five miles of each other, measuring from the homesteads, having on each five or more hands, amounting in the aggregate to fifteen hands, or where one person has two or more plantations within five miles of each other, having an aggregate of fifteen or more hands, there may be detailed one person as overseer or manager of the two or more farms; provided there is on neither of the farms a white male adult, declared by the enrolling officer and the temporary Board capable of managing the farms with a reasonable efficiency, not liable to military duty; and provided the person detailed was on the 1st day of January, 1864, either owner, manager, or overseer residing on one of the farms; and provided the owners of said farms shall execute a joint and several bond, on the terms prescribed for the owners of fifteen hands, except that such persons shall not be allowed the privilege of commutation provided in the fourth article of the tenth section of the act recited.

4. Where details are allowed to persons having less than fifteen, and five or more than five, hands, they shall enter into like obligation as prescribed for the owners of fifteen or more hands, except that for each hand less than fifteen down to five there shall be supplied five pounds less meat, thus: Each of fourteen hands, 95; thirteen hands, 90; twelve hands, 85; * * * six hands, 55; five hands, 50 pounds.

5. Where details are allowed to persons having less than five hands, they shall enter into like obligations to sell all their surplus productions to the Government.

6. All details herein prescribed to be allowed are subject to revocation by the commandant of conscripts, on the report of the enrolling officer that the person detailed is not habitually, industriously, and in good faith engaged in the occupation for which the detail is granted.

Enrolling officers are required to be unusually vigilant in supervising such details. Omission in this duty will constitute grave dereliction.

7. Enrolling officers are required to exercise the utmost caution in recommending details in the classes enumerated. It is by no means intended to grant them indiscriminately, but to limit them as much as is consistent with the public good. All pertinent circumstances will be carefully inquired into. Among these are fitness for the field; ability or aptitude for the purposes of the detail; condition of the family; whether any or how many are in the military service; public good, justice, equity or necessity, &c.

XIII. Details for public necessity.

Applications for details such as are not required for the service in any of the military bureaus, or for service in any of the departments of the Government, including service with contractors, will be made, accompanied by a descriptive list, to the enrolling officer of the appropriate county or district, and be supported by the affidavit of the applicant and other testimony under oath. The district enrolling officer will institute a minute and searching investigation into the circumstances of the case, the result of which will be set forth on a separate sheet of paper. The district enrolling officer may, if he approves the application, grant a detail for sixty days and forward the papers through the commandant to the Bureau for its action. If the application is refused, the reasons in full will be indorsed, and in case of appeal, the papers forwarded to this Bureau through the same channels. If the persons for whose detail application is made are engaged in performing the duties on account of which details are asked they will be allowed to remain until final action. If otherwise, they should be sent to camps of instruction.

XIV. Details for persons between forty-five and fifty for Government work.

Applications for the detail of persons between forty-five and fifty years of age for service in any of the military bureaus or in any of the departments of the Government will be made, accompanied by a descriptive list, to the local or district enrolling officer; and it must set forth the nature of the duties to be performed, the necessity for the detail, and the period for which it is required. The district enrolling officer, after investigation made and reported as directed in preceding paragraph, may, if he approve the application, grant a detail for a period not exceeding sixty days, and forward the papers to the commandant for his action. An appeal from the action of the enrolling officers and the commandant may be taken to this Bureau.

XV. Details of artisans, mechanics, &c.

1. Applications for the detail for service in any of the military bureaus or for any of the departments of the Government (including contractors) of artisans, mechanics, or persons of scientific skill, to perform indispensable duties, should be made, with descriptive lists, to the enrolling officer. The skill of the party, the duties to be performed, and why his services are indispensable, and the period for which the detail is required, must be distinctly set forth. Applications for the employés of contractors must in addition contain a certificate from the officer contracted with, or the head of the department, that the services of the particular parties are required for the performance of indispensable Government work. The district enrolling officer may grant detail for sixty days and forward the papers through the commandant (each expressing his opinion) to this Bureau for its action. If the application is refused, reasons in full will be indorsed, and in case of appeal, papers forwarded to this Bureau. If the parties applied for are at work they will be allowed to remain until action is taken; if otherwise, they should be sent to the camps of instruction. Applications for the detail of contractors themselves must also contain the certificate of the head of the Bureau, required by the eleventh section of the act.

XVI. All other applications for exemption or detail not otherwise provided will be made to the enrolling officer and forwarded through the proper channels.

XVII. Great care should be exercised in exempting or detailing able-bodied men between eighteen and forty-five. No case should be acted on until after minute and thorough investigation as to the alleged private or public necessity, advantage, convenience, justice, or equity, and as to whether persons not liable to service in the field may not be obtained.

XVIII. Reports.

1. Examining boards, in addition to the lists directed in paragraph VIII, General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, will furnish district enrolling officers with lists of men in their districts found fit for military service but unfit for service in the field, specifying in each case what duties they are capable of performing. Congressional district officers to furnish similar lists to county enrolling officers, the object being to enable persons needing detailed men to see who are the subjects of detail, and to choose from them.

2. Enrolling officers will forward to the commandant of conscripts monthly a report of all persons enrolled by them and the action taken in each case. These reports will be consolidated by the commandant, with reference to the distinctions made in the act of Congress, and the regulations for its enforcement, in duplicate, one copy of which will be forwarded to this Bureau, and one kept on file in the office of the commandant.

XIX. Enrollment of reserve classes.

1. Commandants of conscripts will proceed to enroll all persons between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty years, in execution of General Orders, No. 33, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, which is herewith made a part of this circular.*

2. Commandants will keep a separate and distinct roll of persons between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty.

3. Commandants of conscripts will assign to duty, as a supporting force for conscription service, such persons as may be recommended by the examining boards as unfit for the field, but as competent for this service; and when as many as sixty-four such persons are so assigned, they will be organized into a company, elect their officers, and return the muster-rolls to the commandants; and if there be not a sufficient number to form a company in each Congressional district, then the commandant may assign a sufficient number of persons between forty-five and fifty years of age, so as to complete a company for each Congressional district. A competent officer of the rank of colonel will be assigned by this Bureau to organize such companies into a regiment, if there be the requisite number of companies; or into a battalion, if there be less than ten companies; or into two battalions, if deemed preferable.

XX. General instructions.

1. Commandants will always bear in mind that General Orders, No. 26, is not only the basis, but forms a large portion of these instructions. They will habitually recur to its provisions to aid in the application of other provisions of this circular.

2. Commandants will of course refer cases of difficulty to this Bureau; but references which bear on their face that they are rather to avoid due responsibility or labor will be retained without remarks.

3. The duty of the commandants of conscripts is, in accordance with these instructions, to maintain and invigorate the industrial production of the Confederacy and supply its armies with men. This duty must be performed or our struggle for independence and liberty will fail.

By order of Col. J. S. Preston, superintendent:

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, March 18, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: Governor Watts, of Alabama, in his letter to the President, dated 8th of March,* and handed by you to me, states that there have been many companies raised in Alabama for conscript service and the arrest of absentees, and that these companies have in general done little good and frequently much harm to the service. These companies were raised by Brigadier-General Pillow when assigned to conscription service by General Johnston. The evils complained of were manifest on the transfer of the conscription service in Alabama to this Bureau, and instant steps were taken to ascertain the condition of the companies, by what authority raised and assigned, the material of which they were composed, and all other matter necessary to a proper disposition of them.

It involved a slow, difficult, and delicate inspection. Most of the companies were mustered for the war, contained many conscripts liable to general service, and were of such character that if suddenly disbanded the men might be entirely lost. If the conscripts were withdrawn, they would disband, and if ordered to the field the conscript service would be utterly without support. The investigation is progressing, and in the meantime all that can be spared from conscript service have been ordered to report either to General Polk or to officers authorized by the War Department to raise and organize forces. The process is now at work under the orders of an efficient commandant of conscripts, and it is hoped that all, or nearly all, the companies will soon be placed in the field except one for each Congressional district reserved for conscript service.

I still believe that the very worst agency to have control of conscription, except that of generals commanding, is the local civil or military authorities. Wherever it has been tried it has proved a disastrous failure, and such would be the result of Governor Watts' plan. If the State authorities or generals commanding would actively and cordially co-operate with the conscript authorities instead of endeavoring to control or oppose them good might result.

* Not found.

During my six months in this Bureau there has never been one man sent to the field by State authority. Thousands have been kept from the field by the action of that authority. The collisions between the State and conscript authorities have been universally caused by the effort of the States to keep or take men from the conscript officers.

The same experience indicates that no general commanding a department or district having control of conscription has sent one conscript out of his department. I am not informed that fifty conscripts have been sent from Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, or Tennessee to the Army of Virginia while General Pillow, under General Johnston, had control of conscription in those States.

The difficulties, delays, and irregularities of conscription do not result from the difficulty in finding men, but the impossibility of getting those men out of the hands of recruiting officers under generals commanding, of Governors, judges, and demagoguing politicians. These are the real impediments to the success of this Bureau. From one end of the Confederacy to the other every constituted authority, every officer, every man and woman is engaged in opposing the enrolling officer in the execution of his duties. It is their efforts to meet and overcome these obstacles which causes the outcry against these officers and suggests these crude plans for the service to which they are assigned.

With the present onerous, responsible, and important functions charged upon the conscription authorities, it may be worthy of consideration whether the duty of arresting absentees may not be confided to other agencies; but for conscription merely you cannot devise a better system than the one now in operation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JNO. S. PRESTON,
Colonel and Superintendent.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 18, 1864.

Hon. EUGENIUS A. NISBET,
Macon, Ga.:

SIR: I inclose you a copy of the act of Congress for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, and the orders of this Department for the execution of the writ.* The second section of the act requires the selection of proper officers for the investigation of the cases of all persons who may be arrested or detained, and for the discharge of such as are improperly detained. The Department has selected you for the oversight and direction of the whole subject in the State of Georgia, except the cases immediately arising in the army of General Joseph E. Johnston. A person has been selected to attend to that army.

You will be authorized to detail from the men between forty-five and fifty years such assistants as you may require. The duties to be performed will sufficiently appear from the act itself and from the orders already issued. A copy of this letter will be sent to the various military commanders, and you will be entitled to transportation upon application to the quartermaster.

* See General Orders, No. 31, p. 203.

Congress failed to make an appropriation to carry into effect the act, and the Department cannot at this time specify the rate of compensation; but an application will be made to Congress in May next, and it is hoped that it will be settled on a satisfactory basis. Meanwhile you are requested to keep an accurate account of the expenses and forward them to the Department before the 1st of May.

The Department is aware of the delicate nature of the duties to be performed, and the importance in the present condition of the country of exactness and circumspection in the administration of the power confided by the act the Department devolves upon you in the State of Georgia under a sense of the responsibility that rests upon you.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

LIBERTY, VA., March 18, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War Confederate States of America:

SIR: There can be little doubt but that the want of organized transportation and the inability of the railroads to effect the domestic commerce of the country enters largely into the problem of market price, and must to that extent affect the operation of the new currency act. The obstacles to internal commerce are:

First. The incomplete condition of certain railroad extensions and connections, such as those of the Danville and Central, in Virginia; the connection by rail to Richmond, Petersburg from Yorkville, across to Augusta, &c.

Second. The deficiency of rolling-stock, especially of locomotives. The several roads now running in Virginia have not one-fourth, in some cases not one-eighth, of the motive power proper for their regular trade. The Central road reported only eight locomotives in working order. The ratio of engines to length of road run would give the road fifty or sixty. The Virginia and Tennessee road is short of motive power, and the South Side road in every respect inadequate to its business. The rails of all these roads are reported in bad condition, varying of course with grades and tonnage, but all requiring repair. The reduction of train speed has its effect upon the internal intercourse of the country.

Third. The refusal of roads on the same gauge to allow the freight-cars of other roads to run over their rail, thereby involving unnecessary transshipments, and throwing the through freights into the hands of an express company, heretofore unlimited in its exactions. These are, in my opinion, the main causes of the great difference in prices between the different portions of the Confederacy and between the metropolis and the interior.

During the last session of the Virginia Legislature it became my duty, as chairman of the Committee on Roads and Interior Navigation (I state this to authenticate the condition and defects of the Virginia roads), to examine into the subject of internal transportation, and to recommend measures for its improvement. The lower House passed a bill requiring roads to pass the freight-cars of other roads of the same gauge over their own road. Railroads were required to establish an express department. These provisions were lost in the Senate. Express companies were placed under stringent regulations. They are now restricted to double the freight allowed the railroad.

A bill was also reported making a State subscription to a joint-stock locomotive factory and rolling-mill. It was regarded favorably, but not reached. The remedies proposed are:

First. The military possession of the roads so far as to insure through freights and close connections.

Second. The organization of locomotive factories with a detail of skilled workmen, and the importation or manufacture of boiler plates, tubular boilers, chilled wheels, chilled tire, &c., the manufacture of freight-cars, the erection of rolling-mills, whenever necessary for the repair of extensive lines of roads. I am aware this plan involves labor and responsibility, but it is submitted in the belief that it will effect much to facilitate the military operations and the internal commerce of the country. It will indirectly operate upon the currency, for if the supplies continue irregular or deficient the Government will be driven to a reissue of currency. You will please excuse this communication, dictated by an interest in the public welfare.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. M. BURWELL.

C. S. QUARTERMASTER'S DEPT., RAILROAD BUREAU,
Richmond, April 1, 1864.

Brig. Gen. A. R. LAWTON,

Quartermaster-General, Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: I have the honor to return herewith a communication from Hon. W. M. Burwell, and submit for your consideration the following reply:

First. It is well known to all who have investigated the matter that everything possible has been done to complete the Danville connection, and but for the difficulty in getting rails it would have been further toward completion. The connection from Columbia to Augusta is one of extreme importance and should be fostered in every way by the Government. Immense trouble will be encountered, but the reward will be great. It will shorten the distance between those two points from 143 miles to about 80 miles, saving about 63 miles and giving a line not subject to interruptions by the enemy. It could be finished in twelve months, but it would require extraordinary exertions and every facility that Government could give. It cannot be urged too strongly, and I trust the matter will not drop with this report.

Second. The deficiency of rolling-stock is great and without remedy until the policy of the Government changes in regard to keeping mechanics in the Army, to which must be added another difficulty quite as serious, i. e., the supply of iron. The deficiency of locomotives is not so serious if those in the country could be thoroughly repaired. This takes mechanics and materials, which are not in the Confederacy. I am confident that with 100 mechanics and a supply of block tin, copper, cast-steel, &c., distributed through the various shops in Virginia, that the effective motive power of the State would be in six months increased one-half. It was with the idea of placing this machinery in good order that I applied for the detail of one mechanic for every ten miles of railroad in operation in the Confederacy, but so impracticable was considered my suggestion that no reply was made to it.

Third. It is almost an impossibility for those who have had no practical experience to understand how any difficulty can arise from interchanging cars, and yet it is most fruitful of destruction to property. Cars never get the proper attention when from under the owner's eye, and with the present scarcity it is the true policy to husband them with care. The experience of the world is against it, and if the time ever comes when it is pursued you may rely upon all improvement in, or certainty of, transportation is destroyed. In peace times competing lines sometimes interchanged cars, but it was always with the expectation that many would be destroyed. Can we afford to lose any? Certainly not. Then we must manage those we have so as to avoid it, and that can only be done by keeping them constantly under the eye of the owner. The establishment of a locomotive factory is very desirable, but here arises the same question of men and material, with the additional one of obtaining complicated machinery; but these are not insurmountable obstacles, nor do they need legislation. If the mechanics can be had the balance will be forthcoming. If mechanics are not to be had for repairing locomotives, where is the force coming from to construct them? That the railroads should come under military control I am becoming every day more satisfied. There seems to be a desire to work for the road's interest rather than sacrifice all convenience for the country's cause. For instance, it is clear to anybody that the two roads from Richmond to Weldon should be worked as one corporation, and yet all the advantages to the Government and the public cannot bring it about. If the Virginia Legislature really wish to make the railroads serve the Confederate States, let it amalgamate these two roads. This is a matter about which there can be no doubt, and nothing but self-interest will oppose it. Greater harmony would doubtless produce better results, but this I fear can never be obtained until a Government officer manages every road. The present incumbents might still retain their positions, but should be directly amenable to Government, and made to feel that the interests of Government were paramount to every other consideration. This question will press more heavily than heretofore from the extent of demand which require greater exertions, and its consideration should not be postponed. The sum of all that is proposed in this communication is men and iron. With these we can make boiler plate, wheels, tires, cars, rails, &c. There is nothing impossible in it. Indeed, it is easy of accomplishment, and if Government will only offer the details, works corresponding in extent with the demand will soon be started; but before I could conscientiously recommend this plan I should like to see all the present motive power and cars in working condition, and until this is done it is worse than folly to attempt more extensive projects.

I remain, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. SIMS,

Lieutenant-Colonel and Quartermaster.

GENERAL ORDERS, }	ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 35. }	Richmond, March 19, 1864.

I. Officers on inspection duty, while traveling under the immediate orders of the War Department, will be allowed their personal expenses (less the commutation value of one ration per day) in lieu of all allowances for fuel, quarters, and forage. Each account must be certified by the officer receiving the payment, and will be paid by any quartermaster.

II. Paragraph 166, General Regulations, is not construed to allow certain commanding officers to grant themselves leave. They will not absent themselves from their commands without authority from this office.

III. Paragraph 170, General Regulations, is hereby revoked. Nor will the commander of a post grant leave to an officer without permission first obtained from the general commanding the army or department in which the post may be established.

IV. Commanding generals and other commanding officers are prohibited from detaching officers and ordering them to duty or for assignment in other commands, or beyond the limits of their departments or commands, without previous authority from this office. The transportation allowance of an officer so detached and ordered without previous authority will be charged to the officer giving the order.

V. Until exchanged and reassembled, the officers and men of captured organizations will be temporarily assigned, by the general commanding the department in which the troops have been serving, to depleted organizations in the service, or to such other duty as the commanding general may direct. To this end it will be the duty of the officers of the Conscription Bureau in the several States to return to the general commanding the department in which the troops have last served such officers and soldiers as are now or may be hereafter absent from duty on account of the capture of their command.

VI. Paragraph VI, General Orders, No. 13, current series, is thus amended:

In making payments to soldiers upon descriptive lists officers of the Quartermaster's Department will be careful to indorse thereon the amounts paid and the time for which they have been paid, returning the same to them for delivery to their company commanders. Disbursing officers will file with receipts given by soldiers thus paid a certificate in each case that the descriptive list was according to prescribed form, dated, and subscribed by the officer commanding the company; that the station of the company was given and that no money was paid the soldier except that certified by the officer as due from the records of the company.

VII. Under General Orders, No. 142, 1863, the inspector-general of field transportation is charged with impressing and purchasing field transportation for the Army. His officers and agents will not be interfered with by either officers or soldiers when engaged in discharging that duty.

VIII. Persons liable to conscription who have joined companies in the local or special service will be turned over to enrolling officers for assignment to companies in the general service.

IX. The following is published as supplementary to the schedule of average cost of arms, parts of arms, and accouterments, as set forth in General Orders, No. 158, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, December 3, 1863:

Carbine (breech-loading).....	$75.00	Horse brush .....	$2.00
Carbine (muzzle-loading).....	60.00	Bridle .....	14.00
Parts of same. (See prices of		Bit .....	2.00 parts of rifle, model 1855.)		Girth .....	5.00
Skeleton saddles .....	75.00	Stirrups .....	2.00

CIRCULAR }
No. 9. }

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,

I. This Bureau being charged by General Orders, No. 32, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, with the enrollment and assignment of all the persons described in the first section act of Congress therein published and entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Army by the employment of free negroes and slaves in certain capacities," the said first section and paragraphs II and III of the said orders are herewith made parts of this circular.*

II. Commandants of conscripts will forthwith proceed in accordance with the foregoing second paragraph of said orders to the enrollment of the persons described in the said first section of the act aforesaid, have them examined by the Board of Examination, and furnish the Bureau descriptive lists of such as are fit for the service required. Ten days' furlough may be allowed after acceptance, at the expiration of which time the persons who are found fit for the service required will be forwarded to the headquarters of the general commanding the department embracing the States in which they are enrolled. Receipts will be taken upon their delivery.

III. Applications for exemptions in this class of persons may be finally disposed of by the commandant of conscripts without reference to this Bureau. He should require them to be forwarded to him in accordance with the instructions of Circular No. 8, current series.

By command of Col. John S. Preston, superintendent:

Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 19, 1864.

General E. K. SMITH,
Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: The letter of Brigadier-General Greer of the 7th of December last* with your indorsement of the 18th of January has been received.

This Department has experienced much embarrassment from the eccentric decisions of inferior judges who have had the power to issue writs of habeas corpus, and can appreciate the difficulties that General Greer has had to encounter on that subject. His opinion as to the liability of deputy clerks and deputy marshals is concurred in, and the late act of Congress to organize forces for the war will enable him to apply a corrective to some of the evils he complains of. A copy of that act with the orders and regulations will be sent to you with this letter. The act embraces two distinct subjects—the organization of the existing Army and the recruiting of its ranks by conscription. The act continues in service all men between eighteen and forty-five now belonging to the Army till the end of the war. You will observe that it does not abridge the term of service of those who belong to the Army. It does not provide for the discharge of any until their legal term of service has expired. Persons over forty-five will serve for that term, whatever it may be. The act also provides for the transfer of certain companies and men to other organizations, but the mass are continued in their existing organizations.

Congress, before the passage of this act, had adopted a special act repealing the exemption of principals who had put in substitutes and who had no other cause of exemption. By the act of Congress of the 17th of February they repealed all existing exemptions and provided that all men between seventeen and fifty years of age should be placed in service under the limitations and exceptions embraced in that act. General Orders, No. 26, contains the act and the regulations of the Department for its execution. Besides these acts the superintendent of the Bureau of Conscription has made in the form of instructions more detailed arrangements for their complete enforcement. These orders and regulations will accompany this letter. By the act of Congress of the 27th of September, 1862, the disposition to be made of conscripts is declared. They were to be appropriated, first, to the filling up of the regiments in existence prior to the 16th of April, 1862, and then to the completion of the regiments formed between that date and the 1st of October, 1862. No new companies were contemplated to be made from men liable to conscription, except in those districts in which the conscription act could not be enforced, and no other agencies were to be employed except those of the conscription service. General Orders, No. 82, series of 1862, were framed with this object. This Department has deviated from this plan under a supposed necessity in some instances, but experience has convinced it that a strict adherence to the law and the regulations would have been productive of greater benefit to the service. It now discards all plans for recruiting outside of those regular agencies, and refuses authorities to raise companies except under very special circumstances, and those are limited to the country occupied by the enemy.

The act of Congress before mentioned, as you will perceive, greatly diminishes the classes of persons entitled to detail for special service. The act, the orders, and the instructions of the Bureau of Conscription will place you in possession of the general views of the Department relative to the manner of performing these functions. They involve considerations of the gravest import, and in intrusting the discharge of similar functions to you the Department is fully aware of the magnitude and difficulty of the trust. The general principles it has adopted it recommends to you—that you cause the Bureau of Conscription to be organized with care and managed with efficiency; that the principal aim should be to recruit the existing organizations and to decline the issuing of any special authorities or the creation of independent agencies. It is proper that the regiments of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas on the east of the Mississippi River should be recruited, and that new regiments should not be formed until this be done. The service of the Army proper should as far as practicable be performed by men fit for duty in the field, and the Bureau and civil service should be supplied by the persons designated in the eighth section of the act. Reserve forces should be organized and made as efficient as the circumstances of the country will warrant, and care should be employed and discrimination exercised to provide sufficiently for the maintenance of the industrial operations of the country. A broad, statesmanlike administration is necessary for the fulfillment of the duties imposed by this act.

General Orders, No. 31, contains the act for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. The bill itself imposes upon you the duty of its execution in your department. You will find in the orders what the Department has done for its execution in the Cis-Mississippi Department. Commissioners of the highest character and professional ability have been selected for the performance of the duties charged upon them, and they have been authorized to detail from the class between forty-five and fifty adequate assistance. Congress failed to make an appropriation to carry into execution this act, but that omission will probably be supplied in May next. The compensation of the commissioners has not been settled, but the Department will be disposed to fix it upon a liberal footing. The country is naturally jealous of any suspension of this writ, and the Department has been anxious to impress upon its administration under it the evidence of professional ability, sound discretion, and personal honor, so as to avoid any appearance of evil. The most ordinary case in which the act will be required is that in which persons seek to avoid military service, and your attention is directed to that section as affording a cure for some of the evils of which Brigadier-General Greer complains. Another important branch of your duties will arise under the act imposing regulations upon the foreign trade, with the view to obtain foreign supplies. The scheme of this act is to prohibit the exportation of cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar, molasses, and military and naval stores, except under the regulations of the President. A prohibition is laid upon the import of many articles of luxury. The regulations framed by the President were designed to secure the application of all these articles mentioned in the act of Congress to the accumulation of supplies for the Army and necessities for the people. Congress also passed a bill to create two bureaus, one for either side of the Mississippi River, for the carrying into effect this act, but owing to some inattention or inadvertence it failed to be signed by the officers of the two branches of Congress, and was not carried to the President. It did not therefore become a law. There will be required in your department some special agency for the purchase, transportation, export, sale, and investment of the proceeds of the articles belonging to the Government, and for the oversight of the transactions of individuals under the act of Congress and regulations. The bill which failed to become a law, under the circumstances before mentioned, provided such an agency to be subject to your control, and in the absence of adequate agencies of administration in the Treasury Department in that district, and in consequence of the absorption by the military department of so much of the active business population and the machinery of government, it is not perceived how the act can be efficiently executed otherwise than by the establishment of a similar agency to that provided. The regulations that have been adopted furnish an outline of the method of proceeding under the act. It will be necessary for you to fill up that outline by practical measures to give efficiency to the system. Copies of the regulations both for the sea and the land will be sent to you. I recommend that the officers employed in this business be required to give bonds, and that they be selected with discrimination, so as to secure men who will not abuse their positions to promote any personal or individual object. The country requires that all its resources be husbanded with solicitude and that none should be expended except to promote the public good. At the same time a liberal consideration of the convenience and comfort of the people at large is proper, so as to obtain their cordial co-operation and support.

Congress revised its act concerning impressments and provided for the employment of free negroes and slaves in certain branches of the public service. It may be that your circumstances will require the employment of slaves in the operations of your department. The act provides that 20,000 slaves may be impressed, provided that free negroes cannot be obtained, and slave labor cannot be contracted for. The Department has directed the enrollment of free negroes and will probably impress some 10,000 or 15,000 slaves in the various departments on this side of the Mississippi River. The same power is extended to your department. You are at liberty to call into service, if they are needed, 6,000 slaves to perform the duties that the act of Congress contemplates. We have determined here to employ the Bureau of Conscription to obtain them as the most diffused of the agencies under our control. In the General Orders, No. 138, of 1863, you will find some leading directions as to the methods of proceeding, but some of the details of these orders have been modified by General Orders, No. 32, of the present series, especially those in reference to the compensation to be paid to the overseers.

Finally, I will call your attention to the act and orders for the establishment of the invalid corps—General Orders, No. 34. The persons retired under these orders should obtain their orders from the headquarters, and the roll of officers and men should be preserved there. No person should be permitted to have the benefit of that act except under the order of the department commanders. Much confusion and fraud have been the consequence of allowing to subordinate officers to determine finally upon the condition of officers and men in service.

The delicacy and difficulty of the duties cast on you by these various laws and orders are sensibly felt, but full confidence is placed in your discretion, zeal, and ability for their faithful discharge.

I have the honor to remain, general, very truly, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

(Resolutions introduced by Hon. Linton Stephens.)

RESOLUTIONS on the suspension of the habeas corpus.

The General Assembly of the State of Georgia do resolve, 1st. That under the Constitution of the Confederate States there is no power to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, but in a manner and to an extent regulated and limited by the express, emphatic, and unqualified constitutional prohibitions, that "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law," and that "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the places to be searched and the persons or things to be seized." And this conclusion results from the two following reasons: First. Because the power to suspend the writ is derived, not from express delegation, but only from implication, which must always yield to express conflicting and restricting words. Second. Because this power, being found nowhere in the Constitution but in words which are copied from the original Constitution of the United States, as adopted in 1787, must yield in all points of conflict to the subsequent amendments of 1789, which are also copied into our present Constitution and which contain the prohibitions above quoted and were adopted with the declared purpose of adding further declaratory and restrictive clauses.

2d. That "due process of law" for seizing the persons of the people, as defined by the Constitution itself, is a warrant issued upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the persons to be seized; and the issuing of such warrants being the exertion of a judicial power is, if done by any branch of the Government except the judiciary, a plain violation of that provision of the Constitution which vests the judicial power in the courts alone; and therefore all seizures of the persons of the people by any officer of the Confederate Government without warrant, and all warrants for that purpose from any but a judicial source, are, in the judgment of this General Assembly, unreasonable and unconstitutional.

3d. That the recent act of Congress to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in cases of arrests ordered by the President, Secretary of War, or general officer commanding the Trans-Mississippi Military Department, is an attempt to sustain the military authority in the exercise of the constitutional judicial function of issuing warrants, and to give validity to unconstitutional seizures of the persons of the people; and as the said act by its express terms confines its operation to the upholding of this class of unconstitutional seizures, the whole suspension attempted to be authorized by it and the whole act itself, in the judgment of this General Assembly, are unconstitutional.

4th. That in the judgment of this General Assembly the said act is a dangerous assault upon the constitutional power of the courts and upon the liberty of the people, and beyond the power of any possible necessity to justify it; and while our Senators and Representatives in Congress are earnestly urged to take the first possible opportunity to have it repealed, we refer the question of its validity to the courts, with the hope that the people and the military authorities will abide by the decision.

5th. That as constitutional liberty is the sole object which our people and our noble Army have in our present terrible struggle with the Government of Mr. Lincoln, so also is a faithful adherence to it on the part of our own Government, through good fortune in arms and through bad, one of the great elements of our strength and final success; because the constant contrast of constitutional government on our part with the usurpations and tyrannies which characterize the Government of our enemy, under the ever recurring and ever false plea of the necessities of war, will have the double effect of animating our people with an unconquerable zeal and of inspiring the people of the North more and more with a desire and determination to put an end to a contest which is waged by their Government openly against our liberty and as truly, but more covertly, against their own.

(Introduced by Hon. Linton Stephens.)

RESOLUTIONS declaring the ground on which the Confederate States stand in this war, and the terms on which peace ought to be offered to the enemy.

The General Assembly of the State of Georgia do resolve, 1st. That to secure the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, "governments were instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundations on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form as shall seem to them most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

2d. That the best possible commentary upon this grand text of our fathers of 1776 is their accompanying action, which it was put forth to justify; and that action was the immortal declaration that the former political connection between the Colonies and the state of Great Britain was dissolved and the thirteen Colonies were, and of right ought to be, not one independent State, but thirteen independent States, each of them being such a "people" as had the right, whenever they chose to exercise it, to separate themselves from a political association and government of their former choice and institute a new government to suit themselves.

3d. That if Rhode Island, with her meager elements of nationality, was such a "people" in 1776, when her separation from the Government and people of Great Britain took place, much more was Georgia and each of the other seceding States, with their large territories, populations, and resources, such a "people," and entitled to exercise the same right in 1861, when they decreed their separation from the Government and people of the United States; and if the separation was rightful in the first case it was more clearly so in the last, the right depending, as it does in the case of every "people" for whom it is claimed, simply upon their fitness and their will to constitute an independent state.

4th. That this right was perfect in each of the States, to be exercised by her at her own pleasure, without challenge or resistance from any other power whatsoever; and while these Southern States had long had reason enough to justify its assertion against some of their faithless associates, yet, remembering the dictate of "prudence," that "governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes," they forbore a resort to its exercise, until numbers of the Northern States, State after State, through a series of years, and by studied legislation, had arrayed themselves in open hostility against an acknowledged provision of the Constitution, and had at last succeeded in the election of a President who was the avowed exponent and executioner of their faithless designs against the constitutional rights of their Southern sisters—rights which had been often adjudicated by the courts, and which were never denied by the Abolitionists themselves but upon the ground that the Constitution itself was void whenever it came in conflict with a "higher law," which they could not find among the laws of God, and which depended for its exposition solely upon the elastic consciences of rancorous partisans. The Constitution thus broken, and deliberately and persistently repudiated by several of the States who were parties to it, ceased, according to universal law, to be binding on any of the rest, and those States who had been wronged by the breach were justified in using their rights to provide "new guards for their future security."

5th. That the reasons which justified the separation when it took place have been vindicated and enhanced in force by the subsequent course of the Government of Mr. Lincoln—by his contemptuous rejection of the Confederate commissioners who were sent to Washington before the war to settle all matters of difference without a resort to arms, thus evincing his determination to have war; by his armed occupation of the territory of the Confederate States, and especially by his treacherous attempt to re-enforce his garrisons in their midst, after they had, in pursuance of their right, withdrawn their people and territory from the jurisdiction of his Government, thus rendering war a necessity, and actually inaugurating the present lamentable war; by his official denunciation of the Confederate States as "rebel" and "disloyal" States for their rightful withdrawal from their faithless associate States, whilst no word of censure has ever fallen from him against those faithless States who were truly "disloyal" to the Union and the Constitution which was the only cement of the Union, and who were the true authors of all the wrong and all the mischief of the separation, thus insulting the innocent by charging upon them the crimes of his own guilty allies; and finally, by his monstrous usurpations of power and undisguised repudiation of the Constitution, and his mocking scheme of securing a republican form of government to sovereign States by putting nine-tenths of the people under the dominion of one-tenth, who may be abject enough to swear allegiance to his usurpation, thus betraying his design to subvert true constitutional republicanism in the North as well as the South.

6th. That while we regard the present war between these Confederate States and the United States as a huge crime, whose beginning and continuance are justly chargeable to the Government of our enemy, yet we do not hesitate to affirm that, if our own Government and the people of both Governments would avoid all participation in the guilt of its continuance, it becomes all of them, on all proper occasions and in all proper ways—the people acting through their State organizations and popular assemblies, and our Government through its appropriate departments—to use their earnest efforts to put an end to this unnatural, unchristian, and savage work of carnage and havoc. And to this end we earnestly recommend that our Government, immediately after signal successes of our arms and on other occasions when none can impute its action to alarm instead of a sincere desire for peace, shall make to the Government of our enemy an official offer of peace on the basis of the great principle declared by our common fathers in 1776, accompanied by the distinct expression of a willingness on our part to follow that principle to its true logical consequences by agreeing that any Border State whose preference for our association may be doubted (doubts having been expressed as to the wishes of the Border States) shall settle the question for herself by a convention to be elected for that purpose after the withdrawal of all military forces of both sides from her limits.

7th. That we believe this course on the part of our Government would constantly weaken and sooner or later break down the war power of our enemy by showing to his people the justice of our cause, our willingness to make peace on the principles of 1776, and the shoulders on which rests the responsibility for the continuance of the unnatural strife; that it would be hailed by our people and citizen soldiery, who are bearing the brunt of the war, as an assurance that peace will not be unnecessarily delayed nor their sufferings unnecessarily prolonged, and that it would be regretted by nobody on either side except men whose importance or whose gains would be diminished by peace and men whose ambitious designs would need cover under the ever recurring plea of the necessities of war.

8th. That while the foregoing is an expression of the sentiments of this General Assembly respecting the manner in which peace should be sought, we renew our pledges of the resources and power of this State to the prosecution of the war, defensive on our part, until peace is obtained upon just and honorable terms and until the independence and nationality of the Confederate States is established upon a permanent and enduring basis.

Hon. THOMAS BRAGG,
Raleigh, N. C.:

SIR: Your acceptance of the office of commissioner under the law suspending the writ of habeas corpus is gratefully appreciated by the Department. It was not presumed the position was desirable, but I was not mistaken in relying on your patriotic zeal to accept it. It is important that the duty should be fulfilled by a citizen of your State enjoying the confidence and influence you so justly command. There will be no incompatibility whatever in your attention to the private or professional matters to which you refer. You can employ the clerks you require to aid you, and the quartermaster at Raleigh will be instructed to furnish the stationery, &c., you may need. Judge Pearson is still, I fear, bent on mischief. It will be hard, however, for him to prevent by construction the plain terms of the law, or to stem alone the changing current of public sentiment and the adverse opinions of his brethren on the bench. He will probably find discretion the better policy, and for a time at least, and, I trust, permanently, cloak his factious purposes.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

I. Special attention is directed to the Ninetieth Article of War, and paragraph 877, Army Regulations, requiring the proceedings of general courts-martial, and orders respecting the sentences of such courts, to be transmitted with as much expedition as practicable to the War Department. The observance of these rules, especially in capital cases and trials affecting the commissions of officers, also of paragraph 871 of the regulations, prescribing the manner of making up and securing the court record, is enjoined upon all concerned.

II. Every court-martial record, which should be kept distinct and separate in each case, must be indorsed with the name, rank, or description of the party and the court by which he was tried, to which should be added the action of the reviewing officer, confirming or disapproving the sentence, duly attested by his signature.

Beyond the Confederate lines and within the lines of the enemy are many liable to enrollment and military service. You will endeavor to enroll and bring into service all such persons as are within the ages of eighteen and forty-five. Those above forty-five should not be enrolled, the purpose being to leave them at home, where their services are needed, and not to subject them to the risks of becoming prisoners of war.

In the immediate neighborhood and in rear of the Confederate Army, where the lines are liable to fluctuation, a careful discretion may be exercised in extending this exemption to persons of the latter class.

Maj. Gen. D. H. MAURY,
Commanding, &c., Mobile, Ala.:

GENERAL: Among the acts passed by the last Congress there is one to impose regulations upon the foreign commerce of the Confederate States, to provide for the public defense, to which your attention is directed. The President has caused to be published the regulations for the trade by sea and overland to Mexico. The act prohibits the export of cotton, tobacco, naval and military stores, sugar, molasses, and rice, except under the regulations of the President for the Confederate States.

The second section of the act provides that any of the said articles that are laden for exportation beyond the Confederate States, or to any portion of them occupied by the enemy, shall be forfeited, together with the slaves and animals that may be employed or collected for the purpose of aiding therein.

The third section prohibits the landing of such articles, except under a permission and the giving of a bond by the exporter to convey them to their destination.

The fourth section authorizes the collector of the port or district, or such other officer as may be designated by the President, to take into their custody any of the articles before mentioned when there is reason to believe they were intended for exportation, or, when in wagons, carts, or other vehicles, they are apparently on their way toward the territories of a foreign nation, or toward the territory of the Confederate States in the occupation of the United States, or in the vicinity thereof, or toward a place whence such articles are intended to be exported, until bond be given, with sureties, that no violation of the act or of the regulations is designed. The object of the act was to place the commerce in these articles entirely under the control of the Government, that it might secure necessary supplies. There may be an occasion presented of securing supplies that are indisputably necessary for the Army. When these supplies can be secured by the exportation of these articles by land into the country occupied by the enemy the Department supposes that it would be prudent and lawful to do so; but great circumspection is necessary for the execution of any plan of the kind, and all such traffic must be subject to the inspection and control of the department commanders, and should be under the supervision of trustworthy officers, who would under no circumstances abuse it for any personal advantage or to promote speculations by their friends and connections.

In all cases sureties should be taken for the fulfillment of the contracts, and the delivery of the supplies should be a condition precedent to the allowance of the permission. The permission should be countersigned by the commander and strict scrutiny should be habitually made into the manner of the fulfillment of any such contracts. If at any time it should be discovered that any mischief results the system should be abandoned. No trade is lawful except such as is thus carried on, and the directions in the fifth, sixth, and seventh regulations of the overland trade to Mexico are applicable to any such traffic.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

I. When owners, overseers, or managers of such farms or plantations as are specially enumerated in the fourth article, tenth section, of the late military bill, or whose services are of more importance as agriculturists than in the Army, who were enrolled during the month of January last, are still in the camps of instruction and have not volunteered, or otherwise have been enlisted, the equity of the act should prevail and their cases be acted on as if the enrollment had never taken place.

II. Upon general principles of justice, equity, and necessity the Government is disposed to relieve persons between seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty, members of the Society of Friends, Dunkards, &c. When they are in a condition to be detailed for agricultural pursuits it may be done under the conditions imposed upon other classes of producers. When there are clerical employments or artisan or mechanical labors that they can perform they may be selected for those objects. Every case, however, should be referred to this Bureau for its action, allowing the parties to remain at their employments until action is taken.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPT.,
ORDNANCE BUREAU,
Richmond, March 22, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: On September 15 last Mr. McRae wrote that the whole amount advanced to Major Huse and others for account of War Department out of the Erlanger loan was £544,976. Mr. McRae asked that warrants to cover this advance be at once sent to him in order that he might adjust the accounts of the loan between the War and Treasury Departments. Warrants to the extent of £311,000 were accordingly sent to him and he was advised (November 30, 1863) that no more could be done just then, as the appropriations on this side could not stand any further draft upon them without embarrassing the operations of the bureaus. Other warrants were promised him as soon as our appropriations should be made by Congress, then so soon to assemble. This, however, has not been done.

In addition to the above advance of £544,976 it was understood (see your letter of September 26 to Mr. McRae) that £262,500 were yet to accrue to the War Department out of the Erlanger loan. After consultation with the chief of the several bureaus this amount was apportioned out by you (see your letter of October, 1863, to Mr. McRae) as follows:

Quartermaster's Department .....	£85,000
Ordnance Department .....	55,500
Commissary Department .....	40,000
Medical Department .....	30,000
Niter and Mining Department .....	40,000
Engineer Department .....	12,000
Total .....	262,500

It would now seem, however, that these £262,500 were predicated upon the further negotiation of bonds by Messrs. Erlanger & Co. Said negotiation having failed, the funds are not in the hands of Mr. McRae to meet the warrants sent forward by the various bureaus under the apportionment.

As, however, a deficit of £233,000 of the advance of £544,976 was yet uncovered by warrants, the actual overdraft of the War Department on its proportion of the Erlanger loan is something less than £29,000. But it is to be considered that while the amount actually advanced for the War Department is covered by drafts, such drafts are in favor of bureaus not properly chargeable with the money expended.

It appears, further, that under authority from the Quartermaster-General, approved by you, Major Waller, quartermaster at Nassau, has drawn on Mr. McRae for £20,000 at sixty and ninety. Mr. McRae has no funds in hand, but has accepted the drafts, hoping that he may be placed in funds before their maturity with which to duly protect them. These drafts are held by outside parties, but the warrants in favor of bureaus (above referred to) are in the hands of officers and agents of the Government.

Since my assignment to general duty, in charge of shipment of cotton for the War Department, in August last, the shipments have been as follows:

Department.	Ordnance stores.	Collie & Thorburn's stores.	Private stores.	Total.
Ordnance .....	2,160	960	638	3,758
Quartermaster's .....	129	2,213	2,074	4,416
Commissary .....	58	759	1,558	2,375
Medical .....	290	361	651	651
Niter and Mining .....		1,152	855	2,007
Engineer .....			151	151
Total .....	2,637	5,084	5,637	13,358

The credits accruing to the various bureaus from the shipments of cotton have been more than anticipated and expended (as shown by recent letters from Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm & Co. to the chiefs of bureaus) by the agents of said bureaus. The Medical Department alone has a small credit, and this is more apparent than real, as I am informed that orders more than sufficient to absorb the whole amount were long since sent out.

Your letter of September 26, 1863, gave Mr. McRae power to transfer from one bureau to another any surplus credits for which it may not have immediate need, but I do not suppose that it is your intention to withhold payment from the creditors of one department to satisfy the claims of those of another. (This is basis of objection made to transfer by F., T. & Co.)

I have thought it my duty to inform you of the foregoing facts before preparing for your signature the instructions called for by your indorsement on a late letter of Mr. McRae, which I have the honor herewith to return.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. L. BAYNE,
Lieutenant-Colonel.

P. S.—If the cotton now on hand belonging to the War and Navy Departments is transferred, as recommended by me, to the Treasury Department, the disposition of proceeds will, under the new regulations, be under the control of the Treasury Department and agent of Treasury now abroad. If Mr. Mallory declines to transfer the cotton of his Department, the War Department will, I suppose, be compelled to ship as formerly.

I. The attention of medical examining boards is called to paragraph IV, General Orders, No. 34, current series.* Such boards have no power to retire an officer, but will forward the certificate of disability (giving the officer examined a duplicate thereof) and the application, through the Surgeon-General, to the Adjutant and Inspector General, that the "certificate of retirement" may be issued from this office. No other certificate of retirement will be respected.

II. Each officer retired under the provisions of the act will, immediately on the receipt of the certificate of retirement as set forth in the preceding paragraph, or as soon thereafter as practicable, communicate to this office the military station or post-office (giving county and State) at which he may be found. Whenever any permanent change is made in his location he will immediately report such change to this office.

III. The certificate of retirement, as provided in paragraph I, will be numbered and forwarded to the officer so retired when he is on duty in the field through the general commanding the army or department to the regiment or battalion to which the officer may belong. When he is absent from his command it will be forwarded directly to his address at the place where he appeared before the Board of Examiners (unless a different direction is requested by the officer) and a notice of the fact will be sent from this office to the commanding general.

* See p. 214.

IV. When an officer presents himself for re-examination, in compliance with paragraph VII, General Orders, No. 34, it will be the duty of the Board examining to specify on the new medical certificate the number of the certificate of retirement as issued from this office.

V. Each officer retired under the act, and not assigned to duty, will report by letter to the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office monthly, giving his address, as required by paragraph 167, Army Regulations.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Milledgeville, Ga., March 22, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War Confederate States of America:

SIR: The General Assembly of the State of Georgia has passed a resolution, a copy of which is herewith transmitted, in which they decline to express any opinion as to the wisdom of the act passed by Congress enrolling such persons as had been enrolled under the State laws, and recommended that I as the Executive interpose no obstacle to its enforcement, and also requesting me to open a correspondence with you and request you to exonerate from the penalties of said act such persons between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty who did not volunteer or enroll within the time specified, supposing their enrollment under the State law to be legal.

Having given my views upon this question in my messages to the General Assembly and submitted it to their decision, I yield to their recommendation.

An act was passed by the General Assembly of this State, approved December 14, 1863, to reorganize the militia of the State of Georgia, which required the enrollment of all male white residents who were then or who should be of the age of sixteen years, and not over sixty years, for military service, according to the provisions of said act, which enrollment was immediately ordered and made; after which Congress passed an act declaring that "from and after the passage of the same all white men, residents of the Confederate States, between the ages of seventeen and fifty, shall be in the service of the Confederate States during the war."

Under the fifth section of said act it is made "the duty of all white residents of the Confederate States between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty to be enrolled within a certain time, and any person who shall fail to enroll himself without a reasonable excuse therefor shall be placed in service in the field for the war."

Instead of constituting a reserve for State defense and detail duty, these persons, honestly believing that as both acts required the same State defense, and as they were enrolled by State authority for that purpose, it was legal, failed to enroll themselves in Confederate service, which, I think, "is a reasonable excuse therefor." I therefore respectfully request that they be allowed thirty days after notice given to volunteer, organize, and elect their officers. And as it is important that your decision be made known immediately, with your consent I will publish your reply to this letter if you conform to the wish of the General Assembly and grant the privilege requested for the persons now made subject to enrollment.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, April 2, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The instructions of this Bureau, under sanction of the Secretary of War, to the commandant of conscripts for Georgia allow until the 1st of May for the enrollment of the classes indicated by Governor Brown. This entirely exonerates these classes from the penalty provided by Congress, and seems to meet Governor Brown's recommendation.

JNO. S. PRESTON,
Colonel and Superintendent.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 23, 1864.

General R. E. LEE,
Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: The act of the last Congress to impose regulations upon the foreign commerce of the Confederate States provides for an embargo upon the exportation of cotton, tobacco, sugar, rice, molasses, and military and naval stores from the Confederacy, except under the regulations of the President. The regulations for export by sea and overland to Mexico have been published. There is another branch of the same trade that the public necessity alone justifies, and which cannot be specially regulated, except by communication with the general commanding the lines on the frontier. The act prohibits exportation into any portion of the Confederate States occupied by the enemy, and authorizes the forfeiture of the articles exported, and the vehicles, teams, and slaves employed in the business. It authorizes the collectors of the districts, and such other officers as may be designated by the President, to take into their custody any of the articles subject to forfeiture, when there is reason to believe they are intended for exportation, or when in vessels, carts, or wagons, or any other carriage or vehicle whatsoever, or in any manner apparently on their way toward the territories of a foreign nation, or toward the territories of the Confederate States in the occupation of the United States, and not to permit the same to be removed until bond shall be given, with satisfactory sureties, that no violation of this act and the regulations under the same is intended.

The third section of the act provides that these articles may be laden under a special permission, and upon taking a bond to secure the delivery of the articles at their destination.

It is necessary that this Department shall authorize a trade in these articles with the border counties, and even Maryland, for ordnance supplies, and to obtain subsistence from Northern Virginia, and the Department has placed the subject, so far as regards subsistence and other supplies, except ordnance stores, under the charge of Maj. B. P. Noland. He contracts for articles, takes the bond, and receives those that may be imported in return; that is, he superintends the operations. The permissions will all be issued from this Department, and none will be granted except for this object, except in a few cases, for the supply of soldiers' families outside of our lines. A contraband trade in the prohibited articles cannot be permitted for individual advantage, and the duty of the commander is to prevent the same.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh articles of the regulations in respect to the overland trade with Mexico are applicable to persons engaged in the trade elsewhere, and contain directions as to the proper course to be pursued by the commander in all such cases.

With this statement of the act, the rules of the Department respecting it, and by reference to the regulations in respect to the overland trade with Mexico, so far as applicable to your lines, will enable you to give instructions suitable to the case. The act does not contemplate any action in respect to imports by the military authorities; but if any illicit trade in prohibited articles is discovered notice should be given. A copy of the Treasury regulations as to such articles is forwarded with this letter.*

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,

March 23, 1864.

HONORABLE SECRETARY OF WAR,
Richmond, Va.:

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the effect of the act of Congress approved February 17, 1864, amending the law establishing military courts, which requires that "charges shall be referred to said courts and their proceedings reviewed by the army commander, as in the case of general courts-martial." This converts military courts practically into courts-martial and sacrifices the chief benefits that were anticipated from the creation of the former.

When I recommended the establishment of military courts, in the autumn of 1862, the inadequacy of the courts-martial to enforce discipline in the Army had become apparent to my mind from the experience of the campaign in Northern Virginia and Maryland, which had just closed. The importance of prompt and certain punishment of offenses had been strongly impressed upon me, and as it was impossible to accomplish this object by convening courts-martial in the midst of active operations, I thought that great good could be attained by having a tribunal to attend the Army to try and punish offenses as they were committed, so as more effectually to restrain them than could be hoped by a trial and punishment after the lapse of a long time and when the immunity of one offender had encouraged many others to follow his example. The same considerations made me look for better results from the military courts when the Army was stationary, as their proceedings, if conducted according to the original plan, could be much more expeditious than those of courts-martial.

One of the chief sources of delay in the latter courts was the necessity of forwarding all charges to my headquarters for examination before being ordered to trial, and subsequently of reviewing the proceedings of all the courts. Much time was necessarily lost in both these particulars, as the number of cases was so great that they could not always be reviewed as soon as received, without the sacrifice of other and more pressing duties. These difficulties it was thought would be obviated to a great extent by allowing the corps commanders to send their charges directly to the military courts of their respective corps for trial, and to review the proceedings of those courts, and it was found in practice that such was the case. The labor of reviewing was divided among several, and the time necessarily consumed in the transmission of papers was also saved.

The act of Congress above referred to has entirely taken away these, which were the chief benefits of the military courts, and restored all the objectionable features of the system of courts-martial. In fact I would prefer the latter, as they do not require the additional transportation and subsistence necessary for the military courts. While the army is stationary there is absolutely no difference in point of efficiency between the two courts, and although the military courts might sit while the army is moving, the necessity that the charges to be tried shall first be sent to me to be referred to these courts, and that their proceedings shall be reviewed by me, makes the courts of no practical use during a time of active operations, owing to the impossibility of my discharging these duties under such circumstances, and the great loss of time that must always occur, especially when the troops are separated, as almost always happens.

If the corps commanders and commanders of cavalry divisions, each of which will have a court, be authorized to refer charges to the military courts and review their proceedings, they will continue to prove useful to the Army. If the present law is to continue, they are expensive incumbrances.

If you should desire it I will forward to you the outlines of a law which will embody the principal features that experience has shown should characterize the military courts, to be presented to Congress at their next meeting, and I hope their wisdom will see proper to remedy the objections above pointed out in the existing constitution of those tribunals.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE,
General.

MARCH 26, 1864.

Respectfully referred to the President, who may be interested to learn General Lee's well-considered opinion of the objections to the recent legislation of Congress relative to military courts and the amendments that are desirable.

J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

[Second indorsement.]

APRIL 1, 1864.

SECRETARY OF WAR:

I do not find in the law referred to anything which requires the commanding general to refer all charges to the military courts. It seems to me to be placed just where the Articles of War, the Regulations of the Army, and practice in relation to general courts-martial had before fixed it. The revision of the proceedings by the commanding general is made obligatory wherever it was requisite in the case of a general court-martial.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 38. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,

I. The second and third paragraphs of General Orders, No. 8, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, series of 1862, are hereby revoked.

II. With a view to facilitate the organization of citizens of Maryland into companies, squadrons, battalions, and regiments, in accordance with the act to authorize and provide for the organization of the Maryland Line, published in paragraph I, General Orders, No. 8, above referred to, a camp will be established at Staunton, Va., to be called Camp Maryland, and a camp near Hanover Junction, to be called Camp Howard.

III. The troops now under the command of Col. Bradley T. Johnson will for the present occupy Camp Howard, and all other Maryland companies, squadrons, and battalions will, upon their written application, be detached by commanding generals from their present commands and ordered to proceed, for the purpose of being organized into regiments, either to Camp Maryland or to Camp Howard, as they may elect.

IV. All persons now in service in other than Maryland companies who are, or were at the commencement of the war, native or adopted citizens of Maryland, and who desire to join companies from their own State, will, upon their application in writing, with reliable evidence of their citizenship, addressed and sent directly to the commandant of Camp Maryland or to the commandant of Camp Howard, be transferred to the Maryland Line, and at their option will either be assigned to Maryland companies now existing, or, provided the number be sufficient, organized into new companies with the privilege of electing company officers. And persons now in service in Maryland companies who are citizens of other States will, upon their request in writing, accompanied by proper evidence of their citizenship, be transferred by commanding generals to any company from their own States in the army to which they belong.

V. Upon receipt of orders from this office making transfers in accordance with the preceding paragraph commanding generals are directed to forward the men so transferred to the camp designated in charge of commissioned officers, and they will furnish every possible facility for the prompt movement of companies, squadrons, and battalions as directed in the third paragraph of this order.

VI. All native or adopted citizens of Maryland who are not now in the Confederate service will, upon application to either of the commandants herein mentioned within the next sixty days, be enlisted into the Maryland Line, and at their option assigned to existing Maryland companies or organized into the new companies hereinbefore provided for.

VII. Major-General Elzey is relieved from the command of the Department of Richmond and assigned to the command of the Maryland Line. He will for the present take immediate command of Camp Maryland. Col. Bradley T. Johnson will assume command of Camp Howard. They will at once proceed to carry out the purpose of these orders.

By order:

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 39. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, March 24, 1864.

The following act of Congress is published for the information of those interested:

AN ACT to authorize the impressment of meat for the use of the Army, under certain circumstances.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That whenever the President shall declare that the public exigencies render it necessary, impressments of meat, for the use of the Army, may be made from any supplies that may exist in the country, under the express condition that just compensation shall be afforded to the owner of the meat taken or impressed, and subject to the following restrictions and limitations:

SEC. 2. The power to direct such impressments shall be conferred upon the Secretary of War; but he shall not reduce the supplies of any person below one-half of the quantity usually allowed for the support of himself, his family, and dependents for the year. He shall exercise the said power by orders directed to the officers or agents he may employ, who shall have explicit instructions as to the mode of its execution, and injunctions that the same shall not be abused.

SEC. 3. That these orders shall direct that a notice shall be given to the owner of the meat needed, his bailee or other agent, declaring the quantity required, the price offered, the existence of a necessity, and whether possession is to be taken of the same immediately, and with whom the risk of the safe-keeping is to be, pending the negotiation, and in what manner the compensation shall be settled, in case the offer is not accepted—service of which notice shall be a condition precedent to any impressment or seizure by the impressing officer.

SEC. 4. That upon the service of this notice upon the owner of any meat liable to impressment, the owner shall hold the same subject to the claim of the Confederate States, and shall be entitled to just compensation, according to the provisions of this act; and if the necessity is declared by the impressing officer to be urgent, he shall deliver the possession to the impressing officer upon his demand, who shall give a receipt therefor, as provided in the sixth section of this act.

SEC. 5. That for the ascertainment of the quantity of meat liable to impressment under this act, and also of just compensation for the same, where the owner and the impressing officer cannot agree, the impressing officer shall appoint one loyal and disinterested citizen of the county, district or parish, in which the meat impressed shall be at the time of impressment, and the owner of the meat so impressed, his agent, or other bailee, shall appoint another, who shall, upon oath, ascertain the quantity liable to impressment, and the value of the same at the date of the notice served upon the party, which oath may be administered by the impressing officer, and which ascertainment of the quantity and value shall be conclusive evidence thereof; and if the assessors cannot agree, they may associate with them a third person, of like qualifications, to make said assessments.

SEC. 6. That whenever an impressment shall be made, under this act, it shall be the duty of the impressing officer to give an official certificate, showing the quantity taken, the company, battalion, regiment or other command, for whose use it is required, the compensation to be paid, the circumstances of necessity that existed, which certificate shall be evidence of a claim against the Confederate States, and shall be promptly paid by the disbursing officer of the command for which the meat was taken, or by the chief of the bureau having charge of disbursements for similar objects.

Approved February 17, 1864.

I. The necessity for the impressment of meat under the above act having arisen, in the opinion of the President, these regulations for the exercise of the power of impressment are made, under the authority of the preceding act of Congress, by the Secretary of War.

II. The power to make the impressment under this act is conferred upon the commanding generals of departments, and of armies in the field, to be exercised by officers specially designated by them for that purpose, and also upon the chief of the Subsistence Department, and such officers of his Bureau as he may select.

III. When any impressment of meat is required, the impressing officer will require a statement of the supplies on hand, the number of persons to be provided for, the length of time for which the provision is made, and will, thereupon, if he shall conclude that there is a cause for impressment, proceed to give the notice required by the third section of this act.

IV. The officer making the impressments will in all cases commence by giving a written or printed notice, which shall express all the particulars contained in the section aforesaid, and he will take care not to impress more of the supplies of any owner than the act of Congress permits.

V. If any question should arise as to the quantity of the meat in possession of the owner, or whether a reasonable allowance has been made under the conditions of this act, or in reference to the rate of compensation to be paid, the difference will be settled, according to the fifth section of the act. The decisions of the arbitrators appointed under this section will be conclusive upon both the impressing officer and the owner, and the settlement will be made according to the award.

VI. A report of all impressments under this act, whether by officers in the field or by officers of the Subsistence Department, will be made to the chief of the Bureau of Subsistence by the officer making it.

VII. The attention of officers in the field who may be required to make impressments under this act is particularly directed to the conditions of the sixth section, and they are specially directed to conform in all cases to the same. Any deviation from this order will subject the officers concerned to punishment.

VIII. No impressment under this or any other order shall be made of milch cows or of the breeding stock of any farm or plantation.

By order:

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., March 24, 1864.

The following is prescribed as the form of the bond required in the second clause, fourth article, tenth section, of the late military bill, and with slight alterations may be adapted to the cases of agricultural details:

THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF _____.

Know all men by these presents, That we (name of principal), of _____ County, in the said State (name of surety), of _____ County, and (name of surety), of _____ County, in the said State, are held and firmly bound unto the Confederate States of America, in the penal sum of (double the estimated value of produce to be delivered, in words, not figures) dollars, to be paid to the said Confederate States of America; for which payment, well and truly to be made and done, we bind ourselves, and each of us, our heirs, executors, and administrators, jointly and severally, firmly, by these presents.

Sealed with our seals and dated this _____ day of _____, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-_____.

Whereas, the above bound (name of principal) has applied for the exemption of (himself or name of person exempted) as ("overseer" or "agriculturalist," as the case may be), under the fourth article of the tenth section of the act of Congress, approved 17th February, 1864, entitled "An act to organize forces to serve during the war," there being upon the farm or plantation of the said (name of owner of farm), for which exemption is sought (number in words) able-bodied slaves between the ages of sixteen and fifty, within the meaning of said act; and which application is to be granted upon the satisfactory execution of this bond.

Now the condition of this obligation is such, that if the above bound (name of principal) shall deliver to the duly authorized officer or agent of the Confederate States, at (railroad depot, or other station agreed upon), or at such other place as may be directed by the Secretary of War, or his duly authorized officer or agent, within twelve months from the date hereof (number in words, not figures) pounds of bacon, or, at the election of the Government, its equivalent in pork, and (number in words, not figures) pounds of net beef (said beef to be delivered on foot), to be paid for by the Government at the prices fixed by the commissioners of the State, under the impressment act; and shall sell the marketable surplus of provisions and grain now on hand, and which he may raise from year to year while this exemption continues, to the Government or to the families of soldiers, at prices not exceeding the prices fixed by the commissioners of the State, under the impressment act; and shall in all other respects faithfully conform to the requisitions of the said act, under which the said (name of person exempted) is exempted, according to the true intent and meaning thereof (he being entitled to the commutation therein provided, upon compliance with the terms thereof), then this obligation to be void and of no effect, or else to remain in full force and virtue.

OFFICE COMMANDANT OF CONSCRIPTS,
Montgomery, Ala., March 25, 1864.

Lieut. Gen. LEONIDAS POLK,

Comdg. Department of Mississippi, &c., Demopolis, Ala.:

GENERAL: I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your communication of the 24th instant,* but regret that I cannot fully agree with you in regard to my duties relative to the supporting force placed under my control by the superintendent of conscription. Though I have perfect confidence in your disposition to advance the wishes of the Government in its every effort to support and recruit our armies, yet I cannot but think that the withdrawal from the immediate control of the Bureau of Conscription of a force which has been found so indispensable for the past six or eight months in the enforcement of the conscription laws will prove most detrimental to the service. As commandant of conscripts for this State I am charged not only with the enforcement of the conscript laws, but with the duty of arresting and returning to their commands all stragglers and deserters. A large portion of this State is in such a condition that the constant presence of an armed force is absolutely necessary to secure even respect. In some portions, even with the force at present engaged in this service, I am unable to overcome the armed resistance presented. In view of these facts, I feel confident it would be imposing a tax heavier than you contemplate to render me the assistance necessary for this service.

* Not found.

I beg leave respectfully to call your attention to the fact that whilst Brigadier-General Pillow was charged with these duties, under the direction of General Johnston, in the Department of Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, he was unable to suppress desertion and disaffection by such details as Generals Johnston and Bragg were then able to afford him, and that upon repeated applications, approved by General Bragg, the Honorable Secretary of War was at last induced to allow the organization of a sufficient number of companies which you now desire to perform this duty. This power was left discretionary with Brigadier-General Pillow so far as the number of companies was concerned. Under the discretionary power so granted, Brigadier-General Pillow raised over twenty companies in this State as a supporting force to his system of conscription. When this force was organized little less than a reign of terror existed in a large portion of Alabama. The operations of this force and the inclemency of the past winter have for a time produced comparative quiet and confidence and greatly reduced the number of deserters and recusants. It is reasonable to expect that during this spring and coming summer the number of deserters will increase, and an ample supporting force will be indispensably necessary.

Under present regulations the Bureau of Conscription is charged with the duty of returning all absentees and deserters from the Army. Monthly reports of such are rendered by the various regiments in the field to the Bureau of Conscription and the War Department, and veteran soldiers in the field look to the Bureau of Conscription to return those who have deserted the post of duty. Brigadier-General Pillow having been ordered to the field, and the entire control of this service having been transferred to Colonel Preston, he directed me when in Richmond recently to inspect and report upon the condition of the supporting force organized by Brigadier-General Pillow, stating that he did not believe that it would be necessary to retain all that Brigadier-General Pillow had organized under discretionary power, but that so little was known of the condition and material of which these companies were composed that no order could be made relieving them until inspected and reported upon. On my arrival at this place, on my return from Richmond, Brigadier-General Pillow showed me a letter from the Honorable Secretary of War authorizing him to organize for field service such companies of the supporting force as Colonel Preston should turn over to him, after all parties liable to conscription should have been taken out. Brigadier-General Pillow insisted that I should at once turn over to him all but seven companies. This I was not authorized to do, but believing that Brigadier-General Pillow had retained whilst superintendent of conscription more companies than were actually necessary, and being anxious to contribute whatever I could consistently with orders to secure him a command in the field, I telegraphed Colonel Preston for authority to turn over at once such companies of the supporting force as I did not need. This authority was granted by telegram, leaving me, of course, responsible for any error that might be committed by turning over too many companies, or by turning over companies out of which the conscripts had not been taken. Under that authority I turned over to Brigadier-General Pillow what purported to be thirteen companies out of twenty-five reported to me. This is as low as I feel that I could safely reduce the force under the power granted me by Colonel Preston, unless he were to direct otherwise. I regret that Brigadier-General Pillow seems to think that I am not disposed to assist him in obtaining a command in the field, and I regret that anything should occur at this time to embarrass Colonel Preston's system of conscription, but I rely with confidence upon your sound judgment, and upon the promises you have so kindly made that you will furnish whatever assistance may be required for this service, and thank you most heartily for your expressions of confidence made known to Major Thompson in his interview and communicated to me by him. A copy of this correspondence will be forwarded to Colonel Preston by next mail, asking instructions.

I am, general, very respectfully and truly, your friend and obedient servant,

H. C. LOCKHART,
Lieutenant-Colonel and Commandant for Alabama.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
March 26, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond:

SIR: I have the honor to suggest that in my opinion a plan might be adopted which would sensibly lessen the issue of Confederate money without doing injustice to the rights of any one. Since I have had the command of this army large amounts have been paid to citizens for articles consumed or destroyed by the troops, or for damages of different kinds. These payments have all been made in money, although much of the property paid for was such as the owner would probably never have sold, or at any rate not for a long time. In the situation in which we are placed it is probably necessary to give every inducement we can to the people to sell us what we require, and we cannot avoid paying them in the way that they prefer. But such need not be the case with reference to such things as wood for fuel, taken by the troops. The wood they use is not generally a source of income or revenue to the owner, nor in most cases, if it were not burned by them, would it be cut for many years. It contributes to the value of the real estate, but can hardly be regarded as personally. There is no reason why it should be paid for in money, as the owner would be equally well off if paid in bonds or certificates of indebtedness, to constitute the foundation of a claim hereafter.

I respectfully recommend that this plan be adopted, and that it be extended to all claims resting upon the same grounds. When property usually sold in market or in the ordinary business of the owner is taken or destroyed there may be some equity in his claim to be paid in current money; so in those cases where property is destroyed that must be restored, such as fences, houses, &c. But in all other cases a great deal of money might be saved by giving bonds or certificates. If this cannot be done to the whole amount of the claim, part at least might be thus settled.

As I take it to be desirable to make the issue of the new currency as slow as possible, I respectfully suggest that action in this matter be taken at once. In many cases persons have received more for wood used by the troops, and which but for such use would now be standing, than was originally paid for the land itself. It is evident that if all the property of this kind is to be converted into currency the volume of it must be greatly augmented.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE,
General.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 28, 1864.

General R. E. LEE:

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter calling my attention to the serious inconveniences resulting from the recent legislation of Congress respecting the military courts.*

I concur fully with your views, and my recommendations for the action of Congress were of an opposite tendency and sought to give greater facilities for their action and to relieve both the commanding general and the President from the burden of reviewing the cases decided. I was not consulted in reference to the act passed, and I think it very probable some misapprehension existed in consequence of an impression prevailing (correctly, I believe) that the President considered it incumbent under the Articles of War that the records should be reviewed by the commanding general. I will take pleasure in calling the matter to the notice of Congress at its next session, and will endeavor to procure such legislation as will conform to your views, and while adding to the efficiency of the military courts yet lighten the labors now injudiciously cast on you and other commanders in the field.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 29, 1864.

General R. E. LEE,

Commanding Army of Northern Virginia:

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 26th instant and to express my obligation for the counsel you suggest in regard to the use of certificates of indebtedness. My own judgment fully approves the policy you recommend, and it was owing in some measure to suggestions and urgency on my part that there was made in the recent currency bill a provision for the issue and use of certificates of indebtedness. These certificates have been made, by the provision allowing 6 per cent. interest and exemption from taxation, so tempting in comparison with other Confederate issues that it is hoped with confidence they will be received in payment not only of such claims as you more specially refer to, but likewise in part on general purchases through preference, or at least without objection, by the people. They will, so used, greatly diminish the volume of the currency it will be necessary to issue, and every effort shall be made by the Department to make them as available to this end as possible. No one can be more thoroughly satisfied, or perhaps none has better opportunities to feel the necessity of reducing our redundant currency and of maintaining it at some fixed reasonable standard. It is very difficult to correct the excesses to which we have been incautiously led in the issue of notes circulating as money, but I am hopeful, with the perception of the evil that now prevails, both with the people and their representatives, there will be a steady reduction of the notes issued to the reasonable amount required for circulation, and an inflexible determination to maintain the circulation steady.

In my opinion almost any sacrifice ought to be made to obtain credits requisite to carry on the war rather than to recur to the most expensive and mischievous of all modes—the issue of a redundant currency. To aid I shall endeavor to obtain supplies from abroad, and even through our lines by an exchange of our products. Even in our own limits I expect to introduce and rely upon to a considerable extent a system of barter. I am happy to think in all this I shall have, as I infer from your letter, your approval and co-operation.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 40. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, March 29, 1864.

I. The enlistment of deserters is a serious evil in the service. The attention of the Army is therefore directed to the Twenty-second Article of War, which provides that "no non-commissioned officer or soldier shall enlist himself in any other regiment, troop, or company without a regular discharge from the regiment, troop, or company in which he last served, on the penalty of being reported a deserter and suffering accordingly; and in case any officer shall knowingly receive and entertain such non-commissioned officer or soldier, or shall not, after his being discovered to be a deserter, immediately confine him, and give notice thereof to the corps in which he last served, the said officer shall by a court-martial be cashiered."

II. A strict observance of this law, and the arrest and trial of all who violate its injunctions, are required.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., March 29, 1864.

His Excellency WILLIAM SMITH,
Governor of Virginia:

SIR: Your letter of the 22d instant,* in regard to the State force in the city of Richmond, has been referred to the Conscript Bureau with this indorsement:

The men in these militia organizations come, in my judgment, under the liabilities to military service declared by the act of the Confederate Congress. They are none of them "troops of war" kept by a State in time of war in the contemplation of the Constitution. Being thus liable, those capable of active service in the field between the ages of eighteen and forty-five must be at once conscribed and devoted to the old organizations, either by their own selection or by assignment. Those who would belong to the reserve forces, being already in organizations similar in a great degree (though under State authority) to those contemplated for the reserve, and by their union with others not liable to conscription, holding perhaps together a larger local force than might otherwise collect, need not at once be called into Confederate service, but may be allowed to remain as they are until further orders. The claim to them cannot be surrendered, but the contingencies of the future must determine whether they may not be more usefully employed in their present organizations than in new reserve companies for Confederate service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

RALEIGH, March 29, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I received the inclosed letter † from Mr. Boyden to-day. Mr. B. resides in Salisbury, but you will see that the letter was written from the residence of C. I. Pierson. I have written Mr. B. in reply that he misinterpreted my letter in supposing that all persons who had sued out writs prior to the orders from your Department of the 10th instant were to be put upon the same footing as those who were discharged at Salisbury. In the latter cases the ordinary return was made that the parties were held for military duty. In the cases referred to by Mr. Boyden the returns were under the orders of Colonel Mallett, he having received orders before yours of the 10th instant from the Conscript Bureau. Mr. B. states the returns and says that a motion will be made to discharge the parties upon the ground of the insufficiency of the returns—I presume for the reason that they do not correspond with the orders of the 10th. I have explained to Mr. B. the whole matter and said to him that I had neither power nor inclination to interfere further, and also that I did not believe the general would regard any discharge granted in any such case. How many cases there are of this kind I know not. There were some 115 or 120 of the Salisbury cases.

I received your last letter. Am I to receive any commission as commissioner, or any other instructions than those embraced in the order of the 10th of March, 1864?

Very respectfully,

THS. BRAGG.

SIR: You will find herewith inclosed the orders relative to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus with the act on that subject.*

The Department desires that you will undertake the charge of commissioner for carrying into effect the act and orders under it in the State of Mississippi. The orders sufficiently express the duties you have to perform. You are also requested to afford counsel to the commander of conscripts and the enrolling officers in cases that may arise in which the interposition of that writ may be claimed.

You are authorized to detail one or more assistants from the class between forty-five and fifty, or to designate some gentlemen above that age to aid you if the duties become too onerous for your personal attention.

Congress failed to make an appropriation to carry into effect this act, but will doubtless do so at its next meeting in May. You will keep an accurate account of the expenses and send it to this Department previous to the meeting of Congress. A reasonable and proper compensation will be allowed to you for the duties you may be required to perform.

Brig. Gen. A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General:

GENERAL: The necessity of more rapid communication with Wilmington has long been felt, but has failed of accomplishment from a want of harmony with the railroad officers. I am satisfied that we can expect no lasting improvement until the three roads between this city and that are under one management and worked as one corporation. I am also satisfied that this can never be done if the wishes of the present officers are consulted. Three presidents and as many superintendents will be sure to find reasons why no good could result from such an arrangement. I would therefore recommend that the six officers of these roads above named be convened and the wishes of Government be unfolded to them, at the same time assuring them that the temporary amalgamation was a military necessity and must be complied with. The terms should be liberal, as the end, if attained, is beyond price. If the Government would take the roads with all rolling-stock, shops, machinery, tools, &c., just as they stand, and agree to pay an annual interest of  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. until the war closes, and then to replace the roads, &c., in as good condition as received, there would be no reasonable objection to turning them over to the Government. It is not an object to stickle about terms if the companies can be brought to agree to it; and so important do I consider the arrangement that I urge it upon your consideration even to the extent of an impressment.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

F. W. SIMS,
Lieutenant-Colonel, &c.

[Indorsement.]

APRIL 1, 1864.

As this proposition involves the exercise of large powers, and may involve very heavy expenditures on the part of the Government, it is respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War for his sanction.

GUYTON, GA., March 31, 1864.

His Excellency President DAVIS:

DEAR SIR: I trust you will pardon the liberty I take in calling your attention to the above extract* from the Savannah Morning News.

You here see an act of great injustice about to be perpetrated on our brave soldiers in the field. Nine-tenths of the militia officers of Georgia are between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, and thus, under Governor Brown's protection, they will escape all military service. The idea of keeping up such a militia organization is simply absurd. Their commands will consist of boys from sixteen to seventeen, and of men between fifty and sixty, who had no voice in the election of said officers, and who would much prefer men from among their own number. There are few of the people of Georgia, men and women, who do not, after God, place all their trust in you, and confidently look to you to interpose your authority to stop this outrageous wrong. All between the ages of seventeen and fifty should, as by law they are required to do, immediately take their places in the ranks, and particularly these same unpatriotic militia officers. Relying on your sense of justice, I trust you will give the foregoing lines your attentive perusal.

With the assurance that you and yours are daily commended to the care, protection, and guidance of our Heavenly Parent, and sympathizing deeply with you in your many cares and perplexities,

I remain, your obedient servant,

J. C. MATHER.

[First indorsement.]

Respectfully referred, by direction of the President, to the superintendent of the Bureau of Conscription for attention.

HEADQUARTERS CAMP COOPER,

Respectfully forwarded to Colonel Browne.

The statement made in the extract appended to the within letter is no doubt true. Many men between eighteen and forty-five have been elected under the militia law of Georgia recently, and received commissions from the Governor. No method is known by which such men can be properly sent to the field, they being understood to be exempt therefrom by the recent proclamation of Governor Brown, as necessary to the militia service of the State.

For the commandant:

HEADQUARTERS CONSCRIPTION SERVICE,
Macon, Ga., June 6, 1864.

Respectfully forwarded to Col. John S. Preston, superintendent Bureau of Conscription.

There can be no doubt of the truth of the statement of the within letter or of the justice of the writer's appreciation of the facts. As far as I can learn, almost all the militia and civil officers exempted by the Governor of Georgia "as necessary to the State Government" are between the ages of eighteen and fifty and fit for field service. District and sub-engineer officers have been directed to obtain and furnish these headquarters accurate information as to the number of officers in their respective districts and counties thus exempt, together with their ages and date of appointment or election, which will give a precise exhibit of the extent to which these wholesale exemptions have affected the effective strength of the Army.

WM. M. BROWNE,
Colonel and Commandant.

[Inclosure.]

THE STATE MILITIA.

The Legislature at its extra session having transferred all between the ages of seventeen and fifty to the Confederate Government, the Milledgeville Union says Governor Brown immediately sent a copy of the resolutions to the Secretary of War and requested him to permit the militia so transferred to volunteer and elect their own officers. So soon as the reply of the Secretary of War is received the decision will be made public.

"It is proper here to remark," says the Union, "that the transfer of those between seventeen and fifty does not disband the militia organization of the State. The newly elected militia officers will retain command of the reserved militia between sixteen and seventeen and between fifty and sixty, together with such exempts from Confederate service as are not exempts from State militia duty. The reserved will remain a complete organization for police purposes and for the suppression of servile insurrection or internal troubles in the counties of their locality."

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., April 1, 1864.

General R. E. LEE,
Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: Your letter of the 29th ultimo has been received.* The draft of the orders proposed to be issued by you has been considered and the orders are approved. The only question is whether, if they should be discovered by the enemy, their attention to the trade we propose to carry on might not be awakened. But the probability is that the trade itself and not the orders will come to their knowledge most readily. It is of importance that no obstruction should be opposed by the pickets to the persons engaged in the trade, and that those concerned should be facilitated and protected as much as possible. The expectation of the Department is to press it to the fullest extent that it may be found practicable. The regulation of the import trade was excluded from the act of Congress purposely. The difficulty of subjecting it to military inspection and regulation has been discovered by experience, and it was thought that any effort to control it by military authority might be productive of mischief. Persons bringing imports can be required to report to the custom-house, and this, perhaps, will be sufficient.

A list of the prohibited articles will be found in the paper inclosed.† In case of the seizure of any articles of the kind, the articles seized should be sent to a receiving officer or to the marshal of the district.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, SUBSIST. DEPT.,
 OFFICE OF CHIEF COMMISSARY FOR VIRGINIA,
Richmond, Va., April 1, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond:

SIR: The plan adopted by Judge Campbell for regulating the export of cotton and tobacco through our lines along the Rappahannock and Potomac border is to require the bond to be taken and the permits indorsed by me to some local officer, who indorses them with the length of time for which they can be used. He has so informed General Lee, and asked the prohibition of all trade not authorized by such permits. On the North Carolina and Tennessee border, where a heavy trade is going on, the permits cannot readily be granted by the War Department, and I would, therefore, respectfully suggest that all permits for trade in those sections be granted by the general commanding, who shall require them before being valid to be indorsed by the chief commissary of the State or district, or some officer specially charged by the chief or district commissary with the control of that business. On the North Carolina border General Pickett could grant the permit, and Maj. R. Tannahill, the chief district commissary, should indorse it, and in the Southwest General Breckinridge's permits should be indorsed by Maj. Joseph Cloyd, the chief district commissary.

Agents for railroad companies are now at work in North Carolina with permits from General Whiting, exchanging cotton for bacon, pound for pound, while our agents are exchanging two and three pounds of bacon for one of cotton. The trade should be under the control of designated officers, and thus uniformity and regularity could be attained and fraud and speculation prevented.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. P. NOLAND,

Major and Chief Commissary of Subsistence for Virginia.

[Indorsement.]

APRIL 4, 1864.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY:

If your judgment approves, will you give the requisite instructions? If not, I should be pleased to have the benefit of your counsels. I am inclined to make the modification of requiring the permit from the commissary and the approval by the general rather than as suggested.

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

The undersigned deem it proper to state that the foregoing are the prices at which alone Government agents can, without a violation of law, impress private property, and for the information of all concerned that section of the impressment act which prescribes the pains and penalties incurred by a violation of its provisions is hereto appended:

SEC. XI. That any commissioned or non-commissioned officer or private who shall violate the provisions of this act shall be tried before the military court of the corps to which he is attached, on complaint made by the owner or other persons; and on conviction, if an officer, he shall be cashiered and put into the ranks as a private; and if a non-commissioned officer or private, he shall suffer such punishment not inconsistent with military law as the court may direct.

The undersigned can be addressed at Brooksville, Mobile and Ohio Railroad, Noxubee County, Miss.

GENERAL: The Bureau of Subsistence has a confidential contract with Mr. William J. Stoddard, of Alabama, for getting meat from the north side of the Tennessee River into our lines. Mr. Stoddard writes that he has already a permit for 20,000 pounds of bacon, and says his agent thinks he can obtain a large amount provided he (Stoddard) can protect a steam-boat to bring it up the Tennessee River, but that he has no authority to protect his boat. Mr. Stoddard will be instructed to see you and lay his contract before you. I am not prepared to recommend protection to a boat on the Tennessee unless laden with a much larger amount of subsistence or other stores for the Government or without ample assurance of the loyalty of the captain and parties controlling it. You will, however, be better prepared to judge whether any and what protection should be allowed, and the matter is submitted with confidence to your discretion and superior knowledge of the circumstances.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

Mobile, Ala.:

There will be no objection to your detail of any person to assist you in the performance of the duties of commissioner under Orders No. 31 who may not be liable to service in the field. An exempt from disability or other cause may be detailed, but the Department desires that the details shall not exceed the exact necessity for service. Several cases of hardship and injustice arising from arrests in the Department of Alabama have been reported to this Department, and lately a Mrs. Knox was sent to Richmond without any charges being sent or cause assigned for such a proceeding. The Department expects of you to examine all such persons and that your direction to discharge a person under arrest shall be sufficient. If there be a reasonable cause for arrest or detention you will perform what is required by Orders No. 31.

There is not the slightest disposition upon the part of this Department to use the power conferred by the act of Congress for the arrest of parties except to maintain the efficient execution of the acts of Congress for the organization of the Army and to protect the country from the invidious operations of the enemy. It desires that a candid investigation shall take place in all cases, and that justice be awarded to all persons charged with offense in any form. It desires that the administration under this law shall be such as to vindicate those who made it under the extraordinary circumstances of the time for having intrusted the powers it confers with this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,

*Richmond, Va., April 2, 1864.*Hon. THOMAS BRAGG,
Raleigh, N. C.:

Your letter of the 29th ultimo has been received. It is not supposed any commission is necessary to enable you to perform the duties imposed upon you under the letter of appointment already in your possession.

The Department has not issued any instructions other than those contained in General Orders, No. 31, of the 10th of March, ultimo. It desires that as little obstruction be made to the operations of the civil tribunals as is compatible with the execution of the acts of Congress relative to the organization of the Army. When a case is presented in which there is a reasonable claim for relief from the service under the law, and when there is a bona fide effort to test the validity of the claim, the Department has no desire to prevent the litigation of such a claim. Its object is to employ the power given by the act to prevent those who desire to evade the service from availing themselves of the crude opinions and injurious efforts of some judges who seem to have come to the conclusion that by diminishing the Army and obstructing the authority of Congress they are performing a public duty. The Department desires that all cases in which persons have been or may be arrested shall be examined under your directions, and that none shall be retained in custody against whom there is not a valid cause for arrest and detention. That in the cases in which the courts can render adequate security the parties charged shall be placed at their disposition and control, and that no person shall be retained in the military custody whose conduct has not fairly warranted such a detention. These cases are comparatively few, and when they are discovered a report should be made of the facts and the evidence to the Department as is provided for by General Orders, No. 31.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS,
Lynchburg, April 4, 1864.

General S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General, Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: There is an impression generally entertained that the Honorable Secretary of War has decided that officers of the second-class militia organizations who may be between eighteen and forty-five years of age are not to be interfered with, but are to be permitted to remain at home as militia officers, and that it is only intended that the privates between these ages shall be sent off. In a letter to me, under date of February 10, 1864, Governor Smith, through his aide-de-camp, Colonel French, wrote me as follows:

Neither officers nor men of the second-class militia, nor of the home guards, if not otherwise relieved, are exempted from conscription by reason of being attached to such organizations. If between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, they come under the provisions of the conscript law, unless exempted in accordance with the provisions of the same.

I would be exceedingly surprised, after this, to see these officers exempted. In the second-class militia of Lynchburg a large number of the officers are young men. The conduct of this organization in responding to my calls upon them does not entitle its officers to favor. My dispatches will show that on the last occasions when I called upon them, the battalion absolutely declined going. Individual officers and men would have done their duty, but in such small numbers as not to warrant any organization. I question whether these gentlemen between eighteen and forty-five years of age had any right in the second-class militia in the first instance, either as officers or men.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that this battalion failed to go to the assistance of neighboring counties when they were in danger of raids, because the Governor, it was supposed, could not force them and had not ordered them to go. The undersigned on these occasions had called on them to go and had informed them of the occasion of the call. I would state that in August, on my first call, about 250 responded; on my second call about 100 went, but on my last calls (which have been several in number) they have utterly declined, as I have stated.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

I saw the Secretary on receipt of this letter and invited his attention to General Orders, No. 33, of this year. I suggested his sending for the chief of Bureau of Conscription in order to impress on him vigorous and immediate action, which I have reason to believe he has done. On referring to the act above referred to, the Secretary was of the impression that the thirty days when volunteering would cease would be the 15th of April, which is thirty days after the publication of the order.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 41. } Richmond, April 6, 1864.

I. The following schedules of prices for articles named therein, adopted by commissioners appointed pursuant to law, for the State of Virginia, are announced for the information of all concerned; and the special attention of officers and agents of the Government is directed thereto:

RICHMOND, March 31, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON:

SIR: In reviewing the schedules of prices for April we invited the co-operation and aid of Mr. William B. Harrison, and it is just to add that the schedules received the unanimous approval of the commissioners.

We respectfully offer the accompanying schedules, A and B, with the understanding that the prices are to remain for the month of April, unless in the interval it should be deemed necessary to modify them.

The following prices are to be the maximum rates to be paid for the articles impressed, in all cities and in usual places of sale, and when impressed on the farms or elsewhere the same prices are to be paid.

Under existing circumstances we have deemed it not only just, but most likely to favor increased production, that producers in future should not be required to transport their surplus productions when impressed, but that the agents of the Government should employ or impress the neighborhood or county wagons and teams to haul all such articles, and so divide the work between the owners of wagons and teams as to be least prejudicial to those successfully engaged in agriculture.

a Pro rata as to greater or less width or weight.

b On the above enumerated cotton cloths, pro rata as to greater or less width or weight.

In assessing the average value of first-class artillery and wagon horses and mules at $500, we designed that the term should be accepted and acted upon according to its obvious common-sense import. In other words, that they should be selected and then impressed accordingly as their working qualities and adaptation to army service, together with their intrinsic value, would warrant a judicious purchaser in considering them as coming within the contemplation of the commissioners when they assessed the average value of such horses as the Government needed at $500. But cases might arise, however, when the public exigencies would be so urgent as to demand that all horses at hand should be impressed. Yet under ordinary circumstances, when family or extra-blooded horses or brood mares of admitted high value are impressed, we respectfully suggest to the Secretary of War to have instructions forwarded to the impressing officers to propose and allow the owners to substitute in their stead such strong, sound, and serviceable horses or mules as shall be considered and valued by competent and disinterested parties as first-class artillery horses or first-class wagon mules.

The term "average value per head" is in contradistinction to a fixed and uniform price for each horse or mule. We supposed that in impressing a number of horses or mules, whether owned by several persons or one individual, that some might be estimated at $300 and others at different advanced rates, according to their worth, up as high as $700—thus making an average value or price for a number of good, sound, and efficient horses or mules $500 each.

In illustration of our views, we will add, that a horse with only one eye sound might, in all other respects, be classed as a first-class artillery horse, yet the loss of one eye would justly and considerably curtail his value. So a horse from ten to eighteen years of age might be deemed in all other particulars as a first-class artillery horse, but of course, however efficient or able to render good service for a year or so, yet his advanced age would justly and materially impair his value. Any horse, however he may approximate the standard of a first-class artillery horse, must, according to deficiencies, fall below the maximum price; and as few comparatively come up to the standard, and therefore are entitled to the maximum price, so of course in all other instances the price should be proportionately reduced, as imperfections place them below the standard of first class, &c.

19	Hire of ox carts, team, and driver; rations furnished by owner .....	Per day .....	10.00
20	Hire of same; rations furnished by the Government .....	.....do .....	5.00

Upon further consideration we have concluded to value sheaf oats, hay, and blade fodder east of the Blue Ridge Mountains, when baled, at $5.40 per 100 pounds, and unbaled at $4.50 per 100 pounds, and shucks baled at $3.90 per 100 pounds, and $3 unbaled.

REVISION OF THE SCHEDULE OF FEBRUARY AND MARCH LAST.

Since the adoption of our last schedules for the months of February and March the financial bills passed by Congress, taxing the currency, have seriously impaired the value of the old issues of Confederate Treasury notes. At this juncture large numbers of horses and mules were impressed and paid for in a currency which was in a few days thereafter to be taxed 33½ per cent.

The Board of State Commissioners having adjourned, and one of its members being out of the State, it could not be convened in time to review our schedules of prices. Under this state of facts we have re-examined and rearranged our tariff of prices, so far as we have been advised of recent impressments, proposing, in this mode, to remedy any diminution of valuation which may have resulted from the action of Congress upon the currency. Therefore we assess the average value of artillery or wagon horses or mules, impressed since the passage of the currency bill of the 17th of February last, at \$600. This award will entitle each person to receive higher compensation accordingly as each horse or mule recently impressed may be considered as being a first, second, or third class artillery or wagon horse or mule, whether the parties appeal to our Board or not; and the impressing agents and officers should forthwith call on all of those persons of whom they impressed horses or mules and propose a settlement upon the foregoing basis, but allowing to each person only such prices as first, second, and third class artillery or wagon horses or mules may be estimated at, assuming our average appraisement of \$600 as a fair medium valuation. This, then, would allow a maximum price of \$800, and a minimum price of \$400, making \$600 the average price—thus allowing more for first-class horses or mules and proportionately less for the inferior, as they may fall below the grade of first class. Payment of whatever amount may be awarded to be made in the old issue of Treasury notes as circulated before the 1st of April, or else in the new issue, but with a deduction in such cases of  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. from the additional sum allowed in each case.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

RALEIGH, April 6, 1864.

SIR: Your letter of the 6th [2d] instant was received this morning. I infer from it that I am to examine into cases in which parties are held for military service, and who claim not to be liable under the law. For instance: A man claims to be over forty-five years of age has been sent to camp here as a conscript, and claims that he is only liable to be enrolled for home defense, being between forty-five and fifty years of age. Again: A foreigner has been sent to Camp Holmes as a conscript. He claims never to have obtained a domicile here, and that he is not liable to military duty of any kind under the law. Am I to investigate and decide such cases? The two named have occurred here. If I am to investigate cases of the kind, must I delay doing so until they are reported to me by the department commander in accordance with General Orders, No. 31, March 10, 1864? Would it not be more convenient and save time by requiring such cases to be reported to me by the commander of conscripts? The commander of conscripts showed me a letter to the Conscript Bureau desiring to be informed whether he was to arrest the harborers of deserters, and also the answer from the Bureau. It was to the effect that no authority of the kind could be given to him, and if made, it must be at his peril, and must be reported through the Bureau to the general commanding the department. Nothing, perhaps, tends so much to the encouragement of deserters from the Army as this harboring and concealing of deserters when at home, and unless such persons in the interior of the State are arrested by subordinate officers with their guards, who go in pursuit of deserters, the mischief is likely to continue. The power is a very delicate one, and I fully appreciate what is said in your letter as to the arrest and detention of persons under the late act of Congress. A few examples, however, would have a salutary effect. I think the parties, where there is probable cause, should be bound over to the superior courts of their counties to answer to the court for the offense, which is now indictable under a late act of Assembly. If examined by a commissioner they might be required to enter into recognizance before a magistrate or judge for their appearance before they are discharged from custody by the military officer.

Excuse these inquiries and suggestions, as I know you are occupied incessantly with matters of more importance.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THS. BRAGG.

CIRCULAR } CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
 No. 15. } WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., April 7, 1864.

In pursuance of instructions from the Secretary of War, commanders of conscripts will grant details until the 1st day of June, 1864, to all persons liable to conscription on the 10th day of April instant who are certified by the Commissary-General to be in the service of his department on the said 10th of April and as necessary thereto.

By order of Col. John S. Preston, superintendent:

C. B. DUFFIELD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

MONTGOMERY, April 7, 1864.

Richmond, Va.:

The act of last Congress to organize forces to serve during the war requires enrollment of persons between seventeen and eighteen and between forty-five and fifty at such times and places and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by President. Orders No. 33, from Adjutant-General Cooper, issued March 15, and received by Lieut. Col. H. C. Lockhart on the 29th, prescribes thirty days' notice from publication of order in county or district by enrolling officer. Colonel Lockhart issued his order on the 30th of March. Telegram from Colonel Preston of the 5th instant orders rendezvous on the 16th of April, stating that War Department construes Order No. 33 to mean notice to commence from day of its publication. The construction placed on it is absurd. This order is inconsistent with law and with order from Adjutant-General. The order cannot be enforced. It is impossible to comply with it. The attempt will only do harm—no good. Let me hear from you.

T. H. WATTS,
Governor of Alabama.

[First indorsement.]

Secretary of War for remarks.

J. D.

[Second indorsement.]

Respectfully returned to the President.

Governor Watts has misunderstood or been misinformed as to the construction of the Department. I have considered that companies may be at once formed of all men who have been enrolled under the General Orders, No. 33; and that to hasten enrollment reserves may be appointed at any time within the thirty days allowed by law, but that the privilege of entering the reserve organizations will only be lost by failure to enroll for thirty days after the publication of the order in each district.

Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
April 7, 1864.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Governor of Georgia:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter inclosing a resolution of the General Assembly of Georgia recommending that no obstacle be interposed to the conscription under recent laws of the Confederate Congress of such persons as have been enrolled under the State laws, and desiring that the Secretary of War of the Confederate States be requested to exonerate from any penalties imposed by the Confederate law on such persons so enrolled as had failed to comply with the called-for enrollment under the Confederate law within a specified time.

While I will not disguise the feelings that even greater satisfaction would have been experienced from the cordial approval by your General Assembly of the wisdom of the Confederate law, yet it is gratifying to have the evidence afforded by the resolution of the Assembly of the spirit of harmonious co-operation and patriotic zeal that animated their deliberations. I take pleasure in responding to their request, that on reference to the Conscript Bureau, which is charged with execution of the Confederate law, I am informed that no measures have been taken which as yet have imposed penalties on those enrolled under the late law, and that opportunity has been and will be afforded all such to report themselves or volunteer before they will be subjected to the proscribing penalties. I should add the additional pleasure I have found in the assurance that your own original objections to the Confederate law will be relinquished in deference to the decision of your Assembly, and my hope that a spirit of wise conciliation and forbearance will always avoid any conflict, so much to be deprecated between Confederate and State authorities.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

ATLANTA, April 7, 1864.

His Excellency President DAVIS:

MY DEAR SIR: As you are aware, I submitted an application to you in February last for the appointment of brigadier-general to command a portion of the reserve forces in this State to be organized under the late law of Congress. I inclose copies of the indorsements made upon the application by yourself and the Secretary of War, by which it will be seen that the Honorable Secretary of War stated "regiments may be formed by volunteering before the term of enrollment has expired, and in case of a sufficient number of regiments being organized under Colonel Gartrell's influence in that time to constitute a brigade, I see no difficulty in thus making the desired appointment," &c., and at the same time he gave me written authority to raise and organize regiments by volunteer enlistment. Since that time I have been actively engaged in raising volunteer companies, and have a sufficient number to constitute two or three regiments. On the 31st ultimo the Secretary of War dispatched me in the following words: "General Cobb has been assigned to the command of the reserve forces of Georgia. Report to him at Macon." I did so, and General Cobb has ordered me to take all necessary and proper steps to organize regiments as rapidly as possible, and at the same time informed me that he had written on the 5th instant to the Adjutant-General for full instructions, and had recommended my appointment, and earnestly requested that my commission be forwarded to me at once. I think you will concur with me in the belief that under all the circumstances I have been quite successful in getting up volunteers. Governor Brown's message to the Legislature greatly retarded my operations, but since the action of the Legislature in turning over all persons between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty years to the Confederate Government has become generally known, volunteering in this section of the State has progressed rapidly. I wrote the Secretary of War yesterday asking him to present my case for your consideration. Should you honor me with a commission, I pledge an honest effort for the faithful discharge of all my duties.

Hoping for a favorable response, and with renewed assurances of my highest regard,

I am, very truly, your friend and obedient servant,

LUCIUS J. GARTRELL.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL:

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, with the letter of General Cobb.*

By order:

SAML. W. MELTON,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure.]

FEBRUARY 19, 1864.

Secretary of War for special attention.

Colonel Gartrell is personally known to you, and the records of the Department will show his services in the Army. Commending the case to kind consideration, it is referred for inquiry and conference.

J. D.

FEBRUARY 22, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the President.

As I understand the late law (an official copy of which I have been as yet unable to obtain), regiments may be formed by volunteering before the term of enrollment has expired, and in case of a sufficient number of regiments being organized under Colonel Gartrell's influence in that time to constitute a brigade, I see no difficulty in thus making the desired appointment, subject to the contingency which must attend any future appointment, since it is not the practice of the Department to give any previous positive promise. Before the brigade is organized it is not consistent with the established usage of the Department (even if the power exists) to make any appointment of the brigadier to command it.

J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

SECRETARY OF WAR:

I concur in the above.

CRAWFORDVILLE, GA., April 8, 1864.

Hon. H. V. JOHNSON,
Sandy Grove, Ga.:

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 6th instant has just reached me, and I devote a few leisure moments to you in reply this evening, because I do not know that I shall have time to do it in the morning before the mail closes.*

I wrote you a pretty long letter day before yesterday, and feel no disposition to prolong the discussion. If after reading that you are still of the opinion that the act suspending the writ of habeas corpus in certain cases does not attempt to confer upon the President and others under him the power to arrest and to hold persons arrested without proper warrant under oath, a power that they could not exercise without it, then it is useless to say more; and after reading that letter and the order of General Cooper alluded to in it, you are still of the opinion that personal liberty is not jeopardized by it, and that no blow is struck by it at the very "vitals of liberty," then, indeed, you would not believe though one were to rise from the dead. So no more on those points.

I wish barely to say a few things on some other points. After speaking of the commendable tone of the Milledgeville speech you say, "Yet below the surface your antipathy to the President is perceptible to any one acquainted with your opinions of the man" (underscoring mine), and on this point you say, "I think you had as well have fully unbottled your wrath; for, after all, you are as well understood, in the estimation of the country, to be hostile as if you had avowed it." And you go on to say that I will necessarily be classed "with those whose palpable object it is to organize a party in opposition to the Administration," underscoring all mine; and further on you say that my antipathy to Davis has misled my judgment, or I have allowed my antipathy to him to mislead my judgment.

For your candor and frankness in all this I sincerely thank you, for it is conclusive evidence to me that such are your opinions, and I allude to these matters for the sole purpose of correcting an erroneous impression on your mind.

I assure you I have no antipathy to Mr. Davis; nor am I hostile to him; and if there is an object or intention or wish with any to organize a party in opposition to the Administration, I know nothing of it—have heard nothing of it. As to the late movement on the action of Georgia upon the subject of the habeas corpus and the resolution in relation to the terms upon which peace should be sought, I think I know as much as anybody else. If any one is responsible for it, no one is more so than myself. It is true that those resolutions were not drawn up by me, but they were prepared by Linton after full consultation; prepared at his house before he went to Milledgeville. And as for Mr. Davis or his Administration, they had but little to do with it—nothing in the world except in so far as they fall within the scope of the point as stated. They did not rise to the dignity of a moment's serious consideration or thought one way or the other. Greater objects by far were then engrossing my attention, and Linton's too, I think.

As for Mr. Davis, I repeat again I have no feelings of antipathy, much less hostility. What opinions you may think I entertain of him as you intimate I know not, but I have no hesitancy in stating to you freely and frankly, and most confidentially, what my opinions of him are. They are much more akin to suspicion and jealousy than of animosity or hate. While I do not and never have regarded him as a great man or statesman on a large scale, or a man of any marked genius, yet I have regarded him as a man of good intentions, weak and vascillating, timid, petulant, peevish, obstinate, but not firm.

* Johnson's letter not found.

Am now beginning to doubt his good intentions. I say doubt, for after watching him closely I am not satisfied in my own mind, or arrived at any conclusion, whether some of his shortcomings are to be attributed to weakness or bad purposes. These are my real sentiments, and my reasons for them are these: Since his first elevation to power he has changed many of his former State's rights principles, as in case of conscription. His whole policy on the organization and discipline of the Army is perfectly consistent with the hypothesis that he is aiming at absolute power. Not a word has come from him of military usurpation in the orders for martial law by Bragg and Van Dorn on the whole system of passports and provost-m Marshals, which is utterly wrong and without authority of law. After all that may be said or written by myself and others against these usurpations, not one word has escaped Mr. Davis showing his disapproval of them. Again, it is well known that the subject of a dictatorship has been mooted, talked of, and discussed in private and in the public journals, and that the most earnest advocates of such a course, the virtual doing away with Congress and the Constitution, have been editors near him—right under his nose; editors of journals recognized at the time to be the organs of the Administration. Now, it seems to me strange that this should be so, and men holding and advocating such sentiments for months should hold such near relations to him if such sentiments were distasteful to him. These are bad signs to me, yet they are not conclusive evidences of bad objects or intentions on his part. They leave me in doubt, but certainly awaken my suspicion and watchful jealousy. They teach me to be on my guard, and they should, in my opinion, put the whole country on their guard. The price of liberty is eternal vigilance. But again I assure you I feel no more hostility to him than I do to you and great numbers I meet with who see no danger in these things. My hostility and wrath (and I have enough of it to burst ten thousand bottles) is not against him, or any man or men, but against the thing—the measures and the policy which I see is leading us to despotism. If you can understand and appreciate this position and these feelings, then you can understand me; and if you cannot, then you do not understand me, and cannot. But I trust you do. How you could have got the impression, or entertained the thought, that I had an antipathy to Mr. Davis, or was hostile to him, is strange and unaccountable to me. You surely have heard me in conversation speak of his weakness and imbecility, but certainly with no bitterness of feeling, and what I have said on this subject has always been more in sorrow than anger. I had no more feeling of resentment toward him for these than I had toward the defects and infirmities of my poor old blind and deaf dog that you saw when you were here. Poor old Ris; he is dead now and gone to his long rest. Peace to his ashes and honor to his memory. While I deplore his infirmities I certainly have no feeling of unkindness to him. As to what you say about the Administration, one word: I hardly know what idea you attach to this term as used by you. If you mean the Cabinet, then they are sustained by neither the Congress nor country, and when their recommendations were rejected by Congress, if they had had any self-respect they would have resigned their places. If you mean the acts and messages of Congress, then I am confident not one-tenth of the people of this country approve them. I would stake my head upon the issue that not ten districts in the Confederacy could be carried in a Congressional election for a candidate running on the advocacy of the four leading measures of the last Congress.

and pledged to sustain them as the settled policy of the country. This cry of sustaining the Administration, you will allow me to say, with all due respect to you, is nothing but a stupid, senseless cachination. Nobody approves it. I heard that General Cobb, in his speech at Milledgeville, said all these acts of Congress were proper, wise, and just; and yet I do know that General Cobb spoke very differently to me of some of them before they were passed. Why will men thus degrade themselves by attempting to bamboozle the people; and how are we to get better laws if bad ones, that all feel and know to be bad, are not denounced and true principles proclaimed?

I said but little about the tax and currency question in Milledgeville, because money at best, in my estimation, is but trash. Greater and more vital interests were in jeopardy.

Now I am done with all these matters with you. I wished to put myself right with you on certain points. I hope I have done so. Hereafter I will write on other matters. I do not know yet when I can get to see you. It still continues to rain, and I cannot get my corn in the ground. I must see after that before I can leave home. But I must add, in conclusion, that you are, I think, mistaken in supposing that the late movement in Georgia was started with any view toward the organization of a party against Mr. Davis or his Administration. I know all about that movement, if allusion is made to Governor Brown's message. I advised it from stem to stern and approve it. I don't mean the language, but the policy and the course taken, and I know I had no such object, thought of none such, nor dreamed of any such. It is the proclamation and vindication of great essential truths that I desired to see set forth at the right time and on a proper occasion. But again enough.

What I have written to you is with that freedom and frankness I always use in writing to one who holds such high place in my esteem, and I trust you will so consider it and appreciate it. Let me hear from you when you have leisure to write, and as we cannot agree on these great questions let us entertain ourselves on other topics.

Yours, truly,

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

OFFICE CHIEF INSPECTOR FIELD TRANSPORTATION,
Brandon, Miss., April 11, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Richmond, Va.:

Under the late act of Confederate Congress the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue permits to persons to trade beyond our lines. I have been residing at this point—the western termination of the railroads—and from a long residence at Vicksburg and familiar acquaintance with the people and localities I have good opportunities to judge of men and things and accomplishing results. Many articles are needed in my department (field transportation) which it is impossible to procure in the country, and can only be obtained from beyond our lines. I am satisfied that when Yankee troops and officers being removed from the Mississippi River to Tennessee and Virginia leave, that a large amount of supplies can be landed at such point on the river as to be removed easily within our lines and used by our Government. Understand me. I have nothing to say as to policy of the Government, supposing it indicated by passage of the act of Congress. There are a number of persons in and about the Yankee lines (Confederates who have taken the oath) whose integrity is undoubted, and whose feelings are with the Confederates, if not their political principles (bad thing swearing), who I am satisfied can collude with Yankee officers that will be left, and can have anything they wish delivered, if necessary under the French flag, either on the Yazoo River or some other interior stream, and removed. There is in the Yankee lines a perfect mania for trading in cotton, even going so far as to control their military operations, covered under the pretense of getting out negro men, mules, and supplies of food—in truth, gotten up and being controlled by cotton traders, dividing the profits with superior officers. Witness the late raid into the Yazoo River, and the return to Yazoo City of a steamer for cotton under the French flag; the raid at same date sent into lower part of Hinds County with a military force, Government wagons and teams, to procure cotton where they had previously destroyed all the supplies and taken off the negroes; also the raid into Ouachita and Red River, and the continual trading around Natchez, in all cases the marks being cut off the Government cotton and proceeds divided with any woman or man who points it out and makes the outside arrangement, avowedly for the purpose of defrauding their own Government by using for private gain Confederate cotton captured, and to which the United States Government would be entitled. If necessary the arrangement might be made in the name of citizens of France. The Government yet owns a large amount of cotton west of Pearl River, on the entire front from Lake Maurepas to the Tennessee line. This cotton is being hourly stolen and carried to the Yankee lines, and the whole military force of the Confederate States could not stop it. The Government has not and cannot procure transportation to move it. As it stands, the whole population is being demoralized, socially, morally, and politically, and the whole social fabric is being destroyed and demoralized, and the country is becoming filled with speculators, deserters, and conscripts—overrun by our own troops and the Yankees. Ladies residing in this region, eminent for wealth, respectability, intelligence, and beauty, make nothing of taking Government cotton without authority and traveling in the night to the enemy's lines, as they assert, bribing both pickets, and in return bringing out whisky, calico, and coffee, and have it sold at a large profit. The Government should promptly do one of two things—either have burnt every pound of cotton in this region indicated, or make some arrangement to convert it into such articles as the Government needs or the money. I have not written a letter or received one from any person in Vicksburg, or anywhere else in the Yankee lines, since the fall of Vicksburg, and unless upon matters of interest for the Government and appertaining to my official duty do I expect to communicate; nor have I received an article from there. Our officers are overrun with applications for passports to go to the enemy's lines, and pickets annoyed and corrupted by their attempting to pass without passports. Since the commencement of the war I have not purchased any article to sell again, and do not intend to do so during the war. Under the above state of facts it is important that the Government should act promptly on the cotton and trading question, and also on the passport question.

Not being known to Mr. Memminger, I address this to you, and if upon consultation it is deemed advisable to procure mules, cast-steel, shoe thread, trace chains, &c., and numerous other articles, by exchange for this cotton, I think I can accomplish it.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. M. PAXTON.

J. A. CAMPBELL,

[Second indorsement.]

BUREAU OF SUBSISTENCE,
Richmond, April 29, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The narration of the within writer discloses nothing new to me. I have heard it all before, and more than once. Part of it has been caused by the Federal occupancy of the territory in question; but much of it was to have been anticipated as the inevitable result of the Government policy and of Mr. Memminger's administration. Until both are changed I can see nothing better in the future than is presented by the past. Suppose the Government, as advised by Mr. Paxton, shall now become a party to these transactions, which once it might have directed, if not controlled, it will be necessary to get the cotton from Mr. Memminger. Can that be done? About the 20th January last I heard that there were 3,000 bales of cotton, more or less, at Tuscaloosa in bad condition, with ropes burst and bagging rotted, preyed upon by thieves and eaten by cows. I wanted at least a part of that cotton for an important contract. I applied for it to Mr. Memminger through Colonel Northrop. Mr. Memminger replied that he could not spare it; he wanted it himself; so I had to instruct my agent to buy cotton for his purposes. He has lately applied for funds for that purpose and I have none to send him. Under the state of facts evidenced by this and other similar cases I see no chance of getting the cotton except upon a change of policy. If the policy shall be changed, then I presume the trade will be carried on under Mr.

Memminger's regulations, in which event I respectfully submit that all that I can do will be, under the orders of the Commissary-General of Subsistence and the Honorable Secretary of War, to present just estimates for supplies for the wants of the Army as it may be determined to furnish from that quarter. But should the regulations be abolished or properly modified and the cotton put at my disposal, then under the orders of the Secretary of War I think I could obtain large supplies upon the basis indicated in Mr. Paxton's letter.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., April 11, 1864.

Hon. THOMAS BRAGG,
Raleigh, N. C.:

Your letter of the 6th instant has been received. The decision of questions under the conscription act in reference to the liability of parties to serve under the act, under Orders No. 26, is to be made by the enrolling officer. An appeal can be taken from his decision to the commander of conscripts, and from his decision an appeal can be taken to the Bureau of Conscription, and finally to this Department. There was no intention on the part of this Department that you should be burdened with the performance of the duty of deciding such questions. The officers, in case of doubt or difficulty, have been authorized to take counsel from you, but the instructions of the Bureau and the orders of the Department are full and precise, and it was not anticipated that any occasion would arise in the ordinary business of that department. They should refer cases to the Bureau if necessary. These cases have no connection with the act to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. Congress passed an act relative to the harboring of deserters. The act will be found in Orders No. 29. It provides that if any person shall procure or entice a soldier to desert, or shall aid or assist any deserter from the Army or any person enrolled for service to evade their proper commanders or to prevent their arrest to be returned to the service, or shall knowingly conceal or harbor such deserter, or shall purchase from any soldier or person enrolled for service any portion of his army equipments, rations, or clothing, or any property of the Confederate States or of any officer or soldier, upon conviction before the district court of the Confederate States having jurisdiction of the offense, he shall be fined not exceeding $1,000 and be imprisoned not exceeding two years. All cases arising under this act should be turned over to the judicial tribunals whenever the facts warrant that course. There is no particular occasion for any interruption of the course of these tribunals in ordinary cases. If the prosecution of such cases under the act of the Legislature of North Carolina would be as efficient and convenient a mode of redress, no objection is perceived to a resort to the State courts. The committing magistrates of the State are empowered to act under the laws of the Confederacy for the same purpose.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: The people of this county are already suffering much for corn, and unless something can be done to supply them the condition of things by the middle of May must be painful in the extreme. This is no pretense set up to accomplish a purpose, but is sober and lamentable reality. The county court has appointed two agents, viz, Mr. N. H. Hancock and Mr. T. H. Trent, with instructions to make immediate and earnest efforts to procure and send on corn for the use of the families of the soldiers. This will probably be handed you by Mr. Trent, who will explain more fully the condition of our people and the views of the court. If the Confederate Government can directly or indirectly aid them in their undertaking it will perform a most laudable and meritorious service. It has been thought that by releasing for a short time a portion of the cars appropriated to the Government use it might effect the end desired. Of course I do not know the state of the Government supplies, and much must depend on that. But I beg leave again, in conclusion, earnestly to bespeak whatever aid can possibly and properly be rendered. The need, indeed, is urgent.

I remain, very truly, &c.,

TH. S. BOCOCK.

Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA,
April 12, 1864.

Maj. B. P. NOLAND,

Chief Commissary of Subsistence for Virginia, Richmond:

MAJOR: I beg leave to suggest to you, as the officer charged with the management of the system of exchange and barter for provisions, some considerations which I think may be found useful, and which may probably have occurred to your own mind. Whatever vigilance may be used by the military authorities, it will be found difficult to prevent the prohibited traffic in cotton, tobacco, &c., where the inducement to engage in it is so great. It has been reported to me that considerable quantities of tobacco have passed through Gordonsville consigned to persons residing within our lines, but who are so situated that they can easily take the tobacco beyond them. On Thursday last seventeen boxes reached Gordonsville en route to Liberty Mills, consigned to the postmaster at the latter place. A large quantity had been sent thither previously, and though the owners avowed that it was to be used or sold there, it was manifest that the supply exceeded any lawful demand in so small a place. It is also reported that tobacco is frequently sent to Madison Court-House in large quantities, the shipments being made from Richmond, Charlottesville, and Lynchburg. While there is no doubt of the illegal purpose of the owners, it is almost impossible to prove it, and the only provision that can be made to prevent the abuse with any hope of success is to require that no shipments of the prohibited articles shall be made by rail or otherwise from any point without a permit from proper authority, unless the destination of the article be such as to preclude the possibility of its being taken out of the lines. The permit should contain the names of the real owner, of the carrier, and of the place of destination, as well as of the route to be pursued, and the goods should be declared subject to seizure if found on a different route, in other hands than those of the parties named in the permit, or going toward a different destination. By this means it can be ascertained whether more of the articles are being taken to a particular place or by a particular person than is consistent with a lawful use of them, and there will be some restriction upon the trade. All the prohibited commodities found in transitu without a permit should be seized.

In this connection I would also call your attention to the difficulties that attend the lawful trade. As the great object is to obtain supplies and prevent the staples mentioned in the law from being exported except in exchange for them, it would seem that the strongest inducements should be held out to persons who wish to procure cotton, tobacco, &c., to bring in the supplies. This end can best be obtained by withholding the tobacco, &c., and the permit to take it out until the supplies shall be first delivered. It is manifest that a bond to perform the contract will not suffice. What we want is a strong inducement to the party contracting to exert all his efforts to get the supplies to us, and the chief inducement to make such efforts is taken away when he receives the commodities he desires with a permit to take them out. If he succeeds in getting them to the enemy's country, he sells them at a large profit, and then he will find it much easier and safer to pay his forfeited bonds than to incur the labor, hazard, and expense of bringing in the supplies in return.

If it be answered that the contractor cannot buy the provisions unless he be allowed to take out and sell the tobacco, &c., I think that it would be better not to employ him unless he has means adequate to perform his contracts. This is a precaution always insisted upon in awarding contracts of this kind; and if adequate assurance be given that upon the delivery of the supplies at a designated place the compensation in tobacco and cotton, &c., together with permission to remove them, will be forthcoming, the contract itself will be a basis of credit which will enable the contractor to raise the means required to purchase supplies. Indeed, I think that unless this course be pursued the result will be that, either from dishonest purposes or from actual inability to bring the provisions within our lines, which is practically as bad as the former, the system of barter will result in much of the staples of the country being taken out of it without obtaining anything in return but payment of the forfeited bonds. While this payment will prevent pecuniary loss to the Government, it effectually defeats the object of the system which it is desired to inaugurate. I would suggest that the safest plan, and one that can be carried out with least difficulty and liability to abuse, would be to offer the articles referred to—cotton and tobacco, &c.—with permission to remove them, to any person who will deliver provisions at a price to be agreed upon. A limit might be put upon the amount of provisions to be furnished in exchange by individuals to prevent too great a multiplication of permits. For instance, no exchange might be entered into with any individual for less than 500 pounds or any other quantity. Persons desiring to take these contracts would find means, either by purchase from our own citizens or by bringing the provisions from abroad, to obtain enough to exchange for cotton, tobacco, &c., and the Government would be relieved from the risk of transportation. I think it will be found if proper agents be sent to suitable localities with authority to contract to deliver the staple articles, with permits to those who will give provisions for them, much would be obtained from our own citizens that cannot now be reached by purchase or impressment. Those who sell on such terms can readily procure what they require for their own use or even additional supplies to continue the traffic. Larger numbers would become interested in bringing in supplies, they would come in smaller quantities to each man, and be less liable to seizure. At the same time it would encourage our people to produce more, as it would afford them a profitable market. I have deemed it proper to make these suggestions in order that the system may have as full a trial as possible and in the hope that it may afford us considerable relief.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE,
General.

OFFICE CHIEF COM. OF SUBSISTENCE FOR VIRGINIA,
Richmond, April 15, 1864.

Respectfully referred through the Commissary-General to the Honorable Secretary of War for his consideration, and with the suggestion that formal regulations in regard to overland commerce be adopted, or at least that all Confederate officers be charged with the duty of preventing (under the fourth section of the law) the unlawful transportation of the prohibited articles. Undoubtedly very large quantities of these articles are being now forwarded to the border by parties who have not even proposed to operate for the Government, and doubtless with the view of an illegal traffic. If the Government can keep the control of this trade, and thus make the demand for these necessary articles entirely tributary to army supplies, a very large amount of meat will undoubtedly be secured.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY:

A general order regulating or prohibiting the transfer of tobacco, &c., to points contiguous to the enemy's lines without permit had better be framed, had it not? If you concur, will you draft such a one as you deem appropriate and consistent with this law?

RICHMOND, April 12, 1864.

Maj. R. P. WALLER,

Quartermaster, Nassau, New Providence:

SIR: Inclosed is a list* of all the shipments of cotton made to Nassau since the commencement of your operations at that place, and on which Mr. Heyliger was authorized to draw for your benefit. Recently they have not been large, some of the cotton shipped on account of this department having gone direct to Liverpool. What they will be in future it is impossible to tell, as the recent legislation of Congress and the regulations announced by the War and Treasury Departments in execution thereof have yet to be tested. This and other uncertainties of a similar character have prevented this department giving you any definite response to your repeated inquiries respecting the stability of your position at Nassau and your prospect for funds. Nor is it practicable for me to say now how long the services of a purchasing agent may be required at Nassau or to what extent and in what manner the funds he may require will be provided. I can only state that as you are now there, and in your past transactions have made your purchases and shipments in a manner satisfactory to the department, you will be expected to remain as long as the presence of any officer may be deemed necessary at Nassau, and, moreover, that no effort will be spared to meet your expenditures. Nassau, it is true, was resorted to in the first instance to relieve the pressing demands of the winter now closed; but so many supplies have been attracted to that point, from which they can be promptly drawn and at prices but little in excess of European rates, that the prospect is it will continue to be availed of.

I have just written to Mr. Heyliger to see if he has ever received a report of sales of cotton from Fraser, Trenholm & Co. It has been drawn for at an average of £25 per bale, which appears low. I hope there may be a surplus available for you in the future. Your last report shows an indebtedness of several thousand pounds sterling. Still I must look to you to continue your purchases as best you can. It occurs to me that you can operate to advantage in this way: It is understood that vessels that bring in supplies under contract for the Government will be allowed to carry out cotton delivered in payment, dependent on the restrictions recently imposed. Such cotton has been expended heretofore at the rate of 10d per pound in exchange for supplies taken at prime cost, with 75 per cent. added for profit and risk and freight from Bermuda or Nassau at the rate of £25 per ton. To facilitate purchases you might assume the risk and take the supplies at a fair market price, and freight payable, as stated, at Wilmington. In every such transaction you must make a special report and furnish the party with a certificate showing the amount of cotton due in payment for each shipment. On presentation of that at this office I will provide for the delivery of the cotton at Wilmington.

You will suspend for the present the shipment, or rather purchase, of blankets, and forward as largely as you can shoes and woollen cloths, taking care to secure a good article of each. Shoes especially will be much needed during the spring and summer months. Do not, however, let any of your operations interfere with the provision you were instructed to make in favor of Mr. Sharp, as it is of the utmost importance that the machinery he goes for shall be received. After that give the preference to shoes, as the demand for them during the campaigning months will be heavy. You are authorized to purchase to any extent you may be able these necessary articles in advance of the receipt of cotton or funds. You may rely upon receiving one or the other at no distant day.

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

OFFICE CHIEF COMMISSARY OF SUBSISTENCE, FOURTH DISTRICT VIRGINIA,
Dublin, April 12, 1864.

Maj. B. P. NOLAND,

Chief Commissary of Subsistence for Virginia, Richmond:

MAJOR: Yours of the 7th reached me yesterday. In accordance with last paragraph I immediately telegraphed Captains Wade, Shields, and Venable to hold all breadstuffs and bacon now on hand, collect as rapidly as possible, and hold subject to my order, and to inform me at once the stock on hand. I inclose their replies, which please return me. In yours of April 1 you informed me that "Major King will be directed to turn over to you all subsistence under his control except at his depot, and confine himself hereafter to issuing to troops supplies received from your department, at the post commissaries."

Mr. Glendy, my principal cattle agent, has just returned from Monroe and reports that there are parties purchasing cattle there for Mr. Ludington, who purports to be the agent for Major King (and I have no doubt is), under the authority of Major-General Breckinridge. Mr. Glendy says there are some 425 head of cattle held over by Major King from last year, and some six men employed to attend to them, as he was informed, and these men are also engaged purchasing for Mr. Ludington, the agent of Major King. He has purchased about 400 poor cattle, agreeing to pay for them the maximum of the old schedule, in some cases paying 30 cents, paying no attention to the scale of prices. I have engaged the services of a valuable man in Monroe, as agent of that county. I hope he will not be interfered with. My agents can purchase the entire stock of the district in a few weeks if started out at unlimited prices. The question is, major, has Major King, with or without the authority of General Breckinridge or myself, the management of purchases of stock in this district? He cannot put it on the ground of an urgent necessity, because if such really did exist the stock now being purchased cannot be ready for slaughter before August—should not be before October. Some months ago a question was submitted to you from the Commissary-General which you referred to me, if King was paying too much for grazing. The question I believe was submitted by King himself. I saw then that he was but paying the way for this operation, which is but the renewal of last year's business, and then felt confident that Ludington, the contractor of last year, would again be engaged in the business. I have seen to-day a copy of the Richmond Enquirer, which contains the new schedule, showing an advance in price. These purchases were made under the schedule of $16, $18, and $20. I am very much in want of impressment powers for my agents. I am in hopes they will be here by to-day's mail. Every day's delay will be felt. The details have not yet reached me or my agents. Some of the last detail I am in hopes will not be renewed after June, if it is possible to secure competent men in their place.

I have seen General Breckinridge on the subject of Major King's purchasing through Ludington. He says he authorized it and has asked for the permission from Richmond. He desires, he says, to secure for his department provisions which will not be forwarded to other commands. He is simply looking out for his own troops by making purchases through his own commissary and agents. I inclose Captain Wade's requisition for funds, approved. I have none as yet, though I have received notice of a small amount, $50,000 being transferred to me.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH CLOYD,

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPT.,

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT,

SIR: It is determined to establish as soon as possible a thorough system in the collection of supplies that can be inaugurated at an early day, by which competition between the commissaries and agents of this Bureau and the army commissaries and all other Government agents will be entirely prevented. This system, briefly shadowed forth, is as follows:

A chief purchasing commissary of this Bureau will be selected for each State in the Confederacy, who will divide his State into districts (say some four or five, with a chief purchasing commissary or agent selected for each district, whose duties shall correspond in his district with the duties of the chief commissary in the State, these districts to be subdivided and sub-commissaries or agents selected for each subdivision) who will control and direct all purchases and business done by these district commissaries or agents and through them their sub-agents. The chief district commissaries or agents will be nominated by the chief State commissary to this Bureau for appointment, and their sub-agents or commissaries shall be nominated by the chief district commissaries or agents to the chief State commissary for appointment upon the approval of this Bureau. This latter clause, however, will apply literally only to the new commissaries or agents which it may be found necessary, in the working of this system, to appoint, because, as far as possible, commissaries or agents already in service must be continued. The commissaries and agents must be competent persons in every respect, thoroughly active and energetic and sufficiently numerous to obtain every pound of surplus supplies in the State. But it must not be forgotten that the fewest number capable of accomplishing the desired object is greatly preferable for many reasons. In all new appointments commissions will not be issued, but the appointment will be that of agents.

You have been selected as the chief commissary for the State of ———, and will proceed at once to inaugurate the above system gradually, but with as much energy and dispatch as is at all compatible with its harmonious accomplishment. You will at once forward a copy of this circular to all the commissaries and agents of this Bureau in your State, and obtain from them immediately all the information necessary to enable you properly to divide your State into districts, and make your nominations for chief district commissaries and agents, and report the same to this Bureau as soon as practicable. You will also require from the said commissaries and agents of this Bureau in your State (a list of which commissaries with their respective posts is herein inclosed—the address of the agents you can obtain from these commissaries) full reports of their present and contemplated operations, the prices they are paying, quantity, and description of the supplies being obtained, and the promise for the future. As soon as you can get this system inaugurated you will require from each chief district commissary or agent (who will require the same from their sub-commissaries and agents) a report of supplies on hand every ten days, with probable future accumulations and issues. These reports when received (and they must be required by you promptly, beginning on the last day of the earliest calendar month at which circumstances will permit you to require them) you will consolidate and send to Maj. S. B. French, commissary of subsistence, Richmond, Va., with the utmost dispatch. You will also report the places in your State deemed by you most suitable for main depots, or rather reservoirs, to and from which supplies may be best collected and distributed. It may be well also to have auxiliary depots to these reservoirs, both in the collection and distribution. These selections must be made with due regard both to safety of position and convenience in relation to transportation. It must ever be remembered that transportation should be husbanded in every manner possible, and therefore that under no circumstances which care, prudence, and foresight can provide against must supplies be twice transported over the same road, nor any article of subsistence transported in opposing directions. When this system is thoroughly organized and worked there will be no portion of the Confederacy which is not thoroughly drained, and therefore wherever our armies move all the supplies of our country will be tributary to their use; and then application will be made to prevent army commissaries from competing with this Bureau's commissaries or agents, and the chief commissary of each army directed to supply his wants by application to such chief State commissary of this Bureau as may be indicated by the Commissary-General, giving notice of requirements ahead of his actual wants and the points at which his supplies will be needed. And whenever the commissaries in one State or district need supplies which cannot be obtained in their State or district, they will draw them from the most convenient commissaries or agents from points in other States or districts. It may very frequently occur that some articles of subsistence ought not to be purchased in some States or districts because of very high prices. Whenever this occurs the same rule will prevail.

It is impossible to give in a circular all the detailed directions which might be desired; much must of necessity be left to your discretion and judgment, but enough has been said to let you understand the system that is to be inaugurated, and great reliance is placed upon your judgment and energy in establishing it at an early day.

Very respectfully,

L. B. NORTHROP,
Commissary-General of Subsistence, C. S. Army.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, April 13, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I beg leave again to call your attention most earnestly to the discrimination against this branch of the public service in the matter of furnishing funds. It has become my duty on several occasions before to refer to the effect of making so many requisitions for funds "special," and to the fact that the Quartermaster's Department was not furnished by the Treasury at all in the proportions contemplated by the appropriations made by Congress. As all public funds were turned in by disbursing officers previous to 1st of April, the warrants signed since that date afford a prompt illustration of this continued injustice. The appropriations to this department alone amount to a larger sum than all the other bureaus of the War Department combined, and it is but fair to ask that at least one-half of the warrants signed should be in its favor; otherwise Congress has misconceived its duties in so apportioning the appropriations. I am informed that the warrants signed at the Treasury for the bureaus of the War Department from the 1st to the 12th of April, inclusive, amount to $5,144,575, of which only the sum of $410,000 were for this department, though the sum of $13,460,000 had been requested. I am unable to perform the duties assigned me or to keep in operation the immense machinery of this department if this discrimination is persisted in. I respectfully ask that the Secretary of the Treasury be requested (when all amounts required cannot be furnished) to sign the warrants for each bureau within the month in proportion to the appropriations made by Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

[Indorsement.]

APRIL 15, 1864.

I will see the Secretary of the Treasury, and, besides, have an eye to the requisitions, with a view to more equal distribution.

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

RICHMOND, VA., April 13, 1864.

Governor T. H. WATTS,
Montgomery, Ala.:

Your dispatch of the 7th received and referred to the Secretary of War, who replies that the Department considers that companies may be at once formed of all men who have been enrolled under Général Orders, No. 33, and that to hasten enrollments rendezvous may be appointed at any time within the thirty days allowed by the law, but that the privilege of entering the reserve organizations will be lost by failure to enroll for thirty days after the publication of the order in each district.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES,
Richmond, April 13, 1864.

General J. E. JOHNSTON,
Dalton, Ga.:

GENERAL: I inclose you a copy of a communication from the Chief of Ordnance, to which I invite your special attention and beg that you will favor me at an early day with your views.

A serious difficulty not mentioned by this report will soon arise—indeed is now felt—in regard to our field artillery. The supply of horses on the present extended scale cannot possibly be kept up, and were the supply sufficient they cannot be foraged without endangering the subsistence of the troops.

Will you indicate what should, in your opinion, be the proportion of field artillery in an organized army?

I am, general, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
BRAXTON BRAGG,
General.

[Inclosure.]

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, ———, 1864.

General BRAXTON BRAGG:

GENERAL: I beg to call your attention to the very large proportion of artillery now in the armies in the field.

The number of pieces is as follow: General Lee's army (not including battalion of Washington Artillery at Petersburg), 197, of which about one-half are rifles, including eight 20-pounder Parrotts and one 2-pounder Whitworth; General Longstreet's corps, 27, of which fourteen are rifles, including two 20-pounder Parrotts; General Johnston's army, 123, of which about one-fifth are rifled pieces; General Polk's corps, 24, of which sixteen are Napoleon guns and three rifles.

I respectfully submit that a maximum be fixed for the artillery, not to exceed five pieces for each brigade of infantry.

Three pieces for every 1,000 men, for a full organization, is the largest allowance of modern equipment. It is possible, however, that as the organizations recede from their maximum of strength it no longer becomes a safe rule to apportion the artillery exactly by the strength present.

I propose, therefore, to apportion it by brigades or by regiments, and as our brigades are generally composed of five regiments and scarcely exceed 2,500 men now, and are more probably reduced to 1,500, five guns to a brigade would be an ample allowance. Of these one might be reserve.

The equipment of so much artillery overtaxes our means and necessarily renders the equipment of the whole less complete than it would be if reduced to moderate limits.

By the rule suggested, allowing twenty pieces to the division of cavalry, as at present (quite too much), the artillery of General Lee would be reduced to about 170, including Eshleman at Petersburg, instead of 213. Besides, an increase of thirty pieces has been asked and is preparing under the requisition of General Pendleton, approved by General Lee.

I earnestly invite your attention to the subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. GORGAS,
Colonel and Chief of Ordnance.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., April 13, 1864.

Lieut. Gen. L. POLK,
Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 31st ultimo,* and am pleased to hear that it is not your desire to interfere with the execution of the conscript law through the regular administration of the Bureau here, but that you seek only that the military police of your department shall be administered by yourself. To this, of course, no objection can be entertained. The Conscript Bureau may, indeed, give, as it has been directed to do, valuable aid in returning or notifying the presence of deserters and stragglers to the commanding general; but he certainly has the power and is at liberty to employ any portion of his command in the arrest of deserters and stragglers. No special organization for such purpose can or ought, however, to be formed by him which shall be composed of conscripts, or which will prevent the regular organization under the terms of the late law of the local reserve forces. When such reserves shall have been, as they are now being, enrolled and organized, companies of them, to such extent as may be necessary, are liable to be called out under the authority of the President, to be assigned to such duties.

It is the contemplation of the President to assign for each State some officer of rank, at least of brigadier-general, who shall be charged with the duty of organizing the local reserves and directing the calls for their services when needed. Such officer within the limits of your department will probably be placed by the President under your general direction, and through him the companies of local reserves can doubtless be commanded by you for police purposes.

* See Series I, Vol. XXXII, Part III, p. 723.

I do not see how otherwise such companies as you desire can be legally provided, as the class of exempts strictly will be entirely inadequate to afford material for new organizations. The law, as you will recollect, places in the military service all between the ages of seventeen and fifty. Generals for the organization of the reserves have not yet been appointed, but the subject is under the consideration of the President, and will doubtless receive his early action.

I am glad to learn that I misapprehended your meaning in supposing that you contemplated recruiting in the border country from stragglers and deserters. I concur with you fully in regard to the mischievous effects which would follow from such a course. Those mischiefs have been so vividly realized in the border counties of Virginia and Tennessee that Generals Lee and Johnston have urged earnestly that no authorities whatsoever for the recruitment of new organizations should be given, as it was almost impossible to prevent their being abused by the reception of those who had straggled or deserted. It was thought, too, that the mere hope of being able to join such organizations in process of formation tends to produce restlessness and discontent among the soldiers in the embodied armies. In deference to such opinion I have revoked all authorities heretofore granted, and am now issuing none.

The imperfect accounts which we have received from the border counties of North Alabama, Mississippi, and East Louisiana represent the evils and abuses supposed to flow from the allowance of such authorities as prevailing there to a great extent. So strong has been the impression of the President on this point that he has just requested Brigadier-General Ferguson to be sent to Mississippi and East Louisiana to organize and bring under more discipline the detached and loosely formed companies said to be in those districts. The presence and authority of that officer, acting under your command, will probably enable you to accomplish the purpose you have in view in those districts without the necessity of issuing new permits or forming additional companies. Should it be practicable to obtain such control over the disputed districts as will allow the regular enforcement of the conscript law, that course, I have no hesitation in saying, would be more satisfactory to the Department, as it would be alike more equitable and more beneficial to the service to secure the men liable to military service to the veteran rather than the new organizations. Still, if that be not practicable, I have such deference to your judgment and wishes as to sanction the formation of new companies in your department when the conscript law is not and cannot be enforced. I rely, however, on the exercise of this power with caution and due consideration for the avowed policy of the Department to prefer the regular enforcement of the conscript system.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

---

RICHMOND, April 13, 1864.

Maj. N. S. WALKER,
Agent, Saint George's, Bermuda:

SIR: There is a lot of machinery at Bermuda belonging to this department and intended for the manufacture of ambulances, &c., which, with the material accompanying it, it is of great importance to receive. A portion, too, of the cargo of the Princesse Royale, the shoes and cloths, are greatly needed. The pressure for blankets has ceased for the present. If arrangements cannot be made to ship the articles wanted at a very early day direct to Wilmington from Bermuda, I have to request that you will immediately forward the same to Nassau, from which point there is no difficulty in securing freight room. You can do the same with regard to any other supplies belonging to this department that may hereafter reach Bermuda, where they are likely to meet with unreasonable detention. I understand that there are fair facilities for reshipping to Nassau, and I presume the charges are moderate between that point and Bermuda.

Your duplicate accounts (vouchers withheld) forwarded by the City of Petersburg have been received. They show that over £5,600 has been drawn for by you against the funds of this department. Please write at an early day and explain the nature of some of the disbursements. But one lot of supplies, some 1,500 pair shoes, have been received through you from Bermuda. The draft in favor of Williamson was given at a time when this department had no funds abroad, and it was not intended that the Ordnance Bureau should be reimbursed in sterling. The Secretary of War, in fact, had directed the amount to be paid here. These items, with the freight charges on 65 B. C., are the only ones about which this department knows anything. The pay of signal officers at Bermuda is hardly chargeable to this department, especially as at that point next to nothing in the way of quartermaster's stores has been received. These explanations are, of course, only desired with a view to adjusting these expenditures as between the bureaus chargeable.

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

P. S.—Reshipments to Nassau will not, of course, be desirable at any time when the vessels engaged in the trade may be diverted to Bermuda, by reason of the establishment of quarantine as to such as come from Nassau.

RICHMOND, April 13, 1864.

COLIN J. McRAE,

Financial Agent Confederate States, Paris:

SIR: Yours of 25th December advising me that you had advanced £50,000 to Major Ferguson has been received. I am gratified to see from the contents of this letter, as also from one addressed to the Secretary of War, that you are fairly impressed with the importance of responding liberally to the wants of this branch of the service. Until recently it has drawn nothing from abroad, and its losses by capture have been so heavy during this winter that it still requires, I can assure you, all the aid that can be extended.

The demand for shoes will soon be greater than ever, when our armies resume active operations, and the limited quantity of wool in this region of country compels me to look abroad for material for clothing. The only relief that spring brings is in the item of blankets, and even these will have to be accumulated during the summer and fall for next winter's use. I regret, therefore, that Major Ferguson was disappointed in the receipt of £25,000, for which a draft was remitted, but at the same time I feel confident that you will continue to aid him, as you have done in the past, to the full extent of your power.

To meet the indebtedness of Major Waller at Nassau I was compelled, with the sanction of the Secretary of War, to appeal to you for assistance. The Commissary, Ordnance, and Mining and Niter Bureaus have now, and have had for some months past, 1,500 tons of freight awaiting shipment at Bermuda, so they would appear to need shipping facilities rather than funds to purchase supplies. The supplies of this department have been drawn through Nassau, where no delay has been encountered. There is nothing there awaiting shipment, but, on the contrary, an indebtedness of nearly £10,000 for stores long since forwarded.

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 42. } Richmond, April 14, 1864.

I. At the end of each month monthly inspection reports, in accordance with forms last furnished, will be forwarded to this office from the headquarters of the different Confederate States armies. These reports to embrace all troops, of all arms, serving with each army. The cover of all documents relating to inspection duties will be marked on the upper left-hand corner, "Inspecting Department."

II. To secure more full and complete information to this department, army inspectors will forward, with their own reports, those of corps, division, and brigade inspectors, indorsing the latter with such remarks as will indicate changes which have occurred since previous reports, or give a more clear and full idea of the condition of the Army and the relative efficiency of its different organizations and their commanders.

III. Thorough inspections, under arms, of all troops of the armies will be made by the inspectors of the different commands with which they are respectively serving, as follows: Tri-monthly of brigades, semi-monthly of divisions, and monthly of corps. Inspectors at army headquarters will inspect monthly so much of the army as their other duties will permit, stating in their reports the extent of such personal inspections. To avoid harassing the troops by too frequent inspections, the ranking inspectors will inspect, when practicable, at the same time with the subordinate inspectors and at the stated periods of their inspections. At all inspections the ranking inspector will be accompanied and assisted by his subordinates of the commands inspected—for example, the corps inspector by the inspectors of the division and of the brigade to be inspected.

IV. The requisite inspection blanks will be furnished from this office upon timely requisitions, the receipt of which will be acknowledged by army inspectors, who will look to their proper distribution.

V. The commander of each army will have a report of all inspectors serving with it forwarded to this office, giving their names in full, their rank, and the command with which they are serving.

VI. The following is substituted for paragraph V, General Orders, No. 35, current series, which is hereby revoked: Officers of the Conscriptio Bureau will send to the general commanding the army or department in which the commands captured last served such officers and men belonging to them as have themselves escaped capture. The general commanding will assign them temporarily to depleted organizations, or such other duty as he may direct.

VII. Paragraph II, General Orders, No. 86, 1863, is modified to this extent: The minimum number prescribed by law for a company of infantry is sixty-four privates; for a company of cavalry, sixty privates.

VIII. Soldiers over the age of forty-five years will be discharged from service in the Army at the expiration of their present term of enlistment. Those under eighteen years will also be discharged in like manner when the enlistment expires, unless they are at that time liable to conscription.

IX. Paragraph IV, General Orders, No. 34, and paragraph I, General Orders, No. 37, 1864, are thus modified: Medical examining boards will forward the original applications of officers (who desire to be retired under the act to provide an invalid corps) and their certificates to the general commanding the army or department to which the officers belong. The general commanding will forward them, with an indorsement of his opinion in each case, through the Surgeon-General to the Adjutant and Inspector General. Certificates of retirement of officers will be issued only from this office.

X. All authorities heretofore given to raise troops, or to recruit for any particular command, are hereby revoked.

XI. The ordnance depot at Savannah (heretofore regarded as a field depot, and under the command of the district commander), having assumed the proportions of an arsenal, will hereafter be designated as the "Savannah Arsenal," and, like other arsenals, will be subject to the supervision of the Chief of Ordnance, Richmond, to whom its commanding officer will report directly.

XII. Officers to whom soldiers on detached or detailed duty report will take possession of their descriptive lists, and, in accordance with instructions thereon given, will prepare and certify to the muster-rolls, upon which they receive the pay due them. Payments will be made such soldiers, when in the field, at the end of every two months; when at posts, at the end of each month. Upon these rolls annual settlements of clothing accounts may be made with soldiers on detailed duty at posts.

XIII. To prevent their detention on their way home, soldiers leaving the Army on furlough of indulgence will, instead of being furnished with descriptive lists, be paid at their commands to the close of the month preceding the dates of their furloughs, upon detached rolls, signed by their company commanders.

XIV. Sick or wounded men sent to hospitals will be paid as heretofore, upon hospital muster and pay rolls. Those who, on account of wounds or ill-health, are permitted to go to their homes may be paid upon descriptive lists by the nearest quartermaster or assistant quartermaster.

XV. When soldiers are ordered to rejoin their commands, officers with whom they have been on duty, surgeons in charge of hospitals of which they have been inmates, and quartermasters and assistant quartermasters paying those sick and wounded at home will (after carefully noting upon their descriptive lists payments made to them) return such soldiers their descriptive lists, to be delivered to their company commander, and will also transmit, through the general commanding the army to which they belong, duplicates of the same to the latter.

XVI. The following acts of Congress are published for the information of the Army:

AN ACT to provide compensation for officers who may heretofore have performed staff duty under orders of their superior officers.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That when any officer or private of any legally constituted military organization may have here- tofore, by order of his proper superior officer, performed any staff duty appropriate to such command, he shall be entitled to receive pay for the time he was so engaged in the discharge of such duties: Provided, That there was not then present fit for duty any officer duly appointed for the discharge of the same.

Approved February 11, 1864.

AN ACT to provide tobacco for the Army.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That there shall be furnished to every enlisted man in the service of the Confederate States one ration of tobacco, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish.

Approved February 17, 1864.

XVII. The Commissary Department will carry out the provisions of the above act in providing and issuing tobacco to enlisted men. The ration is fixed at three-quarters of a pound per month.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, April 14, 1864.

* * * * *

II. Col. W. H. Fowler being commissioned as superintendent of army records for the State of Alabama and as agent to adjust the claims of deceased soldiers from that State, commanding officers of the armies in which Alabama troops may be serving are requested to afford to him such facilities in the discharge of his duties (as set forth in the subjoined circular) as may not conflict with the interests of the service.

OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT OF ARMY RECORDS, STATE OF ALABAMA,
January 25, 1864.

THE OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS AND OTHERS INTERESTED HEREIN FROM THE STATE OF ALABAMA:

The Legislature of Alabama at its recent session instructed the Governor to appoint a superintendent of army records to ascertain the names, rank, organizations, and facts concerning troops from the State that have been or may hereafter be mustered into the service of the Confederate States, that the same may be compiled into an historical record, to be preserved in the archives of the State, for the benefit and satisfaction of the living, as a grateful tribute to the memory of the dead, and as a welcome presentation to our posterity, who, in freedom hereafter, will proudly hail this glorious roll of the patriot sons of Alabama.

I am engaged in this work; but the difficulties in my way are serious, owing to the delay in its commencement, the sad want of systematic records, the imperfect returns to the War Department, the loss of rolls, and the numerous changes and vicissitudes of organizations. The work is, however, eminently worthy to be attempted, and the purpose of the Legislature in ordering it is highly commendable. I therefore earnestly request all officers and soldiers from the State, the relatives and friends of those who have died or fallen in the field, and all parties interested herein to aid me promptly and vigorously in obtaining the information required.

It is very desirable that all commanding officers of companies, battalions, regiments, and batteries from Alabama shall forward to me forthwith complete lists from the beginning, in the nature of muster-rolls, of the men and officers of their respective commands, showing the name, rank, age, description, residence, place, date, and term of enlistment; when, where, and how service terminated; meritorious facts [acts] of individuals or organizations; alterations and changes in commands or officers; notes of such as have been wounded, captured, died from disease, or killed, and when and where; promotions, resignations, discharges, transfers, permanent desertions, and such succinct narrative of organization, service, marches, battles, incidents, &c., as may be essential for perfect record; and of organizations that have been merged into others or broken up from any cause. I will be glad to receive information from any source that will facilitate investigation.

I also request all commanders of companies to send me full descriptive lists of their dead, to aid me in the performance of other important duties with which I am charged in settling claims of deceased soldiers.

Surgeons and chaplains can assist me materially by furnishing such memoranda as they can procure of Alabama troops, deaths in hospitals, &c.

Names and facts sent to me by the relatives or intimate friends of deceased soldiers will be very valuable.

It is my intention to visit our various organizations personally; but this may be impossible in many instances, and will consume much time, so that I again urge commanders to assist me by the prompt preparation and remittance of the lists above described. Such record as is designed is due to our soldiers—will be serviceable to them, to their representatives, and to the State, and I confidently expect the cordial aid indicated above.

Let each Alabamian into whose hands this circular may fall consider himself as personally addressed, and set about immediately to forward the matter presented, and I also request every officer of all grades and branches of the service from our State to send me his address (autographic), rank, location, &c., for preservation, reference, and correspondence when necessary.

Address:

W. H. FOWLER,
Colonel, Richmond, Va.

III. Col. W. H. Fowler, agent for the State of Alabama for records, &c., will be allowed by commissaries of subsistence to purchase such rations as an officer of his grade in the field is entitled to. He will be afforded transportation to the various armies in the field in the discharge of his duties as State agent.

Col. L. B. NORTHROP,
Commissary-General, Richmond:

COLONEL: I have the honor to inform you that it is the desire of the President that the present arrangement of paying toll, in grain, to the mills for grinding our meal or flour in the Department of Henrico be discontinued immediately; and that the whole of the supplies received shall be devoted to the use of the troops.

This has become a military necessity and admits of no delay in its execution.

This note is addressed you as immediate information. An appropriate order as your authority will be issued to you from the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHMOND, VA., April 14, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to return inclosed letters to you of Mr. McRae, of 12th and 19th of February last.* They were referred to me by you for examination, and I beg to report as follows:

On 14th of September last Mr. McRae wrote that he had advanced for the War Department, out of the Erlanger loan, £544,976 5d., and requested that warrants to cover said advance be promptly forwarded to him.

It would seem that the above advance was for the various bureaus in these proportions:

Ordnance Department.....	167,044	17	7
Quartermaster's Department.....	156,190	6	1
Medical Department.....	23,662	5	11
Commissary Department.....	22,500	0	0
Quartermaster and Commissary (for Crenshaw, sterling).....	55,000	0	0
Transportation.....	120,578	10	10
Total.....	544,976	0	5

The last item includes transportation from England to the islands, purchase of stores, &c.

In accordance with Mr. McRae's request, on 30th of November last warrants were forwarded him by—

Ordnance Department for.....	100,000	0	0
Quartermaster's Department for.....	156,190	6	1
Quartermaster and Commissary jointly for.....	55,000	0	0
Total.....	311,190	6	1

And he was informed that the deficit of £233,785 14s. 4d. would be covered as soon as the appropriations of the bureaus on this side permitted.

Now, in addition to the £544,976 5d. which Mr. McRae had already advanced, it was understood that the War Department was still entitled to £262,500 out of the Erlanger loan. After consultation with the chiefs of bureaus you apportioned out this amount as follows:

Quartermaster's Department.....	£85,000
Ordnance Department.....	55,500
Commissary Department.....	40,000
Medical Department.....	30,000
Niter and Mining Department.....	40,000
Engineer Department.....	12,000
Total.....	262,500

From Mr. McRae's letter and statements it appears that all the bureaus except the Engineer have forwarded warrants for the amounts to which they were entitled under the above apportionment. The warrants of the Ordnance, Medical, and Niter Bureaus were all in favor of Major Huse, and seem to have been used by Mr. McRae to cover the advance under which he still was to ———.

This use of these warrants reduces the deficit of £233,785 14s. 4d. to £108,285 14s. 4d. Since letter of 14th of September last Mr. McRae appears further to have furnished the War Department with £52,820 4s. 1d., and to have received from it in the shape of warrants and bonds £52,476 15s. (see statement covered by his letter of 19th of February), so that he is at present under actual advance to it of £108,629 3s. 5d.

Major Ferguson still has a claim of £35,000 on Mr. McRae, as £50,000 only have yet been paid him on his warrant for £85,000.

Mr. W. G. Crenshaw holds the Commissary warrant for £40,000, which Mr. McRae cannot honor.

If the Engineer Bureau has drawn for its £12,000 the warrant had not appeared at date of Mr. McRae's letter and statement.

Major Waller, of Quartermaster's Department, has drawn for £20,000, and the drafts have been accepted by Mr. McRae.

Major Huse informs Mr. McRae that he owes £129,593 12s. 4d.

The sum total of all this is that Mr. McRae is under advance to the War Department £128,629 3s. 5d., including the accepted drafts, and that the agents of the various bureaus hold warrants on him for £89,000, including the £12,000 of Engineer Bureau, which I presume has been drawn for.

These are the facts of the account between the War Department and Mr. McRae. The accounts cannot be thoroughly adjusted until it is definitely ascertained how much the War Department is to get out of the Erlanger loan. A second question will then arise, the apportionment of this amount between the various bureaus and the settlement of accounts between them. The funds of the one have, it would seem, been used to meet the liabilities of the other.

Assuming that the share of the War Department out of the Erlanger loan is £807,476 5d., the accounts between the various bureaus may be adjusted as follows:

	£	s.	d.
The Ordnance Department to draw for .....	187,623	8	5
The Medical Department to draw for .....	23,662	5	11
Commissary Department (now Ordnance Department) .....	22,500	0	0
Total .....	233,785	14	4

This will exactly cover the deficit (see eighth line, second page) uncovered by warrants out of original advance of £544,976 5d. and leave the £262,500 additional to be used by the various bureaus according to apportionment.

As Major Waller, of Quartermaster's Department, has drawn for £20,000 more than justified by the apportionment made here, it becomes a question whether this amount should not be credited Mr. McRae on the £80,000 warrant held by Major Ferguson, and on which £50,000 have already been credited.

Your obedient servant, very respectfully,

THOS. L. BAYNE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, &c.

The above sum of £22,500 has been reimbursed to the Ordnance Department here, and therefore should be covered by the draft of that Bureau. The above arrangement charges the Ordnance Department with the whole $120,578 10s. 10d. for transportation.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Tallahassee, April 14, 1864.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Governor of Georgia:

DEAR SIR: I received from you by telegraph the following communication:

MILLEDGEVILLE, GA., April 13, 1864.

The Confederate Government refuses to permit the States to export their own products upon their own ships, unless they will allow that Government to occupy half the room of the vessel. Will you unite with me and other Governors in asking Congress when it assembles to remove the restriction?

I promised by telegraph a reply by letter. Most respectfully I decline to unite with you and other Governors in asking Congress to legislate upon the subject. I am not sensible of the political propriety of the Governor of a State, or the Governors of States, asking Congress to legislate upon that or any other subject. My judgment does not approve of any direct attempt by persuasion or otherwise to be made by the Governor of a State, or the Governors of States, to influence the legislation of Congress. Whenever the acts of Congress shall be considered injurious to any one of the States, or Congress shall fail to legislate wisely upon subjects intrusted by the Constitution of the Confederate States to its legislation, exclusive of the right of legislation by the States severally, joint resolutions by the General Assembly, approved by the Governor of one State (or more States), instructing the Senators and Representatives of the State in Congress, seem to me to be more consistent with the sovereignty and dignity of the State; more probable to command respect, and better adapted to the government of the State as well as the Government of the Confederate States.

It is true that Congress is expected to be in session prior to the General Assembly of this State, or of Georgia, but is it not prudent to defer any anticipated benefit from the legislation which you would suggest, rather than unauthorized by any precedent in a matter of doubtful political propriety to attempt, as you propose, to influence the legislation of Congress? Permit me in candor to say, and most respectfully, that I am not convinced of the necessity of any further legislation of Congress upon the subject.

The act of Congress, approved February 6, 1864, and the regulations to carry it into effect, approved March 5, by the Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary of War, and the President of the Confederate States, impose no restrictions "upon the Confederate States, or any one of them, from exporting any of the articles enumerated in the act on their own account, nor is a bond required of the State in any case."

I apprehend that if each of the States should undertake to supply the wants of their citizens respectively, whether in military service or at home, the result would be alike disastrous to the Confederate States and the several States.

The Government of the Confederate States has better recognized advantages and superior facilities to provide for the armies in service than any one of the States, and to supply the wants of citizens not connected with the Army, if their necessities can only be supplied by traffic with the citizens of foreign nations, it is better to rely upon individual enterprise than upon the respective State authorities.

Might not attempt on the part of the States, separately, to relieve the necessities of the armies and citizens by trade with citizens of foreign nations destroy the confidence and respect which those nations entertain for the ability of the Confederate States as belligerents under a government of their own choice; embarrass Congress under the obligations imposed by the Constitution "to provide for the common defense and carry on the Government of the Confederate States;" cause our armies and citizens to suffer, and endanger the stability of the Confederate Government, if not entirely destroy it, by a separation of the States?

The safety of the people and preservation of their rights under the Government of free, sovereign, and independent States, confederated for mutual protection, demand the utmost confidence and generous support of the State governments to the maintenance of the Confederate Government in the execution of sacred trusts which have been confided to it. It is best, therefore, where it can be honorably done, to avoid all conflicts and competition between the State and Confederate authorities for political power, or commercial privileges, at all events during the existing war. When the independence of the Confederate States shall have been achieved and recognized by other powers, and the din of war shall have ceased, the rights of the States and the constitutional powers of the Confederate Government will be adjusted by an intelligent, brave, and free people, to secure the enjoyment of civil liberty to themselves and their posterity.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida.

RICHMOND, VA., April 14, 1864.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER,

Lloyds Post-Office, Essex County, Va.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have your note of the 11th with its inclosures.* I have not been unmindful of the necessity for prompt action in the matter to which you refer, and have made attempts to engage for the service in Canada several gentlemen deemed competent, but they have declined for various reasons. The subject is too delicate to permit my entering into details until I have the pleasure of seeing you. I confine myself to saying that two persons specially qualified are now on their way here from the south, and I have reason to hope they will depart on the duty intrusted to them in a few days. One of them, the general agent, is well known to you. I think our friend, whose letter you inclosed, ought not to expect any further action in his favor at present. You are aware that the business in which he is now engaged was not suggested by me, but was devised by himself as offering a provision which he represented as perfectly satisfactory. I understood that he would rely on his success for remuneration, and was so confident of the result as to declare distinctly that if his expenses were paid he would ask nothing more. A considerable sum has been spent in affording him the opportunity, and he now seems not to have proceeded beyond Halifax before indicating a doubt of success. I cannot appoint a consul there, as he could not get an exequatur, or commercial agent, as none is required; and do not see that anything further can now be done for him, although quite disposed to render him any proper service, as well as anxious to oblige you.

* Not found.

I had previously heard of our soldiers who had sought refuge in Canada, after escaping from captivity, and have made provisions to aid their return to the Confederate States. Will you not be here before the meeting of Congress?

As ever, very truly, your friend,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Persons detailed for bureau service in accordance with special instructions from the War Department should not be disturbed by the officers of conscription. The orders for the reduction of the details are addressed to the chiefs of the bureaus, and the reductions are to be made by them and under their directions. It is only when the details are terminated that the jurisdiction of this Bureau attaches to such persons so as to authorize their removal. Upon any such case coming to the knowledge of enrolling officers they should report the fact for action by the War Department, giving in full all the circumstances of the case that can be collected.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
 No. 43. } Richmond, April 16, 1864.

I. By the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to impose regulations upon the foreign commerce of the Confederate States to provide for the common defense," approved 17th of February, 1864, the exportation of cotton, tobacco, military and naval stores, sugar, molasses, and rice from the Confederate States, except under such uniform regulations as might be made by the President, was prohibited; and the President was authorized to employ any portion of the military and naval forces of the Confederacy in order to prevent the departure of any vessels or vehicles that might be employed in carrying on a commerce in these articles contrary to law.

II. The commanding generals of departments and districts will issue orders and instructions to their officers that whenever it shall reasonably appear that any vessel or vehicle has been laden, in whole or in part, with any of the said articles for exportation or conveyance beyond the limits of the Confederacy, or to any place within the Confederacy not under the control of their civil or military authorities, and whenever there is reason to believe that any of the articles aforesaid have been so laden, or have been collected at any place of deposit with a view to exportation or conveyance beyond the limits or lines aforesaid, to seize and detain the same, with the vehicles, teams, and slaves employed, that investigation may be had according to the conditions of the act aforesaid and these orders, unless the owner or his agent or bailee has a permit from a collector of the revenue, or from an officer of this Department who may be authorized to grant such licenses.

III. The conditions upon which the trade by sea or overland to Mexico can be carried on have been determined by the regulations of the President, and any exportation or attempt to export any of the articles aforesaid contrary to those regulations will authorize the detention of the vessel or other instruments of transport.

IV. When a deposit of the prohibited articles is made at a point from which easy access to the lines of the enemy can be obtained, or are on a vehicle apparently on the way to their lines, or in the vicinity thereof, or when the owner is not a permanent resident of the place where the articles are found and from which they can easily be transported beyond the lines, or is a suspicious person, detention of the articles and vehicles for inquiry will be made.

V. All vehicles, animals, slaves, or other means of transportation, and all cotton or other articles that may be seized, whether by the officers of the revenue or by military authorities, for any violation of law or of these regulations, shall be, without any waste, spoliation, impressment, or injury of any kind, forthwith conveyed and delivered to the nearest marshal or deputy marshal of the Confederate States, and a detailed receipt taken from him, setting forth a full description of the property seized and delivered to him for safe custody. And it shall be the duty of said marshal or deputy marshal to keep the property so surrendered in safe custody until the further order of the judge or a commissioner of a district court of the Confederate States having jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and the said marshal or deputy marshal shall forthwith, upon the receipt by him of the property seized, give information to the collector of the district, or to the district attorney, or to both if practicable, of all the facts in relation to the seizure of the property and its delivery to him for safe-keeping.

VI. No military authority shall presume, under any circumstances, to seize property while being carried under the provisions of the law and of these regulations, for any other cause than a violation of said provisions; nor, in case of seizure, to dispose of the property seized in any other manner than that prescribed in the foregoing regulation. But in case where there is great risk of the property falling into the hands of the enemy, it shall be competent for the proper military authorities to require the licensed carrier to suspend his trip till the danger be passed, or to pursue a different route from that originally designated, or even, in cases of imminent danger, to abandon the trip.

VII. Information will be given from time to time from this Department to the commanding generals of the conditions on which transportation by land be made.

By order:

S. COOPER,

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, April 16, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: Permit me to express the hope that you will suspend, for the present at least, the enrollment and conscription of the State reserves in North Carolina from seventeen to eighteen and from forty-five to fifty years. Their enrollment now, with the present prospect of their being called to the field from their crops, causes the most general consternation and gloom. I have no hesitation in assuring you that the partial abstraction even of these men from their crops at any time between this and August would be followed by the most distressing consequences.

In addition to these considerations I beg leave to remind you that the authorities of this State would be left powerless, without the shadow of a militia organization to enforce obedience to law or respect. Having no second-class militia, as most of the States have, I presume it cannot be the intention of the Confederate Government to reduce a sovereign State to this dangerous and humiliating condition. Such a course would be utterly at war with the genius of our new Government and repugnant to all the professions of the Administration.

Our Legislature will convene again in the latter part of May, when I have no doubt steps will be taken to provide such a militia force as the exhaustion of the country will allow. Till that time I insist that you will leave the present organization untouched. In the meantime the Home Guards, now thoroughly organized and pretty well officered, are entirely at your service in case of emergency.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. B. VANCE.

HDQRS. STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,
 ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Macon, December 24, 1863.

Capt. T. C. Ashcraft is hereby authorized (provided the Confederate authorities will grant him a leave of absence for that purpose) to raise a regiment of cavalry for the State service, to serve for two years or the war. The regiment will consist of ten companies, and each company will consist of not less than sixty-four men, exclusive of officers and non-commissioned officers. The company officers will be elected by the men, and hold their offices during the pleasure of the Governor. The field officers will be elected by the regiment, or nominated by the company officers and appointed by the Governor, as may be hereafter ordered.

By order of Charles Clark, Governor and commander-in-chief :

W. H. MCCARDLE,
Colonel and Adjutant-General.

GENERAL ORDERS, }

No. 7. }

HDQRS. STATE OF MISSISSIPPI,
 ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

I. As many mounted volunteers (not liable to conscription in the Confederate service) as may offer will be received and mustered into the State service, to serve during the war, unless sooner discharged by the Governor. All able-bodied men between the ages of sixteen and sixty years will be accepted. They will be received by companies. Full companies will consist of not less than seventy-seven men, officers included. Each company will have one captain and three lieutenants, to be elected by the men.

II. The companies will be organized into battalions and regiments, as may be hereafter ordered. Each regiment will have one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, and one major, to be appointed by the Governor upon the recommendation of the company officers. Battalions of not less than five companies will be entitled to one major, and those of six or more companies to one lieutenant-colonel, and one major should the latter be deemed necessary; these officers to be appointed in the same manner as the field officers of regiments. Regiments, battalions, and companies will be subject to reorganization or consolidation.

III. All commissions will be held during the pleasure of the Governor, and will be revoked by him when he deems that the interest of the service requires it. Vacancies will be filled by promotion, appointment, or election, as the Governor may in each case determine.

IV. When full companies cannot be conveniently formed a less number will be received as follows: Twenty or more men, with one lieutenant, one sergeant, and one corporal; forty men or more, with two lieutenants, two sergeants, and two corporals. These fractions will be combined into companies as may be hereafter ordered, and until such combination be made the lieutenants will hold the rank of junior second where the fraction has but one, and of second and junior second lieutenants where there are two.

V. All men hereafter mustered into the State service will be allowed to remain at home until ordered to active duty, and when so ordered they will be entitled to receive a bounty of $50 (having previously been inspected), and thereafter they will receive the same pay and allowances as the like troops in the Confederate service.

VI. The officers and men will furnish their own horses, which in all cases will be appraised and regularly mustered. The same compensation for the use and risk of horses and pay for them when killed will be made as is allowed in the Confederate armies.

VII. All pay and allowances to officers and men will cease while they are absent from duty, whether with or without leave, unless on leave upon a surgeon's certificate of absolute disability.

VIII. The power to remove all officers is retained by the Governor to enable him to hold them to a rigid accountability for the order, discipline, and good conduct of their men.

IX. The Regulations for the Army and the Rules and Articles of War established by the Confederate Government have been adopted by the Legislature of Mississippi for the government of the State forces. They will be rigidly enforced against all delinquents.

X. All companies accepted and mustered into service will, until ordered to the field, be assembled at least once a week for company drill.

XI. The Confederate Government has agreed to furnish all the arms required, and they will be placed in the hands of the troops as rapidly as they can be assembled.

XII. From the number of companies already offered it is believed that a sufficient number of volunteers will be raised to aid the Confederate Government in effectually protecting the State, and thus obviate the necessity of a draft from the militia.

XIII. Any gentleman desiring to enter the State service is authorized to raise a company, under the restrictions and in compliance with the terms of this order.

By order of Charles Clark, Governor and commander-in-chief:

XXXVI. Joseph Jackson, jr., having been commissioned by the Governor of Virginia as "recorder of Virginia forces" serving during the existing war, commanding officers of armies in which Virginia troops may be serving are requested to afford to him such facilities in the discharge of his duties as may not conflict with the interests of the service.

XXXVII. Joseph Jackson, jr., "recorder of Virginia forces," will be allowed by commissaries of subsistence to purchase such rations as a colonel, Provisional Army, C. S., in the field is entitled to. He will be afforded transportation to the various armies in the field in the discharge of his duties as recorder, &c.

XXXVIII. William B. Johnston, having been appointed by the General Assembly of South Carolina as agent for the collection and record, for deposit in the State archives, of the names of the gallant sons of South Carolina who have fallen in their country's defense, from whatever cause, commanding officers of armies in which South Carolina troops may be serving are requested to afford to him such facilities in the discharge of his duties as may not conflict with the interests of the service.

XXXIX. William B. Johnston, State agent of South Carolina for record of deceased soldiers, will be allowed by commissaries of subsistence to purchase such rations as a colonel, Provisional Army, C. GENERAL: In accordance with directions from the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, I have the honor to inform you that the regiments and battalions on the inclosed list herewith returned, with the exceptions of the First, Second, and Twenty-third Battalions, formed the late Georgia State Guard, and were mustered out of service on or about the 4th day of February, 1864, their term of enlistment having expired. The First and Second Battalions are accounted for on the list. The Twenty-third is composed of the employés at the Athens Armory, and has never formed a part of my command. Brig. Gens. A. Iverson and H. R. Jackson served with me and reported through me to the Department on March 3, 1864, as my letter to you of that date will show. General Iverson has since been assigned to the command of a brigade of cavalry in the Army of Tennessee, and General Jackson was assigned to duty with my present command on April 6, 1864, by orders from your office.

In case such proof is given the parties will be forthwith reported to this Bureau, with descriptive lists, and notified that they will be expected to report in person either to Major-General Elzey, at Staunton, or Col. Bradley T. Johnson, at Hanover Junction, Va., for incor-

General BRAXTON BRAGG,

GENERAL: It has been ordered that the supplies of Georgia be forwarded to the Army of Virginia and that the Army of Tennessee be sustained from Alabama. The corn crop of the eastern section of this State was limited and will not afford a supply; hence the necessity of depending upon the middle and western portions. The only outlet for the removal of stores from Central Alabama is the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, which has not capacity for the requirements of the Government. Its gauge is narrower than that of the other roads, and it is now deemed impracticable to increase its rolling-stock.

I would respectfully call your attention to the completion of the railroad from Talladega, Ala., to Rome, Ga., a distance of fifty-three miles, the track for which, I am informed, is graded through. This would complete the line to the Alabama and Tombigbee Rivers, and the rich land of all that portion of the State. The great pressure upon this, the only available, line would be relieved, and the most productive section now within our reach brought in easy communication.

I have understood the value of this improvement has been before represented, and pressing necessity alone induces me to ask that consideration which the importance of supply demands.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

The PRESIDENT:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the letter of General Bragg submitting to me by your direction an inquiry as to the legal status of certain general officers, to wit:

First. Those appointed under sixth section of the act "to provide for the public defense," approved 6th March, 1861, and the amendatory acts of 18th September and 6th October, 1862.

In relation to this class it is stated "some have been left out of command by the great reduction of the rank and file, rendering a consolidation of brigades and divisions necessary; some by the breaking up and dispersion of their commands, as in the cases of the garrisons of New Orleans and Vicksburg; some have left their commands from sickness, wounds, &c., and prolonged absence has rendered it necessary to fill their places."

Second. Lieutenant-generals, who may have been relieved of their commands by various casualties, as in the case of Lieutenant-General Pemberton at Vicksburg. His command, as exchanged, has been assigned to other corps. So, also, of Lieutenant-General Holmes, first relieved from duty in Arkansas, who reports here for assignment.

The acts authorizing the appointment of brigadier and major generals in the Provisional Army are the following:

Act of 6th March, 1861, to provide for the public defense, section 6:

That the President is hereby authorized to organize companies so tendering their services into battalions or squadrons, battalions or squadrons into regiments, regiments into brigades, and brigades into divisions, whenever in his judgment such organization may be expedient; and whenever brigades and divisions shall be organized, the President shall appoint the commanding officers for such brigades and divisions, subject to the confirmation of Congress, who shall hold their offices only while such brigades and divisions are in service.

By the acts of 8th May, 1861, "to raise an additional military force to serve during the war," and 11th May, 1861, "to make further provision for the public defense," the troops therein authorized to be received were directed to be organized according to the provisions of the foregoing act of 6th March, 1861.

Act of 13th October, 1862, "to increase and regulate the appointment of general officers in the Provisional Army:"

That the President be, and is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint twenty general officers in the Provisional Army, and to assign them to such appropriate duties as he may deem expedient.

It will be more convenient to consider the case of major and brigadier generals separately from that of lieutenant-generals. They may be divided into two classes: First, major and brigadier generals appointed under the acts of 6th March, 1861, and 8th and 11th May, 1861. These are all governed by the sixth section of act 6th March, 1861, above cited.

The intention seems too plain for doubt. It was to prevent the accommodation [accumulation] of supernumerary generals, which would cheapen the honor of promotion and be a useless burden upon the Treasury. The President is not authorized to appoint major and brigadier generals at his discretion. No such appointment can be made unless there is an organized brigade or division, to the command of which the appointee is to be assigned, and by the express words of the act, whenever the brigades or divisions go out of service the generals are no longer to hold their offices. The office depends upon the organization; is lawful only when that is complete; continues only while it exists, and expires with it, unless there be some other organized brigade or division to the command of which the officer may be and is assigned. It was not the intent of the act so to blend together the organization and the office that neither could exist apart from the other. Its chief purpose, as has been said, was to prevent the Army from being burdened with supernumerary and useless officers. Whenever, therefore, an officer has been duly appointed to an organized brigade or division, it is within the scope and policy of the act that the President may assign him to the command of any other organized brigade or division. So, when the organization of a brigade or division is destroyed, the President may assign the general who commanded it to any other vacant brigade or division, and is not compelled to make a new appointment for this last command. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the major and brigadier generals appointed under these acts, whose commands have lost their organization by consolidation or by the casualties of war, and who cannot be assigned to the command of some other organized brigade or division, have lost their commissions.

As to the other class—those whose long absence, from sickness, wounds, &c., has rendered it necessary to fill their places, the organization of their commands remaining unchanged—it is understood that one of the main objects in passing the act of 13th October, 1862, was to furnish the President with the means of filling their places temporarily, so that they might not lose their grade by having become disabled in the public service. And it is as consistent with the policy of the law as it is with justice and humanity that such absent officers should not lose their commissions in cases where other officers appointed under the act of 13th October, 1862, have been assigned to their commands; and they may be restored to their commands upon returning to duty.

This class may present another condition. Such officer upon reporting for duty may be unfitted by his wounds for commanding a brigade or division in the field, but may be capable of discharging other duties appropriate to his grade. The President may appoint him under the act of 13th October, 1862, provided the whole twenty have not already been appointed. But can he under that act be continued in his grade under his old commission and with his old date? I think not. The act gives the President an authority which he did not before possess. It empowers him, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint twenty general officers," &c. It contemplates future action by the President and Senate, and not a mere passive confirmation of something which has been done before. Some of these officers were appointed under the Provisional Government. It cannot be contended that their former confirmation by the Provisional Congress would fulfill the condition of the advice and consent of the Senate, required by the act. If so, the mere will of the President to let them remain in their grade would amount to an appointment by him without the consent of the Senate, which is against the express words of the act. I think that an act which authorizes the appointment of an officer cannot be construed so as to continue an appointment already made under a former act passed diverso intuitu, more especially when such a construction would necessarily give a rank which antedates the passage of the law.

Second. Major and brigadier generals, appointed under the act of 13th October, 1862. This act is general in its terms. It authorizes an appointment, not for any particular command or organization, but for general duty in the Provisional Army, according to the assignment of the President; and it contains no limitation of their terms of office. I am of the opinion that the generals appointed under this act hold their commissions during the war.

The acts authorizing the appointment of lieutenant-generals in the Provisional Army are the following:

Act of 18th September, 1862, "to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the public defense:'"

That the sixth section of the act to provide for the public defense, approved on the 6th March, 1861, be amended by adding, after the words "brigades into divisions," the words "and divisions into army corps," and each army corps shall be commanded by a lieutenant-general, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive the pay of a brigadier-general.

Act of 6th October, 1862, "to provide for the organization of army corps," which is substantially the same with the one last cited, and seems to have been passed by an oversight, as it contains no provision not in the former act, and effects its purpose in precisely the same way.

Act of 13th October, 1862, authorizing the appointment of twenty general officers, above mentioned.

Act of 17th of February, 1864, relating to the appointment of a general and lieutenant-generals, section 2:

That the President may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint lieutenant-generals in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States, when in his discretion it shall be deemed necessary for the command of any one of the military departments.

Section 3:

That the officers appointed under the provisions of this act shall continue to hold the rank herein provided so long as they shall efficiently discharge the duties in command of said several departments, and no longer, but will resume thereafter their former rank in the service.

The lieutenant-generals may be divided into three classes:

First. Those appointed under the acts 18th September and 6th October, 1862. These acts are amendatory of the act of 6th March, 1861, and are to be understood as if their provisions were inserted in the body of that act. Their effect is to enlarge the organization of the Provisional Army and to create a higher grade of general officers. But the policy of the former act is not changed, and the officers of this higher grade are subject to all of its provisions. Lieutenant-generals, therefore, appointed under these acts hold office only while in command of an organized corps. Those whose commands had lost their organization, and those relieved of their command while the organization of their corps remains unchanged, may be assigned to any other organized corps; but if there be no such corps to which they can be assigned they lose their commissions.

Second. Lieutenant-generals appointed under the act of 13th October, 1863, authorizing the appointment of twenty general officers, for the reasons assigned in relation to brigadier and major generals, hold their commissions during the war.

Third. As none of the cases presented have arisen under the act of 17th February, 1864, the construction of that act is not called for now, and it would not be proper to express an opinion.

Aide-de-Camp:

COLONEL: The views expressed in the draft of a message to the Senate, returning with objections the "staff bill" of last session, occur to me as sound, and some of them so important as to have precluded the approval of the bill in the shape passed.

Our staff requires great modification and admits of much improvement. Its greatest wants, however, can only be supplied by time, experience in service, and high military education. No increase in rank or number can cure, though it may palliate, the radical defects of our present imperfect organization.

The great error of the bill was in making the staff almost entirely personal—the mere creation of the general. Our present inefficiency is due almost entirely to this cause. A system of favoritism and nepotism has been the natural result, and inefficiency its consequence.

The staff, except the personal aides of the general, should be considered as a component part of the command and remain with it without reference to change of commanders.

The staff corps should be so organized as to allow the assignment by the War Department of the following officers to armies and their component parts, and the President should have power to increase these corps, so as to allow special assignments to detached commands, large geographical departments, and fixed posts:

Army, two or more corps: Chief of staff, with rank of brigadier; assistant adjutant-general, with rank of colonel, and two assistants; inspector, with rank of colonel, and two assistants; quartermaster, with rank of colonel, and one major; commissary, with rank of lieutenant-colonel, and one captain; medical, with rank of surgeon, with pay of lieutenant-colonel, and one with pay of major; ordnance, with rank of colonel, and one major. Corps: Adjutant-general, lieutenant-colonel, and one major; inspector, lieutenant-colonel, and one major; quartermaster, one lieutenant-colonel; commissary, one major; ordnance, one major; medical, one surgeon. Division: Adjutant-general, one major; inspector, one major; quartermaster, one major; commissary, one captain; ordnance, one captain; medical, one surgeon. Brigade: Adjutant-general, one captain; quartermaster and commissary, one captain; medical, one surgeon.

The following, it seems to me, would be ample for the personal staff of the several grades of general officers: Aides-de-camp, brigadier, one first lieutenant; major-general, one captain; lieutenant-general, one major and one captain; general, one lieutenant-colonel, one major, and one captain, and when commanding one or more armies, one military secretary, with rank of colonel.

I trust now, however, that arrangements have been made by which the conscript act and provost duty may be effectively carried out, as suggested in your letter, by the employment of reserves instead of able-bodied men liable to military duty. It would seem that where these reserves are composed of reliable citizens, and a resort to military force is requisite, either in enforcing the conscript act or for the preservation of the community from evils of other sorts, that those acquainted with the localities and who cannot go to the field for active duty are the proper agency to be used. GENERAL: I respectfully suggest to the consideration of the War Department the establishment here of a military school for the education of young officers. There are many young gentlemen serving as privates in the ranks who would derive much benefit and be enabled to render better service if the means of education were afforded them. Mobile seems to me to be the best place in the southwest for the establishment of military schools, and at this time there are several officers on duty here, graduates of military colleges and men of good ability and attainments, who will gladly aid in organizing a good system of military education. I have requested Colonels Burnet, Beltzhoover, Sheliha, Brown, and Quattlebaum, and Major Trueheart to submit to me a project for military education, which, if desired, I will transmit to the War Department for the consideration of His Excellency the President.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,

Richmond, April 26, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

SIR: The papers transmitted by you in the case of A. C. Myers present the following facts:

On the 15th of April, 1861, A. C. Myers was appointed lieutenant-colonel in the Quartermaster's Department, and after that date he is styled Acting Quartermaster-General in the correspondence of the War Department.

On the 15th of February, 1862, he was nominated to the Provisional Congress in the following words: "A. C. Myers, of South Carolina, Quartermaster-General, to be colonel, to take rank from the date of his confirmation," and the nomination was confirmed the same day. On the 27th of January, 1864, Brig. Gen. A. R. Lawton was nominated to the Senate to be Quartermaster-General, "to rank as brigadier-general from April 13, 1861, the date of his confirmation to that grade by the Provisional Congress."

On the 17th of February, 1864, the Senate passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate advise and consent to the appointment of A. R. Lawton to be Quartermaster-General, to take rank from the date of confirmation.

The several acts of Congress under which these appointments were made are the following:

Act of 26th of February, 1861, for the establishment and organization of a general staff, section 3:

That the Quartermaster-General's Department shall consist of one Quartermaster-General with the rank of colonel, six quartermasters with the rank of major; and as many assistant quartermasters as may from time to time be required by the service may be detailed by the War Department from the subalterns of the line.

Same act, section 6:

That the officers of the Adjutant-General's, Quartermaster-General's, and Commissary-General's Departments, though eligible to command, according to the rank they hold in the Army of the Confederate States of America, shall not assume command of troops unless put on duty under orders which specially so direct by authority of the President.

Amendatory act of 14th of March, 1861, section 3:

That the Quartermaster-General's Department shall consist of one Quartermaster-General with the rank of colonel, one assistant quartermaster-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, four assistant quartermasters with the rank of major, and such other officers in that department as are already provided by law.

Act of 20th of March, 1863:

That from and after the passage of this act the rank, pay, and allowances attached to the office of Quartermaster-General of the Army of the Confederate States shall be those of a brigadier-general in the Provisional Army.

Two views have been taken as to the proper construction of the act of 26th of February, 1861, for the establishment of a general staff, and the amendatory act of 14th of March, 1861:

First. That they create a distinct and separate office of Quartermaster-General, to which in every instance an appointment must be made, and to which the rank of colonel is annexed. If this view be correct, then the nomination and appointment of Colonel Myers, on the 15th of February, 1862, must be understood as a nomination and appointment to the office of Quartermaster-General with the rank of colonel ut res magis valeat quam pereat, because only so understood was the action of the President and Senate in conformity with the law. This appointment was made under the Provisional Government, and by the terms of the Constitution of the Confederate States could continue only until his successor was appointed. (Constitution, Art. VI, clause 1.) Upon the appointment, therefore, of General Lawton upon the 27th of January, 1864, assuming that to be duly and lawfully made, Colonel Myers was displaced from the office of Quartermaster-General; and as that was the only office which he held, it follows, of course, that he is no longer in the Army of the Confederate States.

Second. That the acts aforesaid did not create a distinct office of Quartermaster-General, but merely a post of duty to which any officer of the Army might be assigned, and afterward withdrawn and assigned to other duties at the discretion of the President. If this view be correct, then the nomination and appointment of Colonel Myers on the 15th of February, 1862, must be understood to be an appointment to be colonel in the Quartermaster's Department and an assignment to duty as Quartermaster-General. And this view is thought to be sustained by the provisions of the sixth section of the act of 26th of February, 1861, authorizing the President to assign officers of the Quartermaster's Department to duty in the line of the Army, and by those of the eighth and twenty-sixth sections of the act of the 6th of March, 1861, "For the establishment and organization of the Army of the Confederate States," and the second section of the amendatory act of May 16, 1861, which authorize the President to assign officers of the line, even the highest, to staff or other duties at his discretion. Conceding this view to be the true one, its effect, so far as the Quartermaster-General is concerned, will be to make the acts for the organization of the staff to read as follows:

There shall be one colonel in the Quartermaster's Department, who shall discharge the duties of Quartermaster-General, and who may be assigned to the command of troops by orders from the President specially so directing.

Then comes the act of 20th of March, 1863, which provides that the rank, pay, and allowances attached to the office of Quartermaster-General shall be those of brigadier-general. Now, the view of the organization of this department which we are now considering denies that there is any such distinct office as that of Quartermaster-General. What, then, is the intention of the act? It did not mean to place an additional officer in the Quartermaster's Department. Its language is not appropriate to that end. It speaks not of persons, but of things; not of an officer, but of the rank, pay, and allowances to be attached to a certain office. If such had been its object, it would have followed the style of the former act, and have declared that the Quartermaster-General's Department "shall consist of one Quartermaster-General, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general, one assistant quartermaster-general, with the rank of colonel, &c." I think the true meaning is, not to add to the force of the Quartermaster's Department, but simply to increase the rank, pay, and allowances of the highest officer in it. It is as if the act had said, "that hereafter the highest officer in the Quartermaster's Department shall be a brigadier-general, instead of a colonel, as heretofore." And the necessary result is to abolish the office of colonel in that department, and to substitute for it that of brigadier-general. It makes no difference how this act was intended to operate, whether by elevating the then colonel to the grade of a brigadier-general, or by authorizing the President to appoint him or some one else to the higher grade. Either way the office of colonel is abolished. And as that was the only office held by Colonel Myers, it follows that he no longer holds any office in the Army.

Under the view first taken it still remains to inquire whether General Lawton has been duly and legally appointed Quartermaster-General. His nomination to the Senate was "to be Quartermaster-General, to rank as brigadier-general from April 13, 1861;" and he was confirmed "to take rank from the date of confirmation."

An important question of constitutional construction is presented. Is it within the functions of the Senate to diminish the rank assigned in the nomination of an officer? That the Senate cannot add to the rank so assigned is admitted. It cannot originate an appointment. It has no part of the nominating power. That is intrusted solely to the President. The constitutional action of the Senate is confined to an affirmation or rejection of the President's nomination.

It was upon these principles that Coxe's case was decided by Attorney-General B. F. Butler. On the 7th of February, 1837, the President of the United States nominated Coxe "to be a lieutenant in the Navy from this date." The Senate adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of John R. Coxe to be a lieutenant in the Navy, to take rank next after Lieutenant Elisha Peck.

The effect of the appointment according to the confirmation of the Senate would have been to place Coxe on the register above 162 lieutenants.

The Attorney-General, upon a reference of the question to him, decided that Coxe could not be commissioned at all. Not according to the nomination, because that had not been confirmed; not according to the confirmation, because the Senate had exceeded its powers.

In this opinion I fully concur. The case did not call for a decision of the other question, whether the Senate can diminish the rank assigned in a nomination, and so far as the Attorney-General's reasoning intimated any opinion upon that point it was an obiter dictum. It is not a ruling precedent; but there is a precedent in point which is cited in the same opinion:

On the 4th of May, 1822, President Monroe nominated Colonels House and Fenwick and Major Eustis for promotion in the Army, with dates of rank in each case from a prior day specified in the nomination. On the 8th of May, 1822, the Senate acted on these nominations. In each case the question was divided, and the vote taken first on the proposed nomination, and then on the date of rank. The former was decided in the affirmative, and the latter in the negative. The President, as I learn from the Adjutant-General, must have regarded the action of the Senate as complete, because he issued the commissions in conformity to the decision of that body. Nothing being said as to the date of rank in the commissions, the officers receiving them of course took rank from their appointments. (See Opinions of Attorneys-General U. S., 3-190.)

Mr. Butler adds:

These cases would seem to show that in the judgment of the Senate and of President Monroe, the date and rank may be separated from the office itself. This, perhaps, may be done where the President nominates, as in the cases referred to, with rank from a prior day, and the Senate strikes out the rank altogether, thus reducing it to the date of the appointment.—Ibid.

In exact conformity with this precedent has been the action of the President and Senate of the Confederate States in the case of General Lawton. In a former opinion I have had occasion to declare that I would be reluctant to advise any departure from settled practice, or respectable precedents, in appointments to office, unless impelled by an imperative sense of duty to the Constitution. Such cases can seldom or never constitute a lis pendens, so as to present the questions arising in them for judicial determination; and unless practice and precedents are to have the weight of authority nothing can ever be settled. There can be no uniformity of action, and frequent and painful conflicts may arise between the President and the Senate. I find nothing in the Constitution militating against these precedents, and a well-settled principle of law sustaining them. Omne majus continet in se minus is not less a maxim of law than a conclusion of logic, and is of familiar application in many cases. Thus, the Constitution of the Confederate States, following that of the United States, gives to the President the power to pardon offenses; and upon this principle it has been held without question, from the earliest time, that the President is not compelled to exercise the full power, but may remit a portion only of the sentence. So a power in a settlement to lease for twenty-one years is well executed by granting a lease for fourteen years. (3 M. and S., 382.) So where there is a custom within a manor that copyhold lands may be granted in fee simple, a grant for any less estate will be upheld under the custom; and so where an act done under a power is greater than the power authorizes, it will be held good to the extent of the power; as, where there is a power to lease for ten years and a lease is granted for twenty years, it will be held in equity to be a good lease for ten years under the power. (Woodf. L. and I., 32.)

Upon this principle a nomination to take rank from the date of confirmation is necessarily contained in a nomination to take rank from a prior day. Where the Senate adds to the nomination a rank not given by it, it goes beyond the act of the President and originates a nomination; but when it cuts down the rank from a prior date to the date of confirmation, it adopts a portion of the act of the President, and it is to that extent the nomination of the President and the confirmation of the Senate. And when the minds of the President and Senate have met, and the appointment is made in conformity with the confirmation, I see no good reason why it should not be valid. I would have more hesitation in adopting this conclusion if the action of the Senate were binding upon the President; but it is not. Nomination and confirmation together do not make an appointment. Confirmation is merely the expression of the Senate's assent that the appointment may be made. The appointment still remains to be made, and that must be the voluntary act of the President. He may make it according to the confirmation of the Senate, or he may withhold it and send in a new nomination. (Marbury vs. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137.)

I think, therefore, that the appointment of General Lawton to be Quartermaster-General has been duly and legally made.

Hon. JACOB THOMPSON:

SIR: Confiding special trust in your zeal, discretion, and patriotism, I hereby direct you to proceed at once to Canada, there to carry out such instructions as you have received from me verbally in such manner as shall seem most likely to conduce to the furtherance of the interests of the Confederate States of America which have been intrusted to you.*

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OF ALABAMA,
Montgomery, April 27, 1864.

His Excellency President DAVIS:

DEAR SIR: With the assent of my predecessor and with my approbation since I came into office several gentlemen who had been drill officers in the conscript camp at Talladega were allowed permission to raise companies of boys between sixteen and eighteen years old. Ten companies have thus been raised, and most of them have been in the Confederate service for four or five months. They were all raised before the passage of the recent law requiring the enrollment of these young men. This battalion or regiment has for its officers, field and company, Maj. J. L. Davidson, Capts. B. F. Yniesta, James A. McCaw, J. L. Walthall, and R. H. Redwood, and Lieuts. H. H. Foy, W. H. Kelly, Theo. Bethea, R. T. Norred, W. H. King, Richard Neely, and John W. Simmons. All of them had been drill-masters at Talladega with the rank of lieutenants, first and second. The separate companies were first organized and were placed on detached duty, and some months since they were formed into a battalion of seven or eight companies and elected their field officers. I understand there are now ten companies. The authority of General Pillow was given to raise these companies. The young men composing the companies are of the very best material, many of them sons of the most influential citizens of the State. They are now as well drilled as veteran soldiers. I have been informed that it is in contemplation to disband these companies and turn them over to the conscript officers, and the young officers themselves, all of whom have seen actual service in the field, will be turned over likewise to the conscript officers for enrollment. I would regard such action as a great calamity—one doing the grossest injustice to the officers and young men who compose the battalion or regiment. Although these men were all mustered into the Confederate service, yet, inasmuch as at the time of their organization the men were all a part of the State militia force, over which the Confederate States had no control except through a call on the Governor, I have regarded them as a part of the State troops in the service of the Confederacy.

Now, I ask that this organization shall not be broken up; that the officers, field and company, may be permitted to remain and receive their commissions. The most patriotic motives prompted these young men to volunteer before any law made them liable to Confederate service. They volunteered under promise given them that they would be received into the Confederate service with the officers of their own choosing. The officers they have selected are all gentlemen of education and high qualifications as officers. No better organization exists in our service. For two or more months they have been stationed at Selma doing regular duty. To break up their organization would do them injustice and produce great dissatisfaction among our best people. I cannot believe the facts were known or it would never have entered the head of the War Department to interfere with them. I have had no correspondence with the Secretary of War on this subject and may be misinformed as to the intentions of the War Department. I, however, appeal to you as the Commander-in-Chief in behalf of these young officers and men.

I have the honor to remain, with great regard, your friend and obedient servant,

T. H. WATTS,
Governor of Alabama.

SECRETARY OF WAR :

In this case, as stated, it would seem proper to receive the companies as organized either in the reserve or active force. If you should upon examination concur, please have the necessary orders given and respond to the Governor's letter. Otherwise return the letter to me with objections.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL :

Order the organization here to be retained and considered part of the reserve forces. The great majority must be too young for field service as regulars.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., April 28, 1864.

His Excellency JEFFERSON DAVIS,

President Confederate States of America:

SIR: I have the honor to submit to you the following report of the operations of this Department:

In the brief period since my last report the inclemency of the season has enforced comparative inaction on the armies in the field. Operations on our part have been mainly defensive, but have been varied by some brilliant affairs of an offensive character, executed generally by cavalry detachments. The enemy have essayed several serious invasions and various marauding incursions. The results have been almost invariably honorable to our arms.

The large force thrown into Mississippi, with the purpose of marching to the attack of Mobile, expended itself along less than a third of its contemplated course in discreditable ravages against non-combatants and hasty damages of the railroads, speedily repaired. A decisive repulse of the formidable cavalry column designed to co-operate with them from Tennessee, by not half its force of recently recruited men, under the bold leadership of General Forrest, followed; and then at the first intimation of the assembling of a force adequate to encounter them, the main army, some 25,000 or 30,000 strong, beat a hasty retreat. Their whole plan of campaign was effectually broken up, and besides the losses sustained in men and material, by straggling and capture, their troops returned exhausted and discouraged to their strongholds, whence they have not ventured since to emerge.

More signal disaster punished their invasion to subjugate Florida. They were met promptly and gallantly by General Finegan, with a smaller number of hastily collected troops, and completely defeated, with heavy loss and utter rout, in the decisive battle of Olustee. Driven back to the protection of their ships of war, they received large re-enforcements, and for a time threatened the renewal of their invasion, but their most bloody experience of the prowess of our forces, and the great consequent discouragement of their troops, doubtless induced despair of success. They have since withdrawn nearly their entire force and relinquished as desperate the invasion of a State so courageously defended.

Various raids of the enemy have been made by cavalry, generally in indefensible portions of the Confederacy, and for the most part for purposes of mere rapine and destruction. They have been conducted with a precipitation most wasteful to their men and animals, and indicative of constant apprehension, but have been marked by a malignant spirit and practices of infamy and barbarity that would have disgraced brigands or savages. Their warfare has been almost exclusively on peaceful citizens, and their avowed object has been the destruction of private property; the taking off of the slaves, even by force; the waste of stores and the means of subsistence; the destruction of animals and implements of husbandry, and the privation of all means of future production and support to the whole people.

The most important of these raids, undertaken with an unusual force and a special aim, surpassed even their many inhuman enterprises in the atrocity of its discovered designs. It was avowed as an effort, with 5,000 picked horsemen, sustained by light artillery, to seize and hold temporarily the Capital of the Confederacy, and to liberate the large number of their prisoners held in its vicinity. Our pickets had been thinned by the withdrawal of our cavalry for recruitment and supply, and the enemy succeeded in starting, without observation, on their enterprise, but it was conducted with a timidity and feebleness that were in ludicrous contrast with the boldness of the conception and the extent of their means. Fifteen hundred of their number detached to Charlottesville, for the double purpose of destroying our railroad communications and distracting attention by varied attacks, with a view of subsequently reuniting with the main column, were easily repulsed by a mere handful of half-armed artillerymen with a single gun when in a few miles of their contemplated prize of Charlottesville, and compelled to fly affrighted back to their main army. Another detachment of some thousand men, under an officer (Colonel Dahlgren) deemed by them one of especial merit, was sent across the country to pass some distance above the city to the south of the James, and coming rapidly on that side, where there was least reason to expect a defensive force, and near which, on an island, were the greater portion of the prisoners, to aid in a combined attack to be made on the north side by the great body of the troops under General Kilpatrick, esteemed among their most enterprising generals. Dahlgren marked his course to the river, unimpeded by any hostile force, only by ravage and incendiarism, but failed wholly to effect a crossing, and sought to cover the timidity that shrank from trying a doubtful ford by an act of savage vengeance on his negro guide, who indeed well merited his fate, but not at the hands of the enemy, for his treachery to an indulgent master and his attempted services to a cruel foe. Baffled in this part of his plan, he hastened toward the city on the north side of the river to unite with Kilpatrick in his proposed attack. Meantime, some hours before his arrival, that attack had been made by the great body of the forces under Kilpatrick, and repulsed, by only a few hundred men on one of the outer lines of the city defenses, with such ease as, but for the limited number engaged, would almost have deprived the victory of glory. Kilpatrick retired baffled, to find another opportunity, if not to beat a retreat. Later, near night, Dahlgren approached on the road from the west, down the river, and encountered a few miles from the city the most advanced battalion of our forces, which happened to be of the local reserves, and to be composed of clerks, recently organized and untried in war. This, too, was in the open field, without defenses of any kind. Yet the charge of this select body of the enemy's cavalry, in superior numbers, was speedily repelled, and they driven off in ignominious flight. Their only purpose seemed escape, but as they hastily pursued after the retreating column of Kilpatrick they learned that he, too, had been attacked in the night and his force dispersed. This gallant deed had been done by General Hampton. He, approaching with about 400 cavalry, hastily summoned to the aid of the city, had been apprised of the locality of the enemy by Col. Bradley T. Johnson, who, with a small party of horsemen, had been for many hours courageously scouting around and skirmishing with their forces. Despite his insignificant force General Hampton at once charged the enemy in his camp, and after a brief struggle routed them, capturing many men and horses. Being too weak to pursue, he was compelled to allow them to escape with impunity, but their only thought afterward seemed to be of rapid flight, and the next day they found a refuge in a supporting force of cavalry that had been sent up the peninsula to their relief. Startled by the intelligence of this disaster, Dahlgren's men seem, many, to have scattered, finding their way to Kilpatrick's column, while their leader with some hundreds of his choice men crossed the Pamunkey, with the hope of evading Hampton and escaping across the country to Gloucester Point. In King and Queen they were encountered by some few furloughed cavalry and a local company, hurriedly summoned for pursuit. Ambuscaded by them, Colonel Dahlgren and a few of his men were killed, and the residue of the force under his command speedily surrendered as prisoners. Thus ingloriously and disastrously terminated an expedition inaugurated with formidable forces and with high anticipations of great results. But the disgrace of failure was exceeded by the infamy of the base designs of the expedition. On the body of Colonel Dahlgren, the chosen and specially trusted leader, were found copies of the plan and purposes of the expedition, and the original of his address to his soldiers on starting. These disclosed, unequivocally, the nefarious purpose, after liberating their prisoners, to turn them loose, armed, and maddened by privation and every evil passion, and by them, with the aid and under the protection of the embodied forces, to sack, burn, and destroy the city, and to kill the President and the leading authorities of the Confederate Government. The dullest sensibility will sicken and revolt at the horrible brutalities and atrocities that must have attended such a carnival of crime. The perpetration of such deeds by an infuriated soldiery, under all the fierce impulses of a sanguinary struggle and in the flush of triumph, is by all nations felt to be a reproach on the character and humanity of man; but that such horrors should have been deliberately planned and ordered by the authorities of any people professing to be civilized and Christian, must inflict an indelible stigma of hypocrisy and infamy. Such fell designs might seem almost incredible of any other people, but they are supported by irrefragable evidence in the possession of the papers themselves, with conclusive indications, internal and external, of their authenticity. It is only the culmination of many inferior exhibitions of like malignity and atrocity. The captives taken in the abortive effort to perpetrate these or like atrocities must be admitted to have forfeited all rights to the privileges of civilized warfare, and might well be punished by their intended victims as the worst of criminals; but it has been thought to comport more with the dignity and self-command of an enlightened Government, as well as to be more consistent with the humanity, clemency, and Christianity that has, throughout this war, characterized our people and authorities, not to mete out bloody retaliation on the subordinate instruments of an infamous Government, but to consign them for retribution to the reprobation of outraged Christendom and the lasting stigma of recording history.

Our armies in the field are believed to be in excellent condition and spirits. Inured to war and practiced in habits of endurance, they have passed through the exposure and privations of the winter and inclement spring with remarkable health and content. Animated by an invincible resolution not to be subdued, and a zeal of patriotic self-devotion beyond all praise, they have almost universally re-enlisted for the war, and voluntarily renewed the pledge of their all—their property, their labor, and themselves—to the sacred cause of the safety and independence of the country. They have reacted on the people everywhere, encouraging the bold and shaming the timid to a more confident reliance on a future of success, and have effectually hushed the whisperings of despondency or disaffection. They were never more confident and reliant on themselves and their commanders, and relatively, as is believed, more nearly than heretofore approximating the number of their enemies, they await with assurance and ardor the shock of the coming campaign.

The measures of legislation to secure meritorious officers and repress irregularities and desertion have operated beneficially on the discipline and morale of the Army. Thorough organization may not yet have been attained in forces which had to be suddenly and provisionally organized, but steady advance is being made to the attainment of the utmost discipline and efficiency. The recent assignment at the Capital of a supervising commander of all the armies, besides promoting the harmony and consistency of military movements, has brought to aid in the work of organization the experience, known administrative capacity, and acknowledged abilities of one of our leading generals, and may be expected to prove productive of salutary results.

Some deficiencies of organization yet require amendatory legislation. The staff, affording to the quick intelligence of the general his perceptive and administrative faculties, should be constituted of the best material, have the highest attainable experience and qualifications, and be animated by strong incentives to activity and improvement. Unfortunately, in our Army it has not enjoyed the repute, nor, perhaps in consequence, commanded the merits desirable for its efficiency. From unavoidable circumstances, probably, the staff has been too much the object of favoritism through the recommendations on behalf of personal friends, or the refuge of supernumeraries and those by non-election or otherwise thrown out of the line of regular service. They have come to be considered in some measure as attachés to the persons and fortunes of their respective generals, rather than as officers selected for peculiar qualifications and assigned to special duties. In consequence of this kind of estimation, probably, they have not been allowed rank consistent with their importance or regulated appropriately by the standard of merit. These evils it is most desirable to remove, and it is respectfully suggested that the remedy may be found in organizing the respective departments of the staff into separate corps, with proper gradations in rank, and in affording the incentive of advance on the exhibition of qualifications or superior merit. Some increase in the numbers to be attached to the larger commands of the Army, as well as the proposed advance in rank, would also seem advisable. This is, indeed, almost a necessity in relation to the commissary and quartermaster branches of the staff service. The law has never made direct provision for the appointment of such officers to organizations larger than brigades. Experience has demonstrated them to be essential not only to the Army as a whole, to assure harmony and unity to its movements and due distribution of supplies, but likewise, from similar reasons, to corps and divisions, which not infrequently have to act independently and at wide intervals of distance. In consequence there has been no alternative but for the general in command, or the Department, to withdraw and assign, by detail from their proper brigades, the quartermasters and commissaries indispensable to the larger organizations of the Army. Such assignments have rendered oftentimes imperative the appointment of other officers of the same branch of service to the destitute brigades; and thus indirectly, and with only the rank and legal assignment of brigade officers, have these essential officers of the staff been secured to the divisions, corps, and armies in the field. This has been so well understood that in one of the acts of Congress there has been implied sanction by reference to such division and corps officers. Still, action in such cases, without more direct authorization of law, is always embarrassing to the Department, and not incapable of mischievous effects in the establishment of precedents, and it is earnestly recommended that such appointments be directly sanctioned by law.

In another particular respecting the appointment of quartermasters and commissaries it is desirable the law should be made more explicit. The only authority for the appointment of these officers, not for commands in the field, but for the general service of the bureaus, is conferred by the act of the 15th day of February, 1862, which provides:

That in addition to the number of quartermasters, assistant quartermasters, commissaries, and assistant commissaries now allowed by law, the President shall have authority to appoint as many of said officers as shall in his discretion be deemed necessary at permanent posts and depots.

This seems to contemplate that the officers of this class for the general service are only required at posts and depots, and are expected to be stationary there; but in reality there is an imperative necessity for a greater number to be distributed and actively engaged in all parts of the Confederacy, purchasing, accumulating, and moving supplies, and supervising the administration of the extended operations of the commissary and quartermaster's service. As such officers are all remotely connected with and report to the respective bureaus stationed at the Capital, or more immediately to a superior officer at some post or depot, the above act was, from an early period after its passage, construed to authorize the appointment of as many quartermasters and commissaries as the necessities of the general service demanded, and such has been the continued practice of the Department. Doubt may, however, exist whether this be not a latitude of construction dictated rather by the necessity of the case than justified by the language and original conception of the act. The law should explicitly confer a power of appointment coextensive with the needs of the service, for the exercise of a questionable right of appointment is always to be deprecated. In such matters encroachment is facile and precedents dangerous, and as little latitude to excess as practicable should be left by the law-makers.

On another point of more importance ambiguity exists, which should be corrected by more explicit legislation. It is in relation to the appointment and tenure of office of the general officers of the Provisional Army. The system pervading the organization of the Provisional Army does not allow the appointment of officers at large assignable to any command appropriate to their grade of rank, but only of the officers of each special organization, on the legal continuance of which their commissions are dependent. This is clear as to the company and field officers, as may be illustrated by the fact that such officer of a company or regiment is not a captain or colonel at large of the Provisional Army, but only the captain or colonel of his particular company or regiment. The disbandment or termination of the service of such special organization loses the officers their commissions. The same principle of organization seems to have been originally contemplated in the provision by the act of the Provisional Congress of the 6th of March, 1861, for the appointment of general officers to brigades and divisions, and by analogy, as is presumable, likewise to the commanders of corps when they were authorized. It would thus have resulted that appointments of general officers could only be made to special brigades, divisions, or corps, and that if any general officer was either wounded, incapacitated temporarily, or otherwise withdrawn from his special command, no successor could be appointed; and that on any brigade, division, or corps being broken up or radically changed by the diversion or redistribution of its component parts, the general officer would go out of commission. The inconveniences and hardships hence resulting were so great and manifest that, although in the first instance a disposition was manifested by the Executive to maintain this scheme of appointment and tenure of office, almost of necessity it had to be practically overlooked in the many changes inevitable in the composition of such large organizations, and general officers came to be assignable from one brigade to another, or, to secure an actual commander in the field in case of temporary disability of the general officer previously commanding, from capture, wounds, or other temporary cause, were appointed for the destitute organizations. This came to be recognized and acted on as a necessity by Congress, as well as the Executive, and to obviate the inconveniences or embarrassments which might result from a deficiency in the number of general officers, the act of the 13th of October, 1862, was adopted. This act provides "that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint twenty general officers in the Provisional Army, and to assign them to such appropriate duties as he may deem expedient." Under this law there is no doubt that the Executive may appoint, to a number not exceeding twenty, general officers of the Provisional Army at large, who may be assignable to any command or duty appropriate to their rank, whose commissions are not contingent on their special commands. As thus a number of supernumerary officers, not exceeding twenty in number, were authorized, it was considered, by construction, to obviate, so long as that number was not exceeded, any obligation of discharging such general officers as were, from any changes of the service or otherwise, thrown out of their special commands, and to allow even those originally appointed to such special commands, by being considered as among this number of supernumeraries, to be assigned to any other appropriate duties or commands. On these points, however, well-founded doubts exist, since the original appointments may perhaps more justly determine whether the general officer be the officer of a special command, dependent on its continuance, or be one of the supernumerary class assignable at will. Such construction, however sustainable by the language and apparent contemplation of the law, would be both unjust and mischievous. Very many of the most capable general officers in the service, oftentimes because of their superior merits selected for other more important stations, under the changes of the service are no longer attached to the special commands for which they were appointed, and successors have replaced them, or in the distribution of forces their original organizations have been broken up. Shall they be thrown out of commission and deprived of commands? Nor would the injustice be more than partially remedied by placing them among the supernumerary class, since for that a new appointment would be necessary, which would deprive them of their original date, and postpone them to all juniors previously in commission. On the other hand, if those originally appointed as supernumeraries are always to be considered as of that class, and not on assignment to a particular command to hold the relation of a commander originally appointed for it, the number allowed by the law would be at once exceeded without meeting the deficiencies of the service. An invidious distinction would be established between officers of the same grade in the Provisional Army, founded solely on the accident of appointment, which could not fail to be prolific of jealousies, rivalries, and discontents.

In view of the whole subject, it is recommended that all general officers of the Provisional Army, like the supernumeraries, be made independent of their commands, and assignable, according to rank, to any appropriate command or duty.

A slight extension of the power of appointing chaplains for the Army is likewise desirable. There is, happily, a large religious element and much devotional feeling in our Army, which every consideration of policy, no less than grateful duty, requires should be consulted and fostered. At present, chaplains can only be appointed to posts and regiments. Now, the men of one of the most important branches of service, the artillery, are not regimentally organized, but formed either in detached companies or arranged in battalions. Hence to them cannot be afforded the guidance or consolations of religious ministry. It is suggested that a chaplain should be allowed to every ten detached companies, or to two battalions, when so situated as to permit to them a common ministration.

The act of the late Congress for retiring disabled officers and men has been put in execution, and is working beneficially for the Army. Its provisions, however, do not seem to have been commensurate with the claims of equity and gratitude due to the gallant soldiers who have been shattered in health or maimed by the exposures and wounds of service. It is confined in its operation only to such as are still on the rolls of the Army, and has no respect to those who may have been, by resignation or otherwise, heretofore put out of service. No adequate cause, either in reason or justice, can be perceived for such limitation. Indeed, on the score of merit, the cases of those who had continued, while incapable of active duty in the field, on sick leave, or in positions of light duty, rather cumbering than aiding the service, appear less entitled to consideration than those more disinterested officers who sacrificed their commissions, often their sole dependence, from honorable sensibility, lest they should block the promotion of the inferior officers on whom their duties had been cast. Not a few cases of this kind have been known to the Department, in which the acceptance of the resignation, while constrained by the interest of the service, has been done with pain and regret at the necessity of allowing the self-sacrifice which a sense of honor imposed on the gallant officer. The sole consideration which can exist to prevent the extension to all such resigned officers of the privileges accorded by the act to those still in service, is the ungracious one of economy, which, in a liberal view, would be as inapplicable from true policy as from a due regard to the sentiment of justice and gratitude involved. As very many of these disabled and scarred veterans are still capable of much service at posts or other light duties, their restoration to rank would probably prove much more a gain than a burden to the country, while it would manifest grateful appreciation and secure some partial provision for the honored sufferers of our campaigns. It is, therefore, earnestly recommended that the privileges of the act be extended to embrace those who, from like causes of disability or wounds in service, have heretofore resigned or been discharged.

The corps of engineer troops authorized by the late Congress, after not a few impediments and delays resulting from the reluctance of commanders to part with, by details, their veterans from the line, have at last been organized in the main of new material, and have been provided with the requisite trains and implements of service. They have been the object of special interest and care to the able head of the Engineer Bureau, and to his intelligent supervision and persistent efforts are mainly due their efficient organization and complete provision. They are composed for the most part of picked men, and embody many valuable mechanics and skilled laborers, who, guided by the intelligence and experience of officers selected from their peculiar qualifications and training as engineers, cannot fail to prove eminently advantageous in facilitating the movements and providing the defenses of our armies. Their merits and value are already warmly appreciated and acknowledged by the generals who have enjoyed the advantages of their services, and it is not doubted they will so advance, with increased experience and practice, in estimation and utility, as to fully vindicate the wisdom of their organization.

The boards of examination, the military courts, and the provisions of the late law allowing officers to be dropped on the recommendation of commanding generals, are operating favorably on the discipline and efficiency of the Army. Grave doubts have, however, been expressed by one of our most distinguished generals whether changes by a law of the late session in relation to the military courts have not so closely assimilated them, in the necessity of referring charges and having them reviewed in each case by the commanding general, to general courts-martial as to have diminished their efficiency in facilitating the dispatch of cases and promptitude of punishment. Modification of the law in these respects is therefore respectfully suggested. Indeed, the mass of business cast on the reviewing authorities—the commanding general, the Department, and the President—by these various modes of removing incompetency and punishing offenses, cannot be dispatched without neglecting other duties of higher import. The responsibilities, however, entailed are of so grave and delicate a character, and involve so much of personal discretion, that they cannot be discarded or consigned to others. Remedial legislation in these particulars is urgently demanded. It is with deference suggested that an officer, to be connected with the Adjutant-General's Bureau, and to be designated the Judge-Advocate-General, with the rank at least of colonel, to be aided by assistants, one to be with the commanding general of each separate army in the field, with the rank at least of lieutenant-colonel, be authorized, whose duty it shall be to review in the first instance all the sentences of the military courts, courts-martial, and examining boards, with the right of appeal within a limited time, where the cases were tried in the field and the sentence deprived the accused of either commission or life. This appeal might be first to the general commanding, who might either decide it finally or suspend execution and refer it, through the Judge-Advocate-General, to the Department, to be decided by it, or, at its discretion, submitted to the President. In all cases not arising and tried with an army in the field, the review might be, in the first instance, by the Judge-Advocate-General, subject to the right of like appeal, when life or commission was the forfeiture of the sentence, to the Department, which should either decide or submit to the President. Of course, the privilege of interposing by Executive clemency, vested in the President, would remain unaffected, and application in appropriate form might be made to him in all cases. By the plan proposed, or some similar one, all venial cases and a large proportion of grave ones would be disposed of without burdening the commanding general or the Department. So only those of special gravity would come to the Department, or claim the action of the President, while the gracious prerogative of mercy would in all be preserved to him. Promptitude and certainty in the disposition of all cases would be reconciled with due consideration and full revision.

More important advantage to the service, it is believed, would result from the extension of the power now intrusted to the Executive, of assigning to commands, with temporary rank, officers of the Confederate Army, to officers likewise of the Provisional Army. The power has been both useful and convenient with respect to the former, and the considerations that recommend it apply with daily increasing force to officers of the Provisional Army. In the service, the power of promptly rewarding and advancing decided merit presents an invaluable incentive to improvement and the display of high qualities. The right, too, of selecting from all ranks or branches of the service, without being restricted by the gradation of permanent rank, the officers who may have shown qualities eminently adapting them for special commands, must conduce greatly to the development and command of the highest qualifications of leadership. Surprise has not unfrequently been felt and expressed that, though happily blessed with not a few generals distinguished alike by skill and success, yet with our armies, composed in large degree of such intelligent and cultivated men, and characterized by such high courage and proclivities for war, more of conspicuous ability and military genius have not been elicited and displayed. That these rare and inestimable gifts exist latent within our armies cannot be doubted, but our system, especially in the Provisional Army, has not been calculated to foster or discover them. Officers are in that army made strictly dependent on and confined to limited organizations in special branches of the service, and, whatever their peculiar qualifications, cannot be permanently assigned nor be advanced, save by the accident of promotion by seniority, or even on the display of distinguished valor and skill, except in their limited organizations. As the officers of the Provisional Army improve in experience and military attainments it becomes more and more important that they should not be confined to special branches of service, but have varied or enlarged spheres of action, so as to be prepared for more general commands, and that their special capacities should be utilized to the greatest advantage. Besides the benefits attained by temporary assignments, grave inconveniences would likewise be avoided. All advancements, when made, especially with officers not trained by military education or experience antecedent to the war, must necessarily be in large measure experimental and of doubtful results, and yet they are permanent, however unsuited or inefficient. Unless positively incompetent, the officers must remain in their new commands, scarce equal to their duties and incapable of inspiring confidence or enthusiasm, and yet often by their rank overshadowing or blocking the way to their superiors in all the endowments for command. It would have been far better to have tested, by temporary assignment, the qualities of the officer for the increased rank and command before he was irretrievably fixed in it. It is often found that an admirable captain proves unequal to the command of a regiment, or an accomplished colonel fails in the wider command of a brigadier, and not unfrequently in even higher rank will the distinguished subordinate general prove inadequate to wider or independent command. The officer—especially in an army so improvised and hastily organized—should be tested and approved in each important advance by command with temporary assignment before being permanently established in his increased grade. In short, the practice of such assignments would afford the highest incentives; would give enlarged experience and opportunities of display; would foster and elicit special merits and military genius, and would assure in permanent commands approved capacities.

Serious inconvenience has been caused officers in the field and much suffering in some instances to officers at posts by the late law giving but restricting the former to one ration and allowing the latter the privilege of purchasing only one. It is respectfully recommended that the law be so amended as to give officers in the field one ration, and to allow to all the privilege of purchase, subject to such regulations as may be imposed by the Department. This cannot possibly result in any injury to the public service, while the object of the late law will be attained, which was obviously to confer a benefit and not work a hardship.

In this connection it is appropriate to advert to the peculiar and rather anomalous provision of the existing law regulating the pay and allowances of general officers. No difference in these respects is made among them, with the sole exception (under the present exceptional rates of prices of trivial effect), that to the general actually commanding an army in the field there is an added allowance of $100 a month. No distinction otherwise in pay or allowances is made from a brigadier up to a general. As with increase of rank and command additional expenditures and charges are imposed, the simple consideration of justice would demand correspondingly increased pay and allowances. Equality in such cases is inequity, but, in addition, it is contrary to all experience and practice to have no consideration in compensation to increased dignity and more important service. A singular illustration of the present inequity of the law is presented by the fact that the veteran general recently assigned to the duty of directing, under the President, all our armies, and required to incur all the expenses of a residence at the capital, is deprived of the additional allowance he would have had as a general commanding an army in the field, and receives no more than the latest brigadier. It is surely only right that pay and allowances should have an appropriate relation to rank and extent of duties, entailing, as they must, larger expenditures, and it is confidently hoped that our general officers of the more advanced grades will not longer be enforced to the embarrassments, privations, and destitution of attendants by which, under the present compensation allowed and the restrictions on the subject of rations, in the midst of their anxieties and high responsibilities, they are now annoyed.

Attention is likewise called to the necessity for some adequate provision to defray the expenses of officers traveling under orders. The present allowances are insufficient to bear the charges, which no economy, or even parsimony, can avoid, and the inadequate pay of the officer little enables him to discharge such expenses. The simplest justice requires that at least the necessary expenses incurred in obedience to orders should be defrayed by the Government.

Some provision should likewise be made to compensate the commissioners directed to be appointed by the act suspending in certain cases the writ of habeas corpus. The duties are of a delicate and responsible character, and the compensation should be liberal enough to engage the services of men of high character and intelligence.

The recent military bills increasing the range of conscription have engaged the constant attention and energetic efforts of the able head of the Conscript Bureau in their enforcement. His accompanying report, to which attention is invited, will exhibit results so far attained in recruiting the armies and at the same time explain the embarrassments and impediments which have hindered more rapid execution.* These have resulted very much from the necessity of examining the numerous claims presented for exemptions or details under the exceptions and avowed policy of the law, and from the difficulty of commanding the class and number of assistants and officers for the multifarious duties cast on the Bureau. Owing to the decadence of the volunteering spirit, a large proportion of those liable to enrollment prefer claims of exemption or detail which justice and a regard for the aims avowed in the law require to be investigated and decided. At the same time the omission of Congress to authorize the appointment of officers for enrolling service and the expectation that officers to be retired under the invalid bill would suffice by assignment for such duties have placed the conscription service under something like a temporary privation. The period of such transition from old to new agencies under the most favorable circumstances would have been embarrassing and retarding, but the delays have been increased by the necessity of awaiting the process of retiring officers under a contemporaneous law, which must inevitably be of slow and gradual execution. Even when such officers have been retired and can be commanded, they are new to their duties, and the retention of their full rank often makes it difficult to adjust them in appropriate relations with the few more experienced officers whom the laws had authorized to be appointed for the duties of conscription. This will readily be appreciated when it is recollected that the highest rank authorized for such service is that of major of a camp of instruction. It is earnestly recommended that power of appointing, with rank varying from a lieutenant to a colonel, for enrolling and for supervising conscription in each State, a limited number of competent officers, whether from the retired list or those having special training or qualifications for the duties, be conferred. The duties cast on the Conscript Bureau are multifarious and arduous, as well as of prime moment, and it surely is not unreasonable to ask the privilege of selecting and employing fitting instrumentalities for their accomplishment.

Another cause of some retardation in the execution of the laws of conscription results, necessarily, from the persistent policy of the Department to rely for its regular administration on the prestige of law and the support of intelligent public opinion to established authority, rather than on military coercion by sustaining forces. Thus, instead of the forced gathering up, as with a drag net, of all that come within prescribed ages, there is the accorded privilege of volunteering; thereafter enrollment, with due respect to the limitations of the law and the claims for exemption and details, and their appropriate assignment. As the regular administration of law is more tedious than the summary judgments of arbitrary authority, so this system sacrifices something of expedition to justice. But much greater advantages are, it is believed, secured by the equity and certainty of execution, and by the reconciliation of the people to its severe requirements. Of course in some limited districts, where disaffection or desertion may have assembled open recusants to the law, the regular agencies employed have to be sustained by the local or regular forces. While so large a number of conscripts may not, under this system, be at once thrown into the Army, yet the continuous return of deserters and stragglers and the steady recruitment of our armies may be counted on to maintain and enhance their numbers and efficiency.

In natural connection with the maintenance of our armies the thought is attracted to the condition of numbers of our gallant soldiers now languishing in the prisons of the enemy. The sympathies of a grateful country are fixed upon them with the deepest interest, and the Department has but shared and responded to those feelings in making all the efforts consistent with dignity and honor for their relief and release. The protraction of their confinement has been due solely to the inhuman policy and perfidy of our enemies, whose Government has omitted and refused to maintain the faith pledged in the cartel of exchange. With the terms of that agreement our Government has ever been ready and earnest to comply, and in a variety of modes, even by an extraordinary mission of the second officer of the Government, has sought to re-establish its operation or to arrange satisfactory measures of exchange. Its remonstrances and its overtures have alike proved futile, and the Government of the United States must stand responsible before the world and in the sight of a just God for all the privations, sufferings, and loss of life by disease or otherwise entailed by confinement on the prisoners held on either side, not less on their own than on ours. The latest, among the shifts and subterfuges adopted by them to evade compliance with their plighted engagements, has been the selection, with the ostensible purpose of renewing exchanges, for the mission of treating on the subject with our authorities, of General Butler, the infamous author of so many atrocities in a former command as to have received the execration of the world, and to have been banned by the proclamation of the President with the name and character of an outlaw and a felon, to whom were to be extended none of the privileges of civilized warfare, but whose crimes, if he came into our power, were to be visited with the condign punishment of an infamous death. It may well excite surprise and indignation that the Government of the United States should select, for any position of dignity and command, a man so notoriously stigmatized by the common sentiment of enlightened nations. But it is not for us to deny their right to appreciate and select whom they may, not inappropriately perhaps, deem a fitting type and representative of their power and characteristics. While we maintain belligerent relations with them, we must, of course, recognize the official character of whatever officers they may empower to act within their own limits and within the sphere of their separate action. We must, therefore, recognize the fact of official position being held by such a character, and this was done, contemporaneously and subsequently to the issue of the President's proclamation, by our generals in the field, when compelled to necessary official relations with the Federal commander at New Orleans; but when option can be exercised by ourselves, and within the limits of our own territory or within the control of our armies, it is neither to be expected, nor would it comport with the honor or dignity of the Confederacy, that an outlaw and a felon should be received and admitted to the courtesies or privileges of civilized warfare, or exempted from the liabilities of a criminal. It has held him up to the detestation of Christendom and obtained the answering award of moral condemnation from the tribunal of enlightened public sentiment everywhere. Within its limits, and wherever its power may enable it to execute justice, he has been and will be held an outlaw and a felon. To essay more would be mere brutum fulmen against the criminal, yet entail inconveniences to our own Government and injury to innocent victims of his malevolence. In this view, the Government has sought to regulate its action. It has not denied the power or position, however unworthily bestowed by his own Government on General Butler within their limits, but has refused to receive or admit him within ours. If an honest purpose of effecting exchanges, in compliance with the cartel or on equitable terms, be really entertained by the enemy, all the arrangements essential thereto may be readily attained consistently with the position thus justly held by our Government; while, if the selection was intended merely as a pretext of avoidance, or for the purpose of gratuitous offense, the hypocrisy of the one design or the malignity of the other will be exposed. Since this relation has been held some limited exchanges by indirect communication have been effected, and hopes are entertained, especially in view of the increased number of prisoners which recent successes have given us, that the inhuman policy and delusive pretenses of the enemy will be abandoned and the equitable stipulations of the cartel be again acknowledged and executed. Such consummation would thrill with emotions of gratification the whole population of the Confederacy, and bear relief and consolation to thousands of families throughout the land. For a fuller history and explanation of all the proceedings connected with the subject of exchange, reference is made and special attention invited to the accompanying report of Mr. Ould, our able commissioner of exchange.*

Since my last report the administrative operations of the respective bureaus have been conducted with ability and energy by the zealous officers in charge. They have had many difficulties to encounter from the fluctuating currency; from deficiency of supplies; from the withdrawal of workmen and imperfect means of transportation; yet despite of these and other impediments, they have, in all instances, it is believed, not only maintained, but have rather increased the efficiency and success of their varied working departments. One of their greatest embarrassments has resulted from the law of the late Congress prohibiting, under severe penalties, the employment or continuance in employment of any liable to military duty. As the operations of several of the most important bureaus required assistants as well as officers of great activity and energy, rarely to be found except in the prime of life, a large number of the most trusted and essential employés came within the prohibited classes. To dismiss them at once, without breaking up, at the most critical and important period, the operations of the essential bureaus of Subsistence, Supply, and Transportation, was plainly impossible. It became necessary, therefore, that the power of detail, which had been reposed, it is to be presumed, to guard against such, among other contingencies, should be exercised by the Department more liberally than would have been otherwise consistent with its views. Every exertion has, however, been made to restrict the details to the narrowest limits consistent with the continuance of efficient service in the bureaus, and they have not been made without strict scrutiny and assurance, as far as practicable, of their positive necessity. Instructions, too, have been given and efforts are being made to diminish gradually these details and to supply their places, as fast as substitutes can be found, from the disabled or infirm or from the reserve classes. The steadfast aim of the Department has been, and will continue to be, to place in our armies in active service every able-bodied man, liable to bear arms, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five. If such result be attained it cannot be doubted armies will be maintained as large as the resources of the country would, in consistency with the permanent welfare of the people, justify, and fully adequate to achieve and assure independence and peace.

Another embarrassment in the administrative departments has resulted from the limitation by law to the compensation allowed to detailed men from the armies, who are generally skilled workmen or experts, and withdrawn on that account. Only $3 a day is by the law allowed them, and at existing inordinate rates it is, in the places where their duties compel their presence, simply impossible for them to support life, much less secure reasonable comforts or aid their families. What adds to the grievance is, that to the foreigners and others working by their sides three or four times as much compensation has to be given to retain them in their employments. Some additional provision for such detailed men must be made, and it is suggested that at least support, quarters, and clothing be secured to them. It is impracticable to provide them by any fixed rate of pay, for in our exceptional circumstances the necessary amount would vary largely in different localities and in brief intervals of time. In this connection, too, it is not inappropriate again to invoke earnestly consideration to the wholly inadequate compensation afforded to the clerks and employés of the Department. The financial measures of the late Congress, it is hoped, will, in their full development, compel reduction of inflated prices, but as yet they have been inoperative to afford any relief. Without means other than their salaries it is impossible for the clerks to obtain bare subsistence. They are faithful and laborious officers, and every consideration of justice and policy demands that they should receive at least a fair support. With the fluctuation of prices this cannot easily be secured by a moderate compensation in currency. Provision should be made to supply them with rations and clothing, or a part of the funds appropriated for their pay being employed in the purchase and export of cotton, they should receive a limited proportion, say a third or fourth, of their salaries in sterling exchange.

The supply departments are experiencing increased difficulties from the scarcity existing in considerable portions of the Confederacy, and from the reluctance in all to sell under the expectation of advancing prices. The great resource is, and it is feared will have for some time at least to be, impressment. While it is certainly most desirable this mode of supply should be dispensed with, or at least made as equitable and regular as practicable, yet facility and rapidity of execution are indispensable. Some features of the late law regulating impressments, it is suggested with deference, retard and obstruct its operation, and might be modified to the great convenience of the Government and without serious prejudice to the citizen. The requirement, too, of local appraisements, without appeal to a general arbiter, seems a very defective mode of securing only just compensation, and is rather calculated to stimulate grasping desires and to foment the discontents which always spring from inequality and diversity of prices. Such appraisements, it is submitted, do not afford a fair criterion of just compensation under the exceptional circumstances of the Confederacy. A much juster rule would be the cost of production with a fair profit thereon, to be determined by selected officers of undoubted probity and intelligence. Recurrence to such system of general regulation, rather than to the fluctuating estimates of local appraisers, is earnestly recommended. Some positive provision and some regular process of enforcement against citizens resisting or evading impressments are also desirable, as the law is now almost without the sanction of a penalty or a mode of legal execution. Military coercion is ever to be deprecated as a dependence for the administration of law.

The expediency of the tithe tax has been fully vindicated, as it has proved a most valuable resource for the subsistence of the armies and the most acceptable form of imposition on the producers. It should certainly be continued, and, in my judgment, on some leading articles of subsistence, such as meat, wheat, rice, and products of the sugar cane, should be increased. Some delays have arisen in its collection from the lack of adequate transportation, and from the want of harmony between the assessors and collectors. As the supervision of both classes of officers is now reposed in the same department, more unity of action may hereafter be expected. In the amendments made to the law, however, at the last session, too limited a time has, according to the judgment and experience of the officers charged with its execution, been allowed for collection before the privilege of commutation. That period is limited to five months only, within which all collections must be completed. With the means of transport and storage possessed, this is physically impracticable throughout the whole of the Confederacy. An extension of the period to at least eight months is therefore recommended.

Under the legislation of the late Congress efficient regulations have been adopted to make our great staples more available for providing funds and sustaining our credit abroad by exportation. Adequate precautions have, likewise, been taken to assure, on the export of these leading articles of commerce, when taken out of the Confederacy for private gain, fair returns of useful supplies for the Government and people. The period is yet too brief to allow full realization of the benefits to be expected from this policy, but enough is shown to vindicate its wisdom and call for its maintenance. It would be at once a great triumph over our enemies, and not an unprofitable lesson to neutral nations, that the malice of the former, as exhibited in their futile efforts, by a pretended blockade, to cut off the commerce of the Confederacy, and the stolid indifference of the latter to their violation of the law of nations and recent treaty stipulations, should, by the enhancement of prices consequently falling on consumers abroad, and especially their own people, prove the effective means of sustaining our credit and securing adequate supplies to the Confederacy. This is perfectly practicable by sufficient increase in the number of vessels, and by greater attention to affording facilities for evading the blockade, and rendering more directly the aid and countenance of the Government to the provision of the staples at the ports, and to the enlistment of private enterprise and capital in the trade.

The universal appreciation of the value of these great staples suggests the inquiry whether, as they cannot be exported at an approach to their production, they may not be employed within the Confederacy to maintain our internal as abroad they will our external credit. This subject belongs perhaps more appropriately to another department of the Administration, from whose matured thought and larger experience more reliable counsel may be obtained; but the great interest of this Department in utilizing all means of supply and securing acceptable securities for purchasing may excuse the suggestion. It is believed a plan might be devised by which the quantities of these great staples, which could be readily obtained for the Government, by the tithe and the exaction of the tax on them, as on gold in kind, rather than value, might be so disposed of as to provide a tempting mode of investment to capitalists, whether at home or abroad, and thus assure large available means for meeting the disbursements of the war, without the further issue of a redundant currency.

Of all the difficulties encountered by the administrative bureaus, perhaps the greatest has been the deficiency in transportation. With the coasting trade cut off and the command by the enemy, through their naval superiority, of all our great rivers, reliance for internal trade and communication has been necessarily on the railroads. These were never designed nor provided with means for the task now incumbent upon them. They have, besides, suffered much from inability to command the supplies of iron, implements, and machinery they habitually imported, and from many sacrifices and losses in the war. The deficiency of skilled labor has also been a great embarrassment, even in requisite repairs. It is impossible they can be maintained in efficiency, or that even the leading lines can be kept up, without the direct aid and interposition of the Government. Some of the shorter and least important roads must be sacrificed and the iron and machinery taken for the maintenance of the leading lines and for the construction of some essential and less exposed interior links of connection. They will also have to be supplied with sterling funds, or means of exporting our staples to command them, and facilities of purchasing and importing necessary supplies of machinery and the like. The Government will have to assist, by the construction of cars and locomotives, and to give facilities for procuring labor, and especially skilled labor, oftentimes even by details from the Army, in which, during the first stagnation of business attendant on the war, a very large proportion of the machinists and mechanics entered. It is recommended that by appropriate legislation aids in these various modes be authorized. In return for such privileges full command over all the resources and means of transport possessed by the roads whenever needed for the requirements of the Government should be established. It may be, indeed is, believed now to be absolutely essential for the support of leading armies that on certain lines all the means of transport that can be commanded should be exacted. The roads should be run under unity of management, without reference to their local limits or separate schedules, and with the rolling-stock possessed by all, or which can be drawn from other sources. There should be the full power of commanding all this, and at the same time of requiring the continued service, as far as needed, of all officers and employés of the roads, so that there should not be even temporary (which might be fatal) delay or embarrassment in conducting the transportation. There should be also the power of at once taking possession of and removing the iron on roads which must be sacrificed to maintain or construct others more essential, leaving the just compensation and all other questions of possible litigation to be settled by subsequent equitable and satisfactory processes of investigation and decision. The delays incident to previous settlement, often by vexed litigation, are fatal to the imperative uses which demand the sacrifice, and if permitted local and private interests will almost invariably invite them. No reflection is intended on the zeal or patriotism of the officers or members of these railroad companies. On the contrary, it is gratefully acknowledged that they have generally manifested a most commendable disposition to meet the requirements of the Government, and to make even large sacrifices for the common cause. Still, the measure of sacrifice which the need demands is dimmed to their perception by special interests, and is not unfrequently too great to be acquiesced in without the exhaustion of all means of procrastination and prevention. The boards of directors, too, where they would individually make the required sacrifice, feel constrained, by conscientious regard for their representative trust, to interpose all the obstruction and delays in their power. As the immediate possession and use of the iron in such cases is a pressing necessity, no alternative appears to exist but to give the power of seizure in the first instance, with the fullest precaution for after liberal settlement, and it is earnestly recommended this be done.

The distance and difficulty of communication cause imperfect knowledge of the transactions in the Trans-Mississippi Department since my last report, yet operations there are in the main believed to have been scarcely less encouraging and successful than on the eastern side of the river. It is true that under the pressure of superior numbers, from strategic considerations mainly, our forces retired from Little Rock, and have allowed the enemy to advance to considerable distances in the interior of Arkansas; but in such movements they expose themselves to imminent hazards, and will probably have only been lured to more complete destruction. Similar tactics in the war of our Revolution achieved the decisive triumphs of Saratoga and Yorktown, and the remembrance of these glorious results should enable the people overrun to endure the many sacrifices such policy of withdrawal must entail.

In Texas and Louisiana the invasions of the past winter have either accomplished ridiculously small results, in comparison with the formidable commands employed, or have been successfully repelled. In Western Louisiana especially the various advances of the enemy into the interior have met from our forces, under the skillful leadership of General Taylor, repeated and signal discomfitures. Of the most formidable of their invasions, attempted apparently for the subjugation of the whole country by several converging columns of their land forces, aided by a formidable fleet of gun-boats on the river, we are as yet imperfectly acquainted with results, as the wise policy of our able commander has withdrawn the scene of conflict to the far interior. We have only meager and glozing accounts through the journals of the enemy, yet they suffice to show reiterated disasters sustained and afford grounds for sanguine hope to us that they have met the retribution of fearful losses and may have been entirely captured or destroyed. Another San Jacinto may signalize the annals of the southwest and illustrate the fearful risk to an invading army of pressing, with the purpose of subjugation, to the interior defenses of a free and gallant people.

The abundant productions of this fertile region have fortunately precluded all deficiencies of supplies for subsistence to either the armies or the people. In this respect they are fully provided. Their needs are rather of munitions and manufactured stores. Even before the interruption of communication with the east efficient means had been adopted for the establishment of foundries, arsenals, and manufacturing establishments of various kinds and for the development of the mineral and other internal resources of the country. These efforts have been since pressed with increased vigor and with most creditable success. No long time will elapse before, in all material respects, the Trans-Mississippi Department will be made self-sustaining for war. Meantime, most liberal contracts and all other practicable measures have been adopted to afford them requisite supplies by importation of arms, munitions, and quartermaster's stores. These have been at least partially successful, and have met the most pressing wants. The deficiency most to be deplored is of a full supply of arms, and this has resulted from no want of foresight or exertion on the part of the Government, but from casual miscarriages and unexpected and most unjustifiable seizures of large cargoes by neutral powers. The subsequent rendition of them, with acknowledgment of error, at distant points, by no means remedied the mischiefs the injustice had inflicted. Notwithstanding the frustration in this way of well-concerted arrangements for supplies of arms and munitions, others have been rewarded with success, and measures now in train of execution, it is confidently hoped, will soon remove existing deficiencies. It is not improbable this has been already more speedily and effectively accomplished by the triumph of our arms and the capture of the abundant stores of the enemy. It is certainly mortifying to think that brave men are kept from the field, when their all is staked, by the want of arms; yet, if they can be supplied by the spoils of victory, they will find, in their equipment, at once encouragement and an inspiration of generous emulation to gallant achievements. They will know, too, the value of their arms and how they should be both guarded and used.

The legislation of the late Congress for the Trans-Mississippi Department was both liberal and provident. Provision was made for the peculiar needs incident to its comparative isolation from the supervision of the central Government and all the agencies of a partially independent government were authorized. In the same spirit has been the action of the Executive. Added rank and dignity have been bestowed upon the able commander and administrator at its head, and to him have been intrusted the full measure of executive powers, which, under our constitutional system, could be exercised by other than the President. Thus, full confidence has been manifested by both branches of the Government in his fidelity, capacity, and judgment, and all the incentives to effort and all the means of accomplishment which could be commanded have been imparted. It is not doubted such unusual trusts are merited and will be justified in their exercise, and that continuing confidence and sanction to his administration of affairs will be assured by its happy results. Accounts concur in representing him as enjoying likewise the esteem and confidence of the people of the department. They, notwithstanding the sacrifices and losses to which they have necessarily been subjected, are believed to be resolute, hopeful, and reliant both on themselves and their leaders. Portions of their country may be overrun or temporarily occupied by the hosts of their unscrupulous foes, but they know that with the resources in men and means and the advantages for defense of their extensive department, employed with energy and skill, the attempt to subdue a people as brave and determined as themselves is one of folly and madness. They endure with fortitude their temporary ills, await with patience the hour of approaching retribution, and anticipate with confidence the overthrow of their hateful enemies and their final disgraceful expulsion or destruction. In view of the means at command, the invincible spirit of the people, the skill of their leaders, and the approved prowess of their soldiers, the Trans-Mississippi Department may be regarded as, no less than the States of the Confederacy east, prepared against the utmost efforts of their malignant enemies for successful defense, and assured of ultimate triumph.

Attention is invited to the accompanying report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.* Credit is due to that officer for the dangers and privations he has endured in twice visiting the distant abodes of the Indian tribes. His presence and influence among them have proved salutary in affording encouragement and maintaining fidelity. It is important they should be dealt with in a spirit of consideration and liberality. They should not suffer from the changes which have been made in our financial system, the necessity and wisdom of which they cannot be expected to have foreseen or now to understand. The recommendation, therefore, by the Commissioner of timely legislation to authorize substitution of the new currency for the old, without loss to them, is approved and seconded. The great body of the Indians, notwithstanding their losses, are attached to the Confederacy and confident in its fortunes, and with reasonable consideration for their peculiar wants and feelings may easily be retained in amity and fidelity.

We have now entered upon the fourth year of the war, and the end is not yet. Originating in the wrong and perfidy of our enemies, it is continued through their rage and hate. We have asked and seek only peace and separation from them. They profess to enforce a detested union, and wage really a war of conquest and extermination. Prostrating their own Constitution and surrendering their liberties, they are intent only to crush ours. A campaign of momentous events is impending on us. For it our people stand prepared and resolute. Nor have their representatives proved unworthy exponents of their indomitable purpose and self-sacrificing patriotism. The measures of the late Congress, considered as a combined system, are characterized by high resolve and enlarged statesmanship. They concentrate the energies and resources and command the men and property of the Confederacy in larger measure than have ever been done by any government. The whole male population capable of arms, from seventeen to fifty, are either marshaled to the field or organized in reserves, ready to be summoned. One-third of the currency of the Confederacy has been annulled, and taxation of unprecedented amount has been exacted from all values. One-tenth of productions in kind has been claimed without pay, and besides, the residue and all property has been subjected to seizure and conversion for public use at moderate rates of just compensation. The railroads, the great means of internal trade and communication, are made primarily subservient to the necessities of Government. Even the great writ of personal liberty is suspended in cases requisite to preclude evasion of military service, or to repress uprisings of disaffection or disloyalty. In short, by their representatives, the people, not reluctantly, but eagerly and fearful rather of shortcoming than excess, have, through regular constitutional action, commanded for their country and its cause the labor, property, and lives of all. In the consciousness of such devotion and sacrifice to a righteous cause they may well feel reliant and indomitable, and await with constancy and faith the shock of coming battle. They have, too, much to encourage and every incentive to nerve and animate. Our enemies exhibit unmistakable evidences of despondency, of approaching bankruptcy, and internal convulsion. They will be, during the year, in the throes of intense political struggle, distracted beyond all precedent by the jars and strifes of acrimonious factions contending for the prize of almost despotic power and madly extravagant expenditure. To a large proportion of their people, and among them the wisest and the best, the vile faction who are the authors and prosecutors of the war are scarce less odious than to ourselves, and with nearly as much reason, since its triumph is the practical subversion of their Constitution and laws, and the precursor of speedy destruction to their, as surely as to our, liberties. If any redemption remains to the people of the United States from the wickedness and madness that have urged them to this war, it can only be by recurrence to the principles of self-government in the people of the States and to the counsels of peace.

All the indications of the incipient campaign, too, are auspicious and inspiring. Cheering accounts of successes greet us from every quarter of the Confederacy. Since the penning of the first pages of this report the notes of decisive victory, imperfectly heard from the remote confines of the trans-Mississippi, have been swollen by the acclaim from Paducah and Fort Pillow, and have culminated in the shouts of complete triumph at the brilliant achievements of a young and rising general of North Carolina on his native soil. Many minor successes contribute to justify grateful exultation, but all should fail to excite presumption, and only animate to greater effort and to humbler trust in the blessing of Heaven on our arms.

The greatest incentive yet remains. Our only outlet to existence and safety is through the portals of victory. We have burned the ships behind us. It will not do to fail. Subjected to the hate and brutality of our malignant foes, to what depths of penury, misery, and baseness should we not be crushed? Our Confederacy would be extinct; our States broken up; our institutions, social and industrial, uprooted, and our people stripped of property, liberty, and all rights, now and in coming generations, the thralls of Yankees and their allied hordes of miscreant foreigners, held to the tasks of drudgery and infamy by the insolent ministry of our slaves in arms. No conquered people would have ever writhed under such masters, nor have been stepped in such bitterness and infamy. For this end, shall we have made such priceless sacrifices of blood and treasure, and done and dared as our Army and people have in this war? Shall the hosts of our gallant dead—our “noble army of martyrs”—in vain have attested with their lives the sacredness and truth of their country's cause? Are they to live in memory not enshrined amid the halo of fame for the inspiration and reverence of future generations, but branded for warning and execration, with the lasting stigma of a rebel's name and a traitor's fate? Are the thousands and tens of thousands of the invalided, the scarred and maimed heroes of this war, instead of being followed through life with the homage of honor and gratitude, to drag out a wretched existence, the conspicuous objects of detestation, obloquy, and contempt? Shall we and ours, from the honored sires and beloved mothers to the maiden in her purity or the prattling innocent, with all our homes and means, be the victims or prey of Yankee insolence, cupidity, and hate? We cannot, in sober verity, afford to be conquered. Such existence offers no boon to tempt nor consolation to reconcile. In contrast, on the other hand, through the vista of no distant time, see the Confederacy of our choice established in power and dignity; our States in the benignant exercise of acknowledged sovereignty; the courage and virtue of our people tested and approved; our institutions, social and industrial, vindicated and freed from the malignant intermeddling of fanatic or insidious enemies, confirmed on the basis that so happily reconciles capital with labor and harmonizes dependence with protection, and the desolated homes and ravaged fields of our favored land restored and flourishing under the benignant smiles of peace and plenty. Let our people "look on this picture, and then on that," and choose. For it is a matter only of choice and the will to fulfill it. We have the numbers, the resources, and the means adequate to our certain redemption and triumph if only they be commanded, concentrated, and wielded with energy and unity by the will of a people unalterably fixed never to succumb, but to prefer release in the grave and refuge with God to the horrors and infamy of lasting slavery. We have only to act in this spirit, and humbly confiding in the favor of Heaven, we may be assured no distant day will witness the confusion and discomfiture of our enemies and the permanent attainment to us and our posterity, through the achievements of victory, of peace, freedom, and independence.

Respectfully submitted.

General S. COOPER,
Adjutant-General, Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: I feel it my duty to state to you that the number of the reserve corps is likely to fall below the estimate, as well as the reason for it. It is attributable to the course of the Governor of Georgia. If Governor Brown had complied with the requirements of the law of Congress and exempted those only who were necessary for the proper administration of the State government, we should have had several thousand more men in the service than we can get under his proclamation. That you may be fully apprised of what he has done I herewith inclose a copy of his exemption proclamation and a copy of a letter I addressed him on the subject, to which I have received no reply.

I am, general, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

HOWELL COBB,
Major-General, Commanding, &c.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Milledgeville, Ga., April 9, 1864.

THE PEOPLE OF GEORGIA:

As a vast number of letters are being received at this department inquiring what civil and military officers of this State are exempt from Confederate conscription, which makes the labor of answering each burdensome, I adopt this mode of giving a general reply.

The Congress of the Confederate States, prior to the session of the General Assembly last winter, had by act left it to the Legislatures of the respective States to say what State officers should be exempt from conscription, and our Legislature passed the following joint resolution, which was approved December 14, 1863:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Georgia in response to the law of the Confederate Congress inviting the several States to specify what State officers shall be exempt from conscription, That all civil and military officers of this State shall be so exempt.

The late act of Congress, known as the military act, exempts the members of the State Legislature and such other State officers as the Governors of the respective States may certify to be necessary for the proper administration of the State government.

In conformity to the resolution of the General Assembly, I have certified to the President that I claim as exempt all civil and military officers of this State. This embraces the judges of supreme court of this State and their clerk and deputy clerk, reporter and deputy reporter; all judges of the superior courts and one clerk and deputy clerk in each county, with one sheriff, one deputy sheriff, and one jailer for each county, with an additional deputy in each county embracing the larger cities, if the sheriff will file his affidavit that the services of such second deputy are actually necessary to enable him to discharge the duties of his office faithfully and promptly. The justices of the inferior court of each county, with their clerk and deputy clerk; the ordinary and his deputy clerk, all justices of the peace, and all lawful constables; all tax collectors, receivers of tax returns, county treasurers, county surveyors, and coroners; all mayors of cities and aldermen or councilmen who are made by the act of incorporation ex officio justices of the peace or State officers; all financial agents appointed by the Governor to aid in carrying into execution the laws of this State for the exportation of cotton and the importation of clothing and other supplies for Georgia soldiers in service, and the importation of cotton cards and articles necessary for the repair of the State road; the judge, clerk, and sheriff of each city court, and all officers and necessary employes of the State road; one notary public for each county, if appointed as the statute requires prior to this date; all state-house officers and the secretaries and clerks employed in each department; the staff officers of the Governor, including the adjutant and inspector general and his assistants; the aides-de-camp, the quartermaster, and commissary-general and their necessary assistants; the officers and cadets of the Georgia Military Institute, who together are made by law the engineer corps of this State; the chief of ordnance, and the superintendent and employes of the State armory under him, and all commissioned officers of the newly organized militia of this State, including the surgeons appointed under the act. The militia officers as well as the civil are protected from the date of their election. The militia officers under the old organization are protected by law till their commissions are suspended, which takes place in each senatorial district so soon as the Governor issues his order to that effect, which is to be done in ten days after the new organization in the district is completed. The officers and guards of the penitentiary, the officers and employés of the cotton card factory in Milledgeville.

If I have omitted any officer whom the law makes it my duty to protect, the fact will be made public when the omission is discovered.

As some of the enrolling officers in this State, from ignorance of their duty or disregard of the orders of their superiors, assume to command the officers of the State, and to sit in judgment upon the legality of their commissions, all the above-mentioned officers are hereby notified that the enrolling officers have no jurisdiction over them, and they will obey no orders from any Confederate officer. If they are seized by force and carried from their homes they will at once notify me of the fact.

Upon the demand of the enrolling officer, it will be the duty of each State officer to exhibit his commission if he has it with him; if not, to get and exhibit it in a reasonable time. In case of deputy sheriffs, deputy clerks, jailers, and constables, the law provides that the order of appointment by the person or court having the power of appointment shall constitute the commission.

The enrolling officers have no jurisdiction to try the legality of a commission issued from this department or from the court or person in whom the law vests the power to give commissions. In case any doubt arises as to the legality of a commission held by any person, or the enrolling officer has reason to suspect that it is a forgery, or that the holder is practicing any other imposition, such enrolling officer is respectfully invited to forward a statement of the facts to me at this place, and I will inform him promptly whether the person claiming to be an officer is such in fact, and will afford him every facility in my power to arrest any person who may have escaped under such false pretext. If the enrolling officers will adopt this course there will be no reason for conflict or misunderstanding.

In case of deputy sheriffs and deputy clerks of the several counties, the law does not limit the principal sheriff or clerk to a single deputy, but authorizes him to appoint "deputies." As I am satisfied, however, that one deputy is quite sufficient in any county, unless it may be in the office of sheriff in the larger cities, and that some of the counties may not need a deputy at all, I have thought that I carry out in its spirit, if not in its letter, the resolution of the Legislature when I refuse to protect more than one deputy for each clerk and sheriff in each county, except in case of the sheriffs of the counties embracing the larger cities, who upon their oaths declare that a second deputy is necessary, as above provided.

I regret to learn that able-bodied young men have in some cases been elected to inferior county, district, or militia offices to the exclusion of old men competent to fill the places; but as the constitution and laws give me no control over the decisions of the people in such cases, and no right to interfere with them in the exercise of the elective franchise, I have no discretion, but am obliged to commission those who are legally elected, and under the general rule of law am obliged to extend to them the same protection which is afforded to other commissioned officers. I know of individual cases where I regret this necessity imposed by a general rule of law, and would give the office to older men over whom they have succeeded, and send them to the Army if I could do so in the legal discharge of my duty. But I must yield to the choice of those who have the right to make the selection.

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA RESERVES,
Macon, April 21, 1864.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Governor, &c., Milledgeville, Ga.:

SIR: I have been assigned by the President to the command of the Georgia reserve force to be organized under the late act of Congress, calling the men between seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty into the service. Impelled by both duty and feeling I desire to make this force as efficient as possible. We are pressed on all sides by the overwhelming numbers of the enemy, and our own State is threatened both on the sea-board and the northwest. At no time since the war began has there existed so urgent a necessity for calling into the field every man capable of serving the country, and whose services are not more valuable at home than in the field. It is only necessary to state the proposition to receive your responsive approval. In your recent address to the people of Georgia, of the 9th instant, declaring who are exempt from military service, I find the following paragraph:

I regret to learn that able-bodied young men have in some cases been elected to inferior county, district, or militia offices to the exclusion of old men competent to fill the places; but as the constitution and laws give me no control over the decisions of the people in such cases, and no right to interfere with them in the exercise of the elective franchise, I have no discretion, but am obliged to commission those who are legally elected, and under the general rule of law am obliged to extend to them the same protection which is afforded to other commissioned officers. I know of individual cases where I regret this necessity imposed by a general rule of law, and would give the office to older men over whom they have succeeded, and send them to the Army if I could do so in the legal discharge of my duty. But I must yield to the choice of those who have the right to make the selection.

This expression of feeling authorizes the conclusion that Your Excellency desires to place in the military service of the country all that class whom you regret to find avoiding their duty by holding State commissions, but whose presence at home is not required for any State service. This class I fear is large, and with Your Excellency's co-operation I think can be withdrawn from their official retreats, and be brought into the service of their country, where their presence is called for by every consideration of duty and patriotism.

Allow me to call your attention to the language of the act of Congress under which these exemptions are made. It is as follows:

The Vice-President of the Confederate States, the members and officers of Congress, and of the several State Legislatures, and such other Confederate and State officers as the President or the Governors of the respective States may certify to be necessary for the proper administration of the Confederate or State governments, as the case may be.

You will perceive that Congress intended that those, and those only, should be exempted whom the Governors of the respective States may certify to be necessary for the proper administration of the State governments. I submit that the sweeping exemption of all civil and military officers of the State was never contemplated for a moment in the passage of this act; if so, the law could have so declared; but the object was to enable the Governor of each State to retain all who, in his judgment, were necessary for the administration of the State government. Hence the law, reposing confidence in the sound judgment and patriotic devotion of the State Executives, put these exemptions under the control of the Governor, whose certificate was alone required to authorize the exemption. If I am right in this view of the subject I should respectfully ask Your Excellency to consider whether all the officers exempted under your certificate are necessary for the proper administration of the State government. Allow me to allude to some of these officers in detail.

First. The number of sheriffs and their deputies, clerks of the superior and inferior courts and their deputies. The business of the courts is almost entirely suspended, and I seriously doubt if there is a county in Georgia where a single deputy is required in either of these offices. Sheriffs require a jailer in each county, but beyond that none of them have the least use for a deputy. In these two offices of sheriffs and clerks of courts there are probably over 400 deputies not needed at home for the business of their offices.

Second. There are in Georgia over 2,000 justices of the peace and over 1,000 constables. I think I may safely say that one justice of the peace can do all the business of any district in the State, and one-fourth of the constables could do all that appertains to that office. Could not all these offices be as well filled by men over fifty, and by not exempting any justice of the peace or constable of military age? I am sure no injury would be done to this branch of the State service, whilst the ranks of our Army would be considerably increased. I have been informed of districts where there has not been a justice of the peace for several years, but to obtain exemptions these offices have been sought and are now filled by men both liable and capable of doing military duty.

Third. The number of militia officers commissioned in the late organization of the active militia of Georgia is unknown to me, but from the best data in my possession I say they exceed 3,000, including field and staff officers and company officers. As all the men composing the active militia have been transferred to the Confederate service, I do not see that their services are required for the proper administration of the State government. I would respectfully suggest that when the militia over fifty and under seventeen are called out there will be found in their number those qualified to fill all the offices without withholding from the service for that purpose the able-bodied young men who now hold commissions as military officers. I do not know what proportion of the officers to whom I have alluded are between the ages of seventeen and fifty, but I am quite sure the State service would not suffer any grievous injury if all such were put into the regular military service of the country. There are doubtless other officers of the State with whom, and their necessity for State service, Your Excellency is better acquainted than I am. My object is to call your attention to all who at this trying and critical juncture can be induced or required to come forward and stand by their brethren in arms, in the defense of the rights and liberties of our State and Confederacy. I am aware that the Legislature at its late session resolved "That all civil and military officers of this State shall be exempt." To this, however, I would respectfully reply that the act of Congress did not submit this question to the respective Legislatures, but to the respective Governors, for decision, and I insist that the Legislature could not require the Governor to give a certificate that all civil and military officers of the State were necessary for the proper administration of the State government if, in point of fact, he did not believe that such was the case. They had no right, either legal or moral, to tax your conscience with a certificate which the laws of the country had submitted to your own decision. If, therefore, you believe, as I infer from your published address is your belief, and as I am sure every intelligent and patriotic man in the State will agree with you in saying, that all of these officers are not necessary to the proper administration of the State government, I submit that you would render the country great benefit by so modifying your certificate as to limit the exemption to those officers who are necessary to the proper administration of the State government, and allow and require all others to go into the military service of the country. I feel quite sure from my knowledge of the members of the Legislature that they did not contemplate such a result from their action as it now appears is likely to follow. Your action, I feel confident, in giving to the military service of the country all not necessary for the administration of the State government, will give to the members of the Legislature, in common with your fellow-citizens generally, real and sincere gratification.

It is to be regretted that the condition of the country demands so large a withdrawal of its population from the ordinary pursuits of life, but this is a necessity which cannot be avoided, however much it may be deplored. Besides, it is not justices of the peace, deputy sheriffs, clerks, and militia officers who are needed at home, but farmers and mechanics, and it is far better that as many of the latter and as few of the former as possible be withheld from service, as just as the number of sinecure deputies and militia officers at home increases, so the necessity for calling into the field more of our farmers and mechanics is increased. As it is important that the reserve force should be efficiently organized at the earliest possible day, I request your early attention to the subject.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HOWELL COBB,

Major-General, Commanding.

OFFICE COMMANDANT OF CONSCRIPTS FOR EAST LOUISIANA,

Mobile, April 28, 1864.

Col. JOHN S. PRESTON,

Superintendent of Conscription, Richmond, Va.:

COLONEL: I have the honor to state that I have temporarily established my office at this place. I have received reports from some of my officers exhibiting the fact that conscription in East Louisiana has thus far proved a failure. This failure arises not for the want of material upon which to operate, for such material is there and can be made available, but is entirely owing to the laxity and irregularities of officers sent there. They have been subject to no control; they have not been established at any regular posts; they have been furnished with none of the laws and orders touching conscription; they have not been paid since they entered the State; they have not been supplied with blanks, books, or stationery, and, in short, had they been disposed to exercise industry and energy, they could have accomplished nothing without organization as prescribed by your Bureau and an efficient and recognized head of the department. I have already taken steps with a view of bringing about this organization, and I am encouraged in the belief that out of the disorder that has spread itself throughout Eastern Louisiana, system and order can be inaugurated and that portion of our country brought within the influence and control of your Bureau. I deem it most important that I repair at the earliest practical moment to my field of action, and earnestly though respectfully urge that a quartermaster and commissary be sent me at this place as soon as possible. I cannot enter upon the discharge of my duties without them, and will therefore wait at this point for them to report to me. In the absence of a disbursing officer I have the honor to inclose an estimate* for funds required in my department. I would be glad if it could be referred to the officer designated by the Quartermaster-General as my quartermaster. I need not repeat how absolutely essential it is that in a country where towns are few, where there are no post quartermasters and commissaries, that the quartermaster of our bureau should come to us prepared to supply the wants of the department.

Asking your indulgence for the earnest manner in which I represent my wants,

I have the honor to be, colonel, your most obedient servant,

FRANK CLARKE,

SIR: Inclosed is the list of shipments of cotton, made via Nassau, referred to in the last communication to you from this office. It was by accident omitted therefrom and is now forwarded.

I regret that you were unable to provide Mr. Sharp with the means he needed, as the same was required for a special purpose. Please send in by the earliest opportunity so much of his order as you reserved the purchase of.

There is likely to be a diversion of some of the shipping which has heretofore gone to Nassau to Bermuda, between the apprehension of parties as to quarantine, and the action recently taken by the Government in chartering certain steamers to go to Bermuda, so as to remove some of the freight which has accumulated at that point. Let the department know as time goes on what effect all this may have on your facilities for shipping. Is freight ever paid on quartermaster's stores from Nassau in sterling?

You can consign any goods going to Mobile to Major Barnewall and such as go to Charlotte to Captain Crafts, the depot officers at those points. Major Hirsch, at Savannah, will receive anything that may reach that point.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 44. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, April 29, 1864.

I. The number of general staff officers, and the grade of each, allowed to the several commands in the field are established as follows:

1. To an army composed of two or more corps: A senior assistant adjutant and inspector general, and an assistant adjutant and inspector general, not to exceed the grade of colonel, each of whom may have two assistant adjutant and inspector generals, one not to exceed the grade of lieutenant-colonel, and the other of major. One of the assistants to the senior assistant adjutant and inspector general, selected with a view to his special qualifications for the duty, will be charged with the examination of court-martial records. A surgeon as medical director, who may be assisted by one other surgeon. A surgeon as medical inspector.

2. To an army corps: A senior assistant adjutant and inspector general, and an assistant adjutant and inspector general, not to exceed the grade of lieutenant-colonel, each of whom may have one assistant adjutant and inspector general, not to exceed the grade of major. A surgeon as medical director and inspector.

3. To a division: A senior assistant adjutant and inspector general, and an assistant adjutant and inspector general, not to exceed the grade of major. A surgeon as chief surgeon and inspector, who will also have charge of the field infirmary.

4. To a brigade: An assistant adjutant and inspector general, of the grade of captain. A brigade quartermaster and a brigade commissary, each of the grade of major, as now authorized by law. The senior surgeon will act as brigade surgeon and inspector. He will also have charge of the field infirmary, and perform at the same time his duties as regimental surgeon.

5. Each general officer will have the aides-de-camp allowed by law—one for a brigadier-general and two for all other general officers.

6. Cavalry divisions and brigades may each have an assistant adjutant and inspector general, not to exceed the grade of major, in addition to the number allowed infantry divisions and brigades.

II. Senior assistant adjutant and inspector generals and assistant adjutant and inspector generals may be required to alternate their duties.

III. The number and grade of the preceding general staff officers attached to the headquarters of a military department will be assimilated, according to the above scale, to the number of troops constituting the military force in the department. Special assignments in addition may be made by the War Department when the extent of country and nature and scope of duties may require it.

IV. The assistant adjutant and inspector generals will not be of higher grade than is herein designated. Should the general prefer an officer having a lower grade, he may be assigned to duty with the command.

V. General officers will report to the Adjutant and Inspector General all officers of the several staff departments now serving in their respective commands, and will at the same time recommend for reassignment such as may be required under the provisions of this order.

VI. All assignments of general staff officers will be made by order from this office, and they will not be changed except by like authority.

VII. Commands will not be allowed a greater number of staff officers than is herein established; nor will officers of the line be assigned to staff duty without special authority. Should it be deemed insufficient for the transmission of orders on the battle-field, couriers and guides (authorized in General Orders, No. 17, last series) will be employed by general officers, who will announce them in orders as persons accredited to convey their instructions and other communications.

VIII. Vacancies will be filled by selection from the officers of the department in which they occur.

IX. These orders being confined to the general staff proper, the organization of the other departments will not be affected by them.

X. Promotions in the general staff of the Army will be by selection and not by seniority, except in cases of known competency for higher grade.

By order:

S. COOPER,

HEADQUARTERS RESERVES OF NORTH CAROLINA,
Raleigh, April 29, 1864.

General S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General's Office:

GENERAL: After a full conference with Colonel Mallett, commandant of conscripts, and on examination of the reports of his enrolling officers in different parts of the State, I am pained to report that there is much disaffection in many of the counties, which, emboldened by the absence of troops, is being organized in some places to resist enrolling officers and persecute and prey upon the loyal and true citizens. At present my orders do not authorize me to act, as the reserve force is as yet without organization. I therefore respectfully suggest that my powers be extended so as to enable me to use any troops that may be available for the suppression of this insurrectionary spirit; and further, that in organizing the reserve force that I be authorized to separate the two classes, and as far as I may find necessary call the junior class (i. e., from seventeen to eighteen) into immediate service. This will take but little from the agricultural interest, and that little will be more than counterbalanced by the quiet and confidence incident to the security it will give to those that remain. An early answer is respectfully requested.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

TH. H. HOLMES,
Lieutenant-General.

APRIL [MAY] 5, 1864.

Respectfully referred to General Bragg for his consideration and counsel.

I had supposed it would be more judicious to mingle the youths of seventeen and eighteen with the older men. This, however, had reference rather to the morale and management of the former than to the individual interests to which General Holmes refers. There are, I suppose, no additional troops available for the service recommended.

MAY 29, 1864.

Special instructions have been given about calling out the reserves. I do not think the officer charged with the organization and equipment of reserves should have his duties complicated by any geographical command beyond what is necessary for that purpose, and it is especially objectionable that military officers should be at all mixed up with the unfortunate political dissensions in our States.

BRAXTON BRAGG,

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, April 30, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to submit my report concerning the operations of the conscription service from the 1st of January to the 1st of April, 1864. This report indicates but a very meager portion of the work which has been performed. The results are the scanty gleanings from an almost unlimited and nearly exhausted field of labor, every inch of which has to be searched, analyzed, and classified in every relation to the great problem of recruiting and maintaining the armies.

No attribute which pertains to society or civil economy but has been subjected to the scrutiny and action of this Bureau and its agencies. With the incompetent means under its control, all has been done which could be effected by zeal and diligence. The results indicate this grave consideration for the Government, that fresh material for the armies can no longer be estimated as an element of future calculation for their increase, and that necessity demands the invention of devices for keeping in the ranks the men now borne on the rolls. The stern revocation of all details, an appeal to the patriotism of the States claiming large numbers of able-bodied men, and the accretions by age, are now almost the only unexhausted sources of supply. For conscription from the general population, the functions of this Bureau may cease with the termination of the year 1864.

Papers A, B, C, and D are the reports of the officers of this Bureau relative to matters with which they are respectively charged and exhibiting statements and views which I deem worthy of your consideration.*

Papers E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, and N, hereto attached, exhibit the various operations of the conscript service in the diverse functions allotted to it. From these, however, are excluded an immense mass of work which it is not deemed necessary to report, because it is of a character not demanding record in this Bureau.

The returns furnished are unavoidably incomplete, and I respectfully refer to the latter portion of this report for the explanation.

Papers O and P will exhibit very valuable reports from Colonel Blake, the registrar of this Bureau, in regard to the military capabilities of Georgia and Virginia.* Within a few days I expect to receive from the same intelligent and zealous officer similar reports on North Carolina, South Carolina, and Alabama.

Paper Q is a list of the enrolling officers whose commissions have been vacated.* The case is fully stated below.

These various exhibits show that much good work has been done, although the numbers recorded in this Bureau do not manifest a large increase to the Army. A rigid and universal inspection, not only of company rolls, but personal and also pay rolls, will prove that more men have been received into the service irregularly since the 1st of January than have gone through the conscription authorities. The results of conscription since the 1st of January have not been equal to the anticipations of the country, and, perhaps, not quite up to the calculations of this Bureau.

I. The act of Congress entitled "An act to put an end to the exemption from military service of those who have heretofore furnished substitutes" (approved January 5, 1864), has not furnished the number of men which it was supposed would be brought into the service by that law. It has been found that a number of persons having substitutes come within the classes exempted by the act of February 17, 1864, and other large numbers belong to those classes who are the subjects of detail for the industrial productions. Wealthy farmers, enterprising manufacturers, and mechanics were the persons chiefly furnishing substitutes. Besides these many patriotic persons of feeble health, but within the conditions of the regulations, sent in substitutes, and on being enrolled have been detailed for service out of the field. The Bureau, under your instruction, has been very cautious in allowing such details. I regret to state that there seems to have been a general effort to keep principals of substitutes out of the Army.

It is proper to add that the calculation of enrolling officers is, that a larger number of this class have gone into the Army without reporting to the enrolling officers than have been passed by them through the camps. The result of the law, therefore, has been better than is exhibited by the records of this Bureau.

II. It has been found exceedingly difficult to interpret the "act to organize forces to serve during the war," so as to adapt its provisions to just administration under the agencies provided for conscription. The purpose of the law seems to be that while all men are made liable to military service the productive industry must be maintained as necessary to the public defense. Under the classes of exemption there are but a limited number engaged in production. Of persons "owning fifteen able-bodied hands" a very small minority produce more than they consume, rarely having a surplus of grain or meat to sell, and a large majority of such persons between the ages of seventeen and fifty are already in the service. The surplus producers, those on whom the country and the Army must depend for supplies, are the classes having much less than "fifteen hands," and down to single laborers on farms. As numerous as this class is, it has already been drained of men to a point which requires great caution in making further abstractions. My opinion is that the agriculture of the country cannot safely spare more than a very small additional draft. I am not sure that the public defense would not be strengthened instead of weakened by adding to the labor thus employed.

III. In manufactures and mechanical arts the like necessities seem to exist. Perhaps no civilized country was ever so barren of manufactures and mechanical arts as the States of the Confederacy at the beginning of the war; and certainly no country, since the blockade was established, has needed them more. No one article of clothing or mechanical production was supplied within these States, so that, under the blockade, it has become an absolute necessity, even for the meager supply now existing, that every manufacturer and mechanic should be kept to his art. As the stock which existed at the beginning of war approaches absolute exhaustion this necessity of course increases. Prudence requires great caution in further diminishing this class. The Army and the people must be fed and clothed, and the munitions of war must be furnished, and the persons engaged in these purposes are already too few for the ends. It is in the class of non-producers that the enrolling officer must chiefly look for his recruits to the Army, and it is in determining who these non-producers are that the conscript authorities are engaged in hourly contest with every authority, every prejudice, every interest, and every fear which exists in the Confederacy. Governors and judges demand some local convenience; others, pecuniary or other interests, and the needs of every occupation are magnified into public necessities. Towns and cities demand able-bodied men for police; banks and brokers, for clerks; charitable institutions, for wardens; public functionaries, for subalterns, and all on the plea that such are necessary for the public good. There is one universal effort to keep men from the field. Since I took charge of this Bureau no authority, association, or individual has offered one man to the military service. Against all this the conscription authorities are daily contending. The results evince that the officers have been doing their duty.

IV. I regret that I am compelled to report that in no department of Government has the law been rigidly complied with in the matter of details. The plea of public necessity has been so strenuously urged and so distinctly proved that continuations have been allowed beyond the contemplation of law. I respectfully recommend that as soon as the reserves are organized the law be rigidly enforced.

V. The functions of conscription are now narrowed down to a system of delicate gleanings from the population of the country, involving the most laborious, patient, cautious, and intelligent investigation into the relations of every man to the public defense. There are but few left whose appropriate duties in those relations have not been defined, and it thence becomes the province of the conscription agents to weigh and determine whether those relations may not be disturbed for the purpose of sending more men into the field and distributing them for the general service.

The efficiency of the Bureau in these investigations has been seriously impaired by the failure to retain in office about seventy officers, selected by you for their peculiar fitness for and accurate training in these duties.

These officers (paper Q*) were selected by you with great care and accurate discrimination and appointed or assigned to enrolling service. With few exceptions, all other officers in that service were assigned by accident or by reason of unfitness for other duties; and from this cause, when I came to the Bureau, I found the service confused and languid, and the administration of the conscript laws necessarily unsatisfactory. Chiefly by the zealous and intelligent aid of these seventy officers thus selected, the system was organized and the administration became fruitful, not only in men for the field, but in managing the external police of the armies, and also in furnishing a large amount of information on which to base the military policy of the country. These officers were the chiefs who controlled, informed, and energized the ungenial agencies filtered into the conscript from the debris of the general service. They were the practiced and trained soldiers and judges on whom I relied to sustain me in my hard duty of wringing from the wasted population the scanty remnant of men, and at the same time to preserve, as far as our military need would permit, the enfeebled productive energies of the country. These officers have been discharged by the operation of a law which does not provide adequate compensation to the public service.

In the States of Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina these officers were the principal agents of conscription, and in these States conscription has been eminently successful. In Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida the officers were altogether casual, and from these States came all the complaints of the evils and failures of conscription.

The Invalid-Corps bill has furnished no substitutes for these officers, and I have no authority to ask or receive officers from any other source except such as may be sent by the casualties of the field, or on declarations of incompetence. I cannot too strongly express my dismay at the almost certain prospect of the utter failure of the conscription service during the coming vital campaign if it is made dependent on the accidental officers who are fitfully and irregularly assigned to its duties. On the 1st day of April no branch of the public service was working with more order and efficiency than that under the control of this Bureau. All obstacles and impediments—and they were of the gravest character—were yielding to the intelligence, the indomitable zeal and devotion of the officers. On the 1st day of May over a large portion of the Confederacy the service will be paralyzed. Leaving out the plea of harsh and cruel dealing with these officers, a large majority of whom are disabled by wounds and disease, and have resigned higher to take inferior commissions, I regard this statement I have made as sufficient warrant for me to suggest a recommendation that Congress make some provision for reinstating these officers in the enrolling service with their proper commissions.

VI. Another grave interruption has come of the occasional, but too frequent, assignment of officers commanding in the field to the duty of conscription and recruiting in particular localities. In every instance this has unduly disturbed the production of the country—has violated legal rights—has failed to send men into the field—and has been unjust to the general service. In no instance has an officer commanding in the field, charged with local conscription, sent a conscript out of his department. The assumption by local authorities to determine liability to service has uniformly been detrimental, keep-

VII. In my report of December 5, 1863, I estimated that nearly one-third more men went into the field directly under the compulsion of the law than passed through the camps of instruction. My belief is that the proportion has been increased since the passage of the acts of January 5 and February 17—that is, that the conscript rolls and assignments will not exhibit one-half the number of men who have gone into the service since the 5th of January. Proper returns to the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office should make an accurate exhibit of these accretions. General orders have been inoperative to prevent this mode of direct volunteering; and requisitions for the men by enrolling officers and this Bureau have been unheeded. The abuse exists in every military department. Your attention is respectfully and earnestly invited to this matter, and a rigid inspection of company rolls is recommended.

VIII. The applications for details in the various departments of the Government and in other pursuits have increased and are daily increasing. The allegation of public necessity is generally set forth, and it is very difficult for this Bureau to determine. I have endeavored to limit such details as rigidly as possible, but have not succeeded to the extent which it appears to me the public service demands. My opinion is that all proper labor, except of mechanical experts and agriculturists, can, by due effort, be furnished from the exempt classes, the reserves, the light-duty conscripts, and the Invalid Corps, and that there is no absolute necessity, at this time, for one detail in ten of the able-bodied men between eighteen and forty-five. I believe stern adherence to a rule embracing this conclusion would not diminish the vigor of the productive industry to any appreciable extent.

The exceptions are very rare which involve a permanent necessity of departing from the provisions of sections 8 and 9 of the act of February 17, 1864. At present there is not one department of the Government or one enterprise in the country which is not clamoring for such departure. The various bureaus of Government ask over 12,000 able-bodied men. The railroads ask at least one brigade beyond the allowance of exemptions. The express companies demand nearly a regiment, and State authorities fully 10,000. Wherever a contract is made with the Government, in which a large profit is provided, the Government is immediately called upon to do the work for which it pays. Thus a railroad, an express, telegraph, or manufacturing company contracts with the Government and lays its profits; it then asks the Government to detail from the Army or abstain from the military use of all the labor necessary to fulfill the contract. The evil is an enormous one. The authority of this Bureau is not competent to the remedy.

IX. In many localities it has been found expedient, indeed necessary, to suspend wholly or partially the operations of conscription. This has been done in localities between the lines of our armies and those of the enemy—so far as the reserve classes are concerned—for the obvious reason of preventing those classes from becoming prisoners of war, and it has been extended to all classes within the enemy's lines from the impossibility of the enrolling officers operating. In the First Congressional District of North Carolina the whole matter has been turned over to the Governor of that State, the men to be used for State defense.

X. Frequent complaints are made of the inefficiency and corruption of the enrolling officers. Such complaints are made against the generals in the field and all the departments of the Government. In the case of enrolling officers they are sometimes well founded, and active efforts are made to remedy the evils. In general, however, these complaints are the results of ignorance, or the baffled endeavor to escape the service, or of malice, because the duty of the officers of conscription requires them to exempt certain persons for sufficient legal reasons. I can congratulate you on the assurance that the chief officers in the enrolling service discharge their duties with as much zeal, intelligence, and efficiency as any officers in the Government. There may be defects in the administration of the conscript laws and dereliction among the officers, but I have no hesitation in asserting that the country and the Government has just reason to be satisfied both with the system and the officers. As to the officers of this Bureau immediately under my eye, I have, without undue assumption, great pride in testifying to their zeal, their apt intelligence, their untiring industry and absorbing devotion in the public service.

In view of the important and delicate service you have confided to my administration, I cannot refrain from the expression of my grateful acknowledgment to you and to the eminent public servant who acts as your assistant for the patient and courteous consideration you have given to all my applications, and for the enlightened, judicious, and prompt instructions by which you have authorized and enabled me to execute your orders. Of the nature, the extent, the intricacy, and the delicacy of the duties to be performed by the conscription authorities, you have, and what is extremely rare in the country, a full and clear comprehension, and in their performance you have generously permitted me to avail myself habitually of your direct and minute counsels.

JOHN S. PRESTON,

N.—SUMMARY.

From the reports now in this Bureau, it appears that for the months of December, January, February, and March, 7,513 conscripts were assigned to the Army, 2,325 volunteers were assigned to the Army, 8,306 deserters were returned to the Army—18,144 increase to the Army.

The reports of the number of persons exempted by law and orders of the War Department are not complete. The number so reported in North Carolina has not been fully reported, and the commandant has been directed to furnish this information.

In Alabama and Mississippi the number exempt by law and orders up to 1st of January is given, but not the number exempt by boards of examination.

The total number of persons detailed in Alabama and Mississippi is not known, as the reports of the number detailed is up to the 1st of January, 1864.

Taking the number detailed in those States at that time, there are 13,142 conscripts detailed.

Upon the same reports, exclusive of North Carolina, there are 20,435 conscripts exempted by law and orders, 5,847 conscripts exempted by boards of examination.

The commandants of Alabama and Mississippi have been written to to furnish a complete report of the operations of conscription in those States, and as soon as their reports are received they will be forwarded. It is a matter of much difficulty to obtain accurate reports from these States, owing to the confusion of the service and to the very meager reports (in some instances none) from no records having been kept. All these details and exemptions are now revoked, and new ones will have to be issued under the late act of Congress, which went into operation on the 1st of April, 1864.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, TREASURY DEPT.,

Richmond, April 30, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

SIR: I have just received a communication addressed you by Colonel Bayne of the 2d instant,* and indorsed by you on the 4th, requesting a reply to certain inquiries of the Quartermaster-General respecting contracts to pay for supplies for his department in cotton. Since the late act of Congress and the regulations issued in execution thereof, it seems to me that the policy of the Government on that subject is changed, and that no new contracts should be made for the delivery of cotton in payment of contracts. It would be better to put an end to some of the existing contracts and take to the Government the benefit of the entire shipment of Government cotton. The difficulty which meets every arrangement is transportation; and inasmuch as only a very limited amount can be transported to the Atlantic ports, there will be a continual contest for that amount. The demands upon the Government abroad require that it should have the preference in shipments. Every contract, therefore, which gives to individuals a right to ship cotton is so far an injury to the Government. It would be better, it seems to me, for the Government to ship on its own account all the cotton which it can transport, and from the proceeds of sale to pay for supplies in money abroad.

Respectfully,

C. G. MEMMINGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

[Indorsement.]

MAY 4, 1864.

To Colonel Bayne for remarks.*

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

RICHMOND, May 2, 1864.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

You are assembled under circumstances of deep interest to your country, and it is fortunate that, coming as you do newly elected by the people and familiar with the condition of the various localities, you will be the better able to devise measures adapted to meet the wants of the public service without imposing unnecessary burdens on the citizen. The brief period which has elapsed since the last adjournment of Congress has not afforded sufficient opportunity to test the efficacy of the most important laws then enacted, nor have the events occurring in the interval been such as materially to change the state of the country.

The unjust war commenced against us in violation of the rights of the States, and in usurpation of power not delegated to the Government of the United States, is still characterized by the barbarism with which it has heretofore been conducted by the enemy. Aged men, helpless women, and children appeal in vain to the humanity which should be inspired by their condition for immunity from arrest, incarceration, or banishment from their homes. Plunder and devastation of the property of non-combatants, destruction of private dwellings, and even of edifices devoted to the worship of God; expeditions organized for the sole purpose of sacking cities, consigning them to the flames, killing the unarmed inhabitants, and inflicting horrible outrages on women and children, are some of the constantly recurring atrocities of the invader. It cannot reasonably be pretended that such acts conduce to any end which their authors dare avow before the civilized world, and sooner or later Christendom must mete out to them the condemnation which such brutality deserves. The suffering thus ruthlessly inflicted upon the people of the invaded districts has served but to illustrate their patriotism. Entire unanimity and zeal for their country's cause have been pre-eminently conspicuous among those whose sacrifices have been the greatest. So the Army, which has borne the trials and dangers of the war, which has been subjected to privations and disappointments (tests of manly fortitude far more severe than the brief fatigues and perils of actual combat), has been the center of cheerfulness and hope. From the camp comes the voice of the soldier patriots invoking each who is at home, in the sphere he best may fill, to devote his whole energies to the support of a cause in the success of which their confidence has never faltered. They—the veterans of many a hard-fought field—tender to their country, without limit of time, a service of priceless value to us, one which posterity will hold in grateful remembrance.

In considering the state of the country the reflection is naturally suggested that this is the Third Congress of the Confederate States of America. The Provisional Government was formed, its Congress held four sessions, lived its appointed term, and passed away. The permanent Government was then organized, its different departments established, a Congress elected, which also held four sessions, served its full constitutional term, and expired. You, the Second Congress under the permanent Government, are now assembled at the time and place appointed by law for commencing your session. All these events have passed into history, notwithstanding the threat of our prompt subjugation made three years ago by a people that presume to assert a title to govern States whose separate and independent sovereignty was recognized by treaty with France and Great Britain in the last century, and remained unquestioned for nearly three generations. Yet these very governments, in disregard of duty and treaty obligations which bind them to recognize as independent Virginia and other Confederate States, persist in countenancing by moral influence, if not in aiding by unfair and partial action, the claim set up by the Executive of a foreign Government to exercise despotic sway over the States thus recognized, and treat the invasion of them by their former limited and special agent as though it were the attempt of a sovereign to suppress a rebellion against lawful authority. Ungenerous advantage has been taken of our present condition, and our rights have been violated, our vessels of war detained in ports to which they had been invited by proclamations of neutrality, and in one instance our flag also insulted where the sacred right of asylum was supposed to be secure; while one of these governments has contented itself with simply deprecating, by deferential representations, the conduct of our enemy in the constantly recurring instances of his contemptuous disregard of neutral rights and flagrant violations of public law. It may be that foreign governments, like our enemies, have mistaken our desire for peace, unreservedly expressed, for evidence of exhaustion, and have thence inferred the probability of success in the effort to subjugate or exterminate the millions of human beings who, in these States, prefer any fate to submission to their savage assailants. I see no prospect of an early change in the course heretofore pursued by these governments; but when this delusion shall have been dispelled and when our independence by the valor and fortitude of our people shall have been won against all the hostile influences combined against us, and can no longer be ignored by open foes or professed neutrals, this war will have left with its proud memories a record of many wrongs which it may not misbecome us to forgive, some for which we may not properly forbear from demanding redress. In the meantime it is enough for us to know that every avenue of negotiation is closed against us; that our enemy is making renewed and strenuous efforts for our destruction, and that the sole resource for us as a people secure in the justice of our cause and holding our liberties to be more precious than all other earthly possessions, is to combine and apply every available element of power for their defense and preservation.

On the subject of the exchange of prisoners I greatly regret to be unable to give you satisfactory information. The Government of the United States, while persisting in failure to execute the terms of the cartel, make occasional deliveries of prisoners and then suspend action without apparent cause. I confess my inability to comprehend their policy or purpose. The prisoners held by us, in spite of humane care, are perishing from the inevitable effects of imprisonment and the homesickness produced by the hopelessness of release from confinement. The spectacle of their suffering augments our longing desire to relieve from similar trials our own brave men who have spent so many weary months in a cruel and useless imprisonment, endured with heroic constancy. The delivery, after a suspension of some weeks, has just been resumed by the enemy; but as they give no assurance of intent to carry out the cartel, an interruption of the exchange may recur at any moment.

The reports of the departments, herewith submitted, are referred to for full information in relation to the matters appertaining to each. There are two of them on which I deem it necessary to make special remark. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury states facts justifying the conclusion that the law passed at the last session for the purpose of withdrawing from circulation the large excess of Treasury notes heretofore issued has had the desired effect, and that by the 1st of July the amount in circulation will have been reduced to a sum not exceeding $230,000,000. It is believed to be of primary importance that no further issue of notes should take place, and that the use of the credit of the Government should be restricted to the two other modes provided by Congress, viz, the sale of bonds and the issue of certificates bearing interest for the price of supplies purchased within our limits. The law as it now stands authorizes the issue by the Treasury of new notes to the extent of two-thirds of the amount received under its provisions. The estimate of the amount funded under the law is shown to be $300,000,000, and if two-thirds of this sum be reissued we shall have an addition of $200,000,000 to our circulation, believed to be already ample for the business of the country. The addition of this large sum to the volume of the currency would be attended by disastrous effects and would produce the speedy recurrence of the evils from which the funding law has rescued the country. If our arms are crowned with the success which we have so much reason to hope, we may well expect that this war cannot be prolonged beyond the current year, and nothing would so much retard the beneficent influence of peace on all the interests of our country as the existence of a great mass of currency not redeemable in coin. With our vast resources the circulation, if restricted to its present volume, would be easily manageable, and by gradual absorption in payment of public dues would give place to the precious metals, the only basis of a currency adapted to commerce with foreign countries. In our present circumstances I know of no mode of providing for the public wants which would entail sacrifices so great as a fresh issue of Treasury notes, and I trust that you will concur in the propriety of absolutely forbidding any increase of those now in circulation.

Officers have been appointed and dispatched to the trans-Mississippi States and the necessary measures taken for the execution of the laws enacted to obviate delays in administering the Treasury and other Executive Departments in those States, but sufficient time has not elapsed to ascertain the results.

In relation to the most important of all subjects at the present time, the efficiency of our armies in the field, it is gratifying to assure you that the discipline and instruction of the troops have kept pace with the improvement in material and equipment. We have reason to congratulate ourselves on the results of the legislation on this subject, and on the increased administrative energy in the different bureaus of the War Department, and may not unreasonably indulge anticipations of commensurate success in the ensuing campaign.

The organization of reserves is in progress, and it is hoped they will be valuable in affording local protection without requiring details and detachments from active force.

Among the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary of War, your attention is specially invited to those in which legislation is suggested on the following subjects, viz:

The tenure of office of the general officers in the Provisional Army, and a proper discrimination in the compensation of the different grades.

The provision required in aid of invalid officers who have resigned in consequence of wounds or sickness contracted while in service.

The amendment of the law which deprives officers in the field of the privilege of purchasing rations, and thus adds to their embarrassment, instead of conferring the benefit intended.

The organization of the general staff of the Army, in relation to which a special message will shortly be addressed to you, containing the reasons which compel me to withhold my approval of a bill passed by your predecessors at too late a period of the session to allow time for returning it for their reconsideration.

The necessity for an increase in the allowance now made for the transportation of officers traveling under orders.

The mode of providing officers for the execution of the conscript laws.

The means of securing greater dispatch and more regular administration of justice in examining and disposing of the records of cases reported from the courts-martial and military courts in the Army.

The recent events of the war are highly creditable to our troops, exhibiting energy and vigilance combined with the habitual gallantry which they have taught us to expect on all occasions. We have been cheered by important and valuable successes in Florida, Northern Mississippi, Western Tennessee and Kentucky, Western Louisiana, and Eastern North Carolina, reflecting the highest honor on the skill and conduct of our commanders, and on the incomparable soldiers whom it is their privilege to lead. A naval attack on Mobile was so successfully repulsed at the outer works that the attempt was abandoned, and the nine-months' siege of Charleston has been practically suspended, leaving that noble city and its fortresses imperishable monuments to the skill and fortitude of its defenders. The armies in Northern Georgia and in Northern Virginia still oppose with unshaken front a formidable barrier to the progress of the invader, and our generals, armies, and people are animated by cheerful confidence.

Let us, then, while resolute in devoting all our energies to securing the realization of the bright auspices which encourage us, not forget that our humble and most grateful thanks are due to Him without whose guidance and protecting care all human efforts are of no avail, and to whose interposition are due the manifold successes with which we have been cheered.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 45. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, May 2, 1864.

I. To prevent straggling in the Army, commanding officers, upon the receipt of orders to move from one command to another, will forward to the general commanding to whom he is ordered to report a field return, which will exhibit the present strength of their commands. When their destination is reached a like return will be made to the same commander, upon which the number and names of the absentees and the cause of their absence will be stated. Similar returns will be forwarded to the Adjutant and Inspector General. Officers will be held strictly accountable by commanding generals for any straggling that may occur with their troops.

II. Special attention is called to the appropriation by impressment of horses for cavalry service. It is without warrant of law and will not be allowed under any circumstances whatever. Commanding generals and inspecting officers will promptly report to this office any violation of this order.

III. Prisoners captured south of Richmond will be sent direct to Andersonville, Sumter County, Ga.

IV. Special agents to make purchases or secure shipment of supplies will not be sent to any foreign port except in cases of most urgent necessity, of which necessity report will be made immediately to the Secretary of War. All purchases will be made by agents under orders from the Secretary of War, or by officers charged with the export and importation of cotton and purchase of foreign supplies, or by officers or agents acting under express authority from the general commanding the Trans-Mississippi Department.

V. All horses impressed by the Government sold or in any manner assigned to officers will be immediately restored to the Quartermaster's Department, to be appropriated to the public service as contemplated by law. Such sales and assignments by order of a commanding general are prohibited and will not be sanctioned.

VI. Every officer hereafter appearing in behalf of a prisoner on trial before a military court or court-martial will do so only upon the condition and understanding that he is under a pledge of honor that he has not and will not receive compensation therefor.

VII. The Bureau of Conscription will proceed at once to organize into companies and cause to be mustered into service the reserve forces in the several States enrolled in pursuance of General Orders, No. 33, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series. For this purpose district enrolling officers are authorized to act as mustering and inspecting officers. They will superintend the election of company officers, and forward the muster-rolls certified by them, with the certificates of election, to the commandant of conscripts for the State in which such companies may be organized, to be by him turned over to the general commanding the reserve forces.

VIII. Upon receiving the muster-rolls the general commanding the reserve forces will issue orders placing in commission and upon duty the officers named in the certificates, if competent; and, reserving copies, will forward the original rolls, with certified copies of their orders inclosed, to this Bureau for file. If there be reason to doubt the competency of an officer elect, his qualifications and fitness for commission will be inquired into and reported upon by a board to be convened by the general commanding, in accordance with General Orders, No. 39, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, series of 1862.

IX. Each company of infantry must consist of at least sixty-four privates; of cavalry, sixty privates; of artillery, eighty-four privates. The muster into service of new companies in the reserve forces having a less number of privates is positively prohibited.

X. Paragraph XVII, General Orders, No. 42, current series, is thus amended:

The tobacco ration issued to enlisted men will be one pound per month.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

RICHMOND, VA., May 2, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: On the 26th ultimo I had the honor to address the Honorable Secretary of the Treasury asking his construction of the thirteenth regulation. My letter is returned with the following indorsement:

* * * * *

When cotton is delivered by the Government to a vessel for freight or supplies upon a contract approved by the Treasury Department, the whole quantity can be shipped without hindrance, and the Government only claims one-half the remaining tonnage.

I have not understood that contracts for supplies and munitions of war would require any other approval than yours, and I have supposed that such cotton as the War Department might pay for importations, or freight upon the same, would become entitled to the privilege of the thirteenth regulation upon the certificate of the agent of the War Department at the port of entry that it had been so paid. The Honorable Secretary of the Treasury's indorsement seems to convey a different impression, and I have the honor, therefore, to request specific instructions upon these points. In this connection I beg to invite your attention to a question of some importance which it would be well to decide distinctly at once. From what appropriation will the cotton needed to pay for importations and freight on same be purchased? Will the importations and the freight be paid for out of the $20,000,000 appropriation for the purpose of making "purchases of cotton, naval stores, and other produce, under the direction of the President, to meet the engagements of the Government and to purchase necessary army, navy, and other supplies?" Or will each bureau and department provide out of its appropriation the funds to purchase cotton to cover cost of the importations for its account? My own opinion is that the first view is the correct one. The second would entail upon the agents of the War Department the very complications it has been so long the object to get rid of. Every bureau and department would have a cotton account, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, to bring forward to the ports the proportions needed by the several bureaus and departments. The plan proposed is to have at each port one stock of cotton and one disbursing agent, who would pay for such importations and freights as were chargeable to any department of the Government. It is the simplest and best, and, as it seems to me, the one contemplated by the language of the $20,000,000 appropriation, as well as by the "regulations for the purchase, transportation, and shipment abroad of tobacco, cotton, &c.," established by yourself and the Honorable Secretaries of the Navy and the Treasury, and approved by the President, for, manifestly, if you had not so thought, the seventh regulation, which provides for the transfer to the Treasury Department of the cotton, &c., now owned by the various departments, would have been omitted, inasmuch as such departments would have to make other purchases to pay for importations and freights.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. L. BAYNE,
Lieutenant-Colonel.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., May 2, 1864.

Maj. Gen. HOWELL COBB:

GENERAL: I have regretted being unable sooner to reply to the inquiries of your letter to General Cooper on the subject of local reserves, but hope that no inconvenience has resulted, as I had full conference with Colonel Browne, of the President's staff, before his departure to superintend conscription in Georgia, and requested him to confer with you and explain fully the views of the Department.

There is no doubt that before the expiration of the thirty days after notice allowed by the law organizations may be formed by volunteering under the law, and that such should be received with the officers elected by the men. Upon the expiration of the thirty days the men enrolled (being called together in each county or more convenient divisions) will be arranged into companies and allowed to elect their officers, and then turned over to you for organization. I would have preferred to have the men simply enrolled and turned over to you, but I did not see how, without a double set of officers, the agencies of the Conscript Bureau could well be dispensed with in the arrangement into companies and the preliminary steps to organization. Further than may be necessary for the purposes of organization, I do not deem it desirable to have these local reserves either placed or kept in camps. My own conviction of policy is very decided that the men of the reserves should be as little taken from their homes and avocations as possible, and should only be called into service in great emergencies or to repel raids. This opinion is likewise entertained by the President in somewhat less degree, and he may be disposed to call them into service somewhat more freely.

The general rule, however, will undoubtedly be retention at home. The possibility of doing this and yet holding the men organized and ready for service just as quick and for as brief a period as may be necessary, constitutes the great advantage of this organization over that of militia or State forces.

I will endeavor to secure as large a measure of exemption from active service as may be at all consistent with defense. Some few companies or regiments may constitute an exception, as some of the local forces will be required for guards in towns and at bridges or prisons, and I think some of the organizations already formed as special service ones (which contemplated something like general employment) should be selected, or some should be formed specially of material most easily to be spared, with a view to these kinds of service.

In the selection of officers men in active service cannot be chosen from the field even for promotion except under the liability of having their acceptance approved by the superior officers, and, indeed, I do not think it advisable attention should be called to the selection of such, as the refusal of the superiors in the field is the most probable, and the officers thus precluded would be apt to feel aggrieved.

Many very efficient officers may be obtained from the invalided and retired class or from those by various circumstances thrown out of active service, and it is very desirable the selection should be from them. The companies heretofore formed for special service should be required to conform their engagements to service in the State, and then be retained as reserves. If they do not consent they can, whenever desirable, be disbanded and the material organized into companies of the reserves. They will probably prefer generally to maintain these organizations and will readily conform.

You will exercise your discretion as to the various branches of the service into which you will throw the reserves. There should undoubtedly be some cavalry and artillery, but the proportion and the localities where to be raised or stationed are for your judgment. Every effort will be made to properly arm and equip the reserve forces, and requisitions should be made by you or the proper bureau as for armies in the field. Of course, with our limited resources, those organizations most likely to be called on from the exposure of the localities, and those reputed to be kept most constantly in service, will be prepared and first supplied. In regard to the care of the arms, I had supposed they might be safely intrusted to the possession of the men; but if you think otherwise, and that they had better be kept stored in convenient depots, you will adopt that course.

Quartermasters, surgeons, &c., should, as far as practicable, be found among the men of the reserves, and should hold office and receive compensation as the men when in service. Some few might be necessary for more permanent service, and should be so appointed.

In relation to brigadiers, General Jackson will probably be assigned you, and Colonel Gartrell appointed as soon as his brigade is organized. The President conceives he cannot properly appoint before such organization. The same rule will be followed should other brigadiers be required.

I believe I have covered all the points of your letter. I did not answer fully your last letter, because I had explained my views in reference to the policy of pursuing the conscript system rather than relying on volunteering, and I had no satisfaction in recurring to a subject when I had the misfortune to dissent from one in whose judgment I habitually placed great reliance.

With my best wishes, most cordially yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Milledgeville, Ga., May 2, 1864.

Brig. Gen. GEORGE T. ANDERSON:

SIR: I hereby acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th ultimo,* accompanied by the resolutions which purport to have been "almost unanimously adopted" by the men composing your brigade,

---

* Not found.

condemning my action in convening the Legislature in extra session, and denouncing my message and the action of the Legislature as "unwise and unpatriotic" and intended to "subserve partisan interests." The preamble also speaks of the willingness of those whom you denounce to sacrifice everything to "self-aggrandizement and personal ambition" and of "prostituting the dignity of high office to the accomplishment of unholy ends."

Those who deal thus with the actions and motives of others should be prompted only by the most lofty patriotism and the purest motives, and should themselves be above suspicion of "personal ambition for self-aggrandizement" or of a desire to "subserve partisan interests."

How will the motives and acts of those who were the originators and managers of this meeting, and who covered the President with laudation so fulsome as to be offensive to modest merit, while they denounced the acts and impugned the motives of the Governor and Legislature of their own State, stand the test of the just rule above mentioned?

If I mistake not, the name of the chairman of the meeting, who is a brigadier-general, has been mentioned by his friends for promotion to the position of major-general. Neither the Governor nor the Legislature of his State has any power under the acts of Congress to grant the promotion. It can come from the President alone.

The secretary of the meeting, himself a lieutenant-colonel, can be made colonel only at the will of the President. The orator of the occasion, now a captain, cannot expect promotion from the State authorities. The same may probably be said of most of the others who were prominent in this meeting. While I do not charge upon them a desire to "accomplish unholy ends" for "self-aggrandizement," I must leave it to others to say whether the judgment of condemnation pronounced by them was entirely unbiassed by personal ambition and a desire for self-promotion. I apprehend the way-worn private soldier upon his weary march by day and his lonely watch by night, who serves his country only for his country's good, while he meets the enemy in deadly conflict at the hazard of his life, can look for no personal promotion from the President which will give him high command or historic fame, has taken a more just and less excited view of this subject.

The helpless families, so dear to many of the gallant men whom you command, as well as of thousands of other brave sons of Georgia now in military service, were dependent upon the action of the Governor and Legislature of your State for bread.

The act of Congress which you so highly approved had depreciated the Confederate currency in the treasury of the State till it would no longer purchase the bread which they must have or they must die of hunger. In this condition of things the extra session which you denounce was called. The currency with which bread can be purchased was provided, and provision was made which it is hoped will secure its transportation to and save their lives.

Was this an "unhallowed purpose;" and did it accomplish an "unholy end?" I am willing for the hardy sons of toil who obey your orders and whose wives and little ones at home are dear to them to judge, and I am content to abide their decision.

The Governor and Legislature of your State whom you denounce have appropriated for this year nearly $10,000,000 to feed and clothe the suffering wives, and widows, and orphans, and soldiers, and to put shoes upon the feet and clothes upon the backs of soldiers themselves, who are often destitute and cannot get supplies from the Confederate Government. Is this an "unholy end" for which they deserve your denunciation?

But you and those who act with you complain of the resolutions passed by the Legislature in response to my message, on the subject of the suspension of the habeas corpus, and those relative to the terms upon which peace should be sought. Whatever may be the opinion of those officers who managed the meeting over which you presided, I venture to say that not one private soldier in every ten in your brigade believes it is the right of Congress to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and authorize the President to arrest the people and send them in irons to the islands or dungeons of other States, and confine them at his pleasure, and to deny to the courts the right to inquire into the cause of the imprisonment, or to place the case upon the docket, and give the accused the benefit of the speedy and impartial trial guaranteed to him by the Constitution of his country.

This is not the constitutional liberty which so many Georgians have died to defend. He who possesses this control over the personal liberties of the people has in his hands the powers of a monarch, call him by what name you may.

Again, I apprehend the private soldiers under your command, whose official promotion and self-importance do not depend upon a continuance of the war, will be unable to discover any dishonor in the resolutions of the General Assembly of their State upon the subject of peace. The Legislature has declared that negotiation as well as the sword has its proper part to perform in terminating this bloody struggle. The terms of adjustment proposed by the Legislature are the identical terms by which South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, and the other States of the Confederacy stood the day that each seceded from the Union. If they were right then, why are they wrong now? What soldier, who has no stars and has no office, would not be glad to see the struggle transferred upon these principles from the battle-field to the ballot box, as proposed by the resolutions of the Legislature of your State, which seem to meet your hearty condemnation.

In conclusion permit me to remark that I have the most reliable information from your brigade since the meeting that what purports to be the almost unanimous action of those who compose it, meets the sanction of but a very small fraction of it. The resolutions were, as I am informed, prepared by some of the officers before the men were convened. When called for to ratify what the officers, without consulting them, had concocted, a comparatively small part of the brigade attended, and of those present a smaller part voted, and of that small number part voted against the resolutions, and the meeting adjourned amid cheers which resounded through your camp for him whom it was the purpose of the managers of the meeting to condemn.

All know the great advantage which the officers have over the men in the management of an affair of this kind. The officers are accustomed to command, the men to obey. They cannot meet their officers on an equality and condemn their action, but it seems they can by spontaneous acclamation in the camps, when they feel that injustice has been done, testify their approbation without being individually marked by those who have the power over them.

Begging you to assure the men under your command that I shall continue to do everything in my power to protect and defend the great principles of constitutional and personal liberty for which they are fighting, and to clothe and feed their helpless wives and little ones in their absence, and to relieve their own wants when they are suffering for clothing which they cannot get from the Confederacy,

I am, very respectfully, your obedient,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., May 2, 1864.

His Excellency Z. B. VANCE,

Governor of North Carolina, Raleigh, N. C.:

SIR: Major-General Whiting has referred to this Department the correspondence between yourself and him relative to the exemption of D. L. Russell, under your claim for his discharge that he is an officer of the State of North Carolina. No act of Congress has provided for the discharge of any person belonging to the Army from service in consequence of his election to an office, either by the State or Confederate Government, except the act of April 2, 1863. That act provides that any person who has been elected or appointed since entering the military service, or who may be thereafter elected or appointed a Senator or Representative in Congress or in any State Legislature, judge of the circuit, district, or superior courts of law or equity in any State of the Confederacy, district attorney, clerk of any court of record, judge of any court of probate, collector of State taxes, not to exceed one for each county, parish recorder, upon proof of his election or appointment, shall be permitted to resign if he be an officer, or if a non-commissioned officer or private, shall be discharged.

All the conscription acts provide for continuing in the Army those who belong to it, and the exemption allowed by the acts plainly refer to persons who are not in the Army, but who are made liable to conscription.

The acts relative to the exemption of State officers refer only to such persons. The fourth section of the act of May 1, 1863, provides that, in addition to the enumerated officers mentioned in previous acts, there should be exempted all State officers whom the Governor of the State may claim to have exempted for the due administration of the laws and government thereof; but the exemption shall not continue in any State after the adjournment of the next regular session of its Legislature, unless such Legislature shall by law exempt them from military duty in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States.

By the military act of the 17th of February last Congress repealed all laws exempting persons from military service, and provided that none should be exempt but those enumerated in that act. The question presented, then, is, what is the condition of Mr. Russell under this act? The second section of the act placed in the service those between seventeen and fifty—all residents in the Confederate States not belonging to the Army—for the war. From this class exemptions were to be made. Among the exemptions are such State officers as the Governor of any State might certify to be necessary to the proper administration of the State government. The Department does not in any case go behind the certificate of the Governor of the State to ascertain whether the person be an officer or whether his services are required for the administration of the government. But the person claimed must be one who does not belong to the Army.

The person in the Army is already in the service of the Confederate States under the laws of the Confederacy, and no power exists to withdraw him from that service, except in the cases provided by those laws. This power has not been delegated to the State Executive under the act aforesaid, or any other act.

The facts disclosed by the papers show that Russell was in the service at the date of the act of 17th of February, 1864, and held no office in the State at that time; that he was reduced to the ranks by the sentence of a court-martial, and under the Army Regulations became liable to service in the brigade to which he belonged; that subsequent to this he procured his election, and that upon that election this claim was made on his behalf by you. This question has been frequently presented to the Department, and when the laws and regulations have been explained the decisions of the Department have been acquiesced in.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Brig. Gen. FRANCIS T. NICHOLLS,
Lynchburg, Va.:

GENERAL: Your letter of the 4th of April, 1864, inquiring whether officers of the second-class State militia organization between eighteen and forty-five years of age are liable to conscription, has been received.

The Secretary of War directs me to say that if such officers obtain the certificate of the Governor of the State certifying that they are necessary to the further administration of the State government according to the act of Congress of the 17th of February, 1864, and General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, paragraph XI, their exemption will be allowed; otherwise they are liable to conscription. You will inform the enrolling officer accordingly.

Very respectfully, general, your obedient servant,

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I respectfully report that I have given my attention to the Yankee deserters from U. S. Army since the month of November last, and I desire to bring before you a subject [I] deem of much importance.

It is important to encourage desertion so far as it can be safely done. The obstacles in the way of this are, first, the bad character and conduct of these people; second, the prejudice of our citizens against them.

First. I cannot doubt that many of these people are destitute of principle, and of the worst habits. Many, I suspect, have been professional thieves and burglars at home. All of them are restless and unwilling to submit to the scant fare, the regular labor, and the restraints to which our people cheerfully submit. The consequence has been the greater part of those put out to work have deserted their employer and are roaming through the country, and some of them commit serious depredations on the persons and property of our people.

Second. The prejudice of our people against them is great. Public opinion has compelled men who wished their service to decline taking them, and in one instance I was informed that if a gentleman in the interior of the State took a deserter who might have been useful to him he would be mobbed.

To avoid incarceration of these people and to promote desertion, some new mode of disposing of them ought to be devised. To this end I have conversed with the vice-consul of France. At first he seemed reluctant to enter into any arrangement, but from a recent conversation I entertain hope I can make an arrangement with him as to Frenchmen and others willing to go to Mexico by which we may get rid of many of these people, the substance of the arrangement to be: The Confederate Government to send them to some port at which they may be sent out of the United States; the men to be sent out at the expense of their Government, and with such papers as the consuls can furnish them; no arrangement to take effect until reported to and sanctioned by you.

If you approve this plan I will proceed to make such arrangements as I can and report it to you for approval.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

S. S. BAXTER.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY:

Mr. Baxter suggests that he can probably make arrangements with the French consul by which we can be relieved of all Frenchmen deserting into our lines from the Yankee Army. The scheme suggested is for the Confederate Government to send to some port and the French Government to furnish means of transportation out of the country. He asks the authority of the Secretary to prosecute his negotiation with the French consul, any arrangement, however, to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War before it is complete. It is undoubtedly very desirable to encourage desertion in the Federal Army, and if we can, in the mode suggested, be relieved of the delicate question of policy as to their treatment, it will be very desirable. This question is one of great difficulty and continual embarrassment.

CIRCULAR }
No. 20. }

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., May 4, 1864.

I. The following extract from General Orders, No. 45, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, is hereby made a part of this circular:*

II. In the organization of the reserves the officers to be elected must be chosen from the class of reserves. No departure from this rule will be allowed. No person between the ages of eighteen and forty-five is eligible to an office in this corps.

III. Enrolling officers will carefully exclude from the Reserve Corps persons who are not clearly proved to be within the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty years.

IV. Applications in cases of special merit for the admission of persons as privates, who have been exempted on other than State exemptions or for State service, may be considered and referred to this Bureau; but all such as may be admitted will, when the cause of exemption ceases, be liable to transfer to the general service.

V. All exemptions are made for the benefit of the Government, and the duties of exemptions are defined by the causes for which the exemptions are granted. To these duties they must be held as rigidly as they would be to the proper duties if serving in the field. The policy of the Government is that every man between the ages of seventeen and fifty shall perform service which tends to the military strength of the country, and the system of exemptions and details is intended to prescribe and define certain modes of doing this service and the persons allotted to it.

VI. As soon as the company organizations are completed, and the rolls turned over to the generals assigned to command the reserves, the jurisdiction of this Bureau ceases over that class of forces. All applications for renewals of details, or any other proceedings concerning the reserves, must be made direct to the generals commanding. It is understood that after the company organizations are completed the generals commanding entirely supersede the authorities of conscription, so far as this class is concerned.

By order of Col. John S. Preston, superintendent:

The following report on subsistence is respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War:

Table of certain articles of subsistence on hand April 1, 1864, and comparative statement of subsistence April 1, 1863 and 1864.

April 1, 1863.....	4, 461	7, 261, 555
Increase.....	1, 498
Decrease.....		2, 310, 134

The tithe in South Carolina now on hand is estimated at 1,000,000 pounds.

a At Wilmington.

b No report. Several thousand head believed to be on hand in that State.

From this it will be seen that there is an excess on hand this year of cattle and a decrease in bacon.

There is also a very considerable amount secured by the tax in kind; how much cannot be stated in the absence of reports from the tax-in-kind bureau, which could not have been expected to report so soon after the time at which the meat became due under the law, but it is believed that the number of pounds, if the meat can be collected in good condition and properly taken care of, will be sufficient to take the troops well on into the summer, and, with the addition of the supplies now reported on hand and those that are believed to be at Bermuda and Nassau (if the two last shall be in good condition), there will be enough to last them until the fall of the year.

But it is feared that the condition of much of the meat will not be good. Some of that at Bermuda has been lying in that climate nearly one year for want of transportation. The tithe meat has been much of it paid in as soon as due by parties who wished to save the loss that would result from keeping it longer. A great deal of meat so paid is understood to be imperfectly salted and smoked and to be accumulating at points in the interior where it cannot be properly taken care of and whence it cannot be removed, at least with sufficient dispatch, for want of transportation. How far these causes may operate to cut short the supply cannot be estimated.

Under the comparative scarcity of subsistence the Army has been reduced, as is known, to much less than what is called the regulation rations, but it is believed with much less discomfort or suffering to the troops than was anticipated, with but little dissatisfaction on their part, and, it is hoped, with a better effect on their health than was produced by the wasteful issue of full rations. The vegetables issued have been mainly rice and peas. These were all that could be had. Efforts were made to engage cabbages, at least to the extent of hospital supply; but the uncertainty of army movements and hospital necessities, the newness of that sort of culture to our people, and, more than all, the state of the currency indisposed people to make contracts, even on a comparatively small scale. To furnish such things to the whole Army is obviously impossible. Potatoes, both sweet and Irish, have been issued to hospitals and troops as far as obtained; but it would have been unsafe to make large purchases of them, even if to be had, for army consumption. To say nothing of loss by freezing in transitu during the delays of transportation, the incessant efforts and appeals of this Bureau have never enabled it to engage transportation enough to meet the supply of essentials to subsistence and to accumulate the most meager reserves. Indeed, but for the seasonable purchase of coffee, wherewith to supply the deficiency of meat, serious evils would have resulted from want of necessary food, which, though procured, could not be distributed for want of transportation.

The Bureau still looks forward to the importation of supplies—first, of meat, and next, of other articles, even to breadstuffs—from beyond our lines, as the cheapest and safest reliance for feeding the Army. True commercial principles, not less than sound policy, would seem to recommend that whenever and wherever cotton, worth abroad six times as much as gold and about one hundred and twenty times as much as Confederate currency, can be exchanged for any article the Government needs, that the occasion for exchange should be embraced with alacrity, not only as affording subsistence to the Army and relief to the currency, but as relief to our people.

This has been the uniform view of this Bureau. Very early it favored the appointment of a commercial agent abroad, who should be enabled to furnish all the wants of the Government, its own included, as they might be developed. But this, it is understood, was discountenanced by the Government on the ground that private enterprise was a better reliance than Government efforts. It adopted and urged the acceptance of the first propositions made for trade beyond the Mississippi and through the blockade, and has done so persistently ever since. Its efforts have sometimes been disapproved of and at others sometimes foiled by failures in obtaining ocean transportation. That more active efforts would have been abortive is proved by the ill-success that has attended the later enterprises of the Government, and if attempted by this Bureau could only have resulted in an accumulation of supplies to a greater extent than those now at the islands, and a still greater loss than attends their delay at those points for want of steam transportation hither.

Respectfully submitted.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Milledgeville, May 5, 1864.

Maj. Gen. HOWELL COBB,
Commanding, &c.:

SIR: Your letter of the 21st ultimo, which bears no postmark, was laid upon my table since my return from Atlanta.

I regret to see that you seem to have fallen into the error, now so common among Confederate officers, that the States derive their powers, and the people of the States their rights and privileges, from the will of Congress; when in fact Congress and the Confederate Government derive all the powers they possess from the delegation of the respective States.

You say:

I am aware that the Legislature at its late session resolved that "all civil and military officers of this State shall be exempt."

To this, however, I would respectfully reply that the act of Congress did not submit this question to the respective Legislatures, but to the respective Governors; and I insist that the Legislature could not require the Governor to give a certificate that all the civil and military officers of the State are necessary for the proper administration of the State government, if, in point of fact, he did not believe that such was the case. They had no right, either legal or moral, to tax your conscience with a certificate which the laws of the country had submitted to your decision.

Now, the fundamental error into which you have fallen is in assuming that Congress, and not the State Legislatures, have jurisdiction over State officers, and that the acts of Congress, when in conflict with the Constitution, are the "laws of the country."

The State Legislature has declared that all civil and military officers of the State shall be exempt. Congress has declared that such State officers as the Governors of the respective States may certify to be necessary for the proper administration of the State government are exempt. Now, if I understand your position, it is this, that Congress has the jurisdiction over this subject-matter, and is the higher power; and as Congress has referred this question to the Governor, you hold that if he should differ from the Legislature, and should believe that part only of the State officers should be exempt, he may, by virtue of the authority conferred upon him by Congress, set aside the act of the Legislature, and protect only part of the State officers, when the Legislature has said he shall protect them all.

If Congress has the constitutional power to conscribe the officers of the States, you are right, as Congress in that case would also have the power to exempt such as it might think proper. Having the sole jurisdiction over the question, it might exempt such as the Governor should select, and independently of the act of the Legislature conscribe all the balance. If on the other hand Congress has no power to conscribe the State officers and the States alone have jurisdiction over their own officers, Congress cannot confer upon the Governor the power to turn over to conscription State officers while in the faithful discharge of duty, in the teeth of an act of the Legislature declaring that they shall be exempt.

The whole question in dispute thus seems to turn upon the jurisdiction of Congress over the State officers, and I beg leave to call your attention to the fact that the supreme court of your own State has decided it against you in the very case in which they held that Congress has power to conscribe "the population of the States." The court uses this language:

We have said that "the power to raise armies" is unlimited as to the use of means. We have not said that it is unlimited as to the subjects upon whom it may operate. There are certain first principles which underlie all governments and all organized society, the violation of which the framers of governments are not supposed to intend, and the attempted violation of which will always be arrested.

Again they say:

The Government of the Confederate States was formed by the sovereign people of the respective States for specific, well-defined purposes; but they retained for other purposes equally well defined their several pre-existing governments.

To enable it to accomplish one of the purposes for which it was instituted, we say they granted it unlimited power in the use of means to raise armies from their population. But if ever that Government shall apply those means to the enrollment of the officers and agents by whom the State governments are operated and without whose agency their machinery must stop, it will manifestly transcend its limit by violating the intention of those who conferred the power.

Congress, therefore, having no jurisdiction over the officers of the States and no power to enroll them by a former act, referred the question to the Legislatures of the respective States to say what officers they claimed as exempt. The Legislature of this State in response said it claimed all the civil and military officers of the State.

By a subsequent act Congress referred the question to the Governor, but it is very clear that both Congress and the Governor are bound by the action of the Legislature upon this subject-matter, as it alone, subject only to the restrictions imposed by the State constitution, has jurisdiction over it, to determine what officers are necessary to prevent the machinery of the State government from stopping.

If Congress had passed an act declaring the State officers subject to enrollment it would have been in violation of the Constitution and void; and our own supreme court have in effect pledged themselves that they would so declare it. Their language on this point is:

In the population of the States there is ample scope and verge for the exercise of the power in question without invading the departments of the State government. So far the Congress has recognized the limit here pointed out by an act of exemption directory of their enrolling officers. We have said that they may be safely trusted for its observance, and we now add that, in our opinion, if ever regardless of it, the judicial interposition sought and refused in this case might properly be invoked.

In my address to which you refer, after referring to the acts of Congress and the resolution of the Legislature, I have said:

In conformity to the resolution of the General Assembly I have certified to the President that I claim as exempt all civil and military officers of this State.

Their exemption is not claimed by the State under the act of Congress nor accepted as matter of grace or favor from Congress; nor does the certificate so state. It is claimed as matter of reserved right under the Constitution and by virtue of the resolution of the General Assembly of the State independently of any legislation which Congress has or can enact.

In speaking of the resolutions you are pleased to say that you feel quite sure, from your knowledge of the members of the Legislature, that they did not contemplate such a result from their action as it now appears is likely to follow. By this I presume I am to understand that when the members voted for a resolution to exempt all civil and military officers they did not understand the meaning of the language they used, and when they said all they only meant part.

I dismiss this part of your letter with the single remark that from a tolerably intimate acquaintance with most of [the] members I am happy to be able to assure you that I entertain a very different opinion of their capacity, and think you have done them injustice by greatly underrating their intelligence.

I am fully aware of the importance of adding to our armies all the men who can be spared without so crippling our agricultural and mechanical interests as to make it impossible for us to support the armies in the field and the women and children at home. I have never failed to do my part in this particular. Prior to the extension of conscription from seventeen to fifty the President never made a requisition upon me for troops that I did not fill. To his last call I responded with more than double the number required.

You will doubtless agree with me that it is quite as important that the armies be clothed and fed and the helpless wives and children of the soldiers be supported as it is that we keep armies in the field, and that the conscription of so large a number as to leave no means of support at home would be as fatal an error as we could possibly commit. With 200,000 or 250,000 brave men in the field well fed and comfortably clad, and their families at home well supported, with all the advantages we have as the invaded party, we are in no danger of subjugation. With 500,000 men in the field destitute of food and clothing and their families at home naked and starving, we would be weak indeed, as our armies so situated must soon disband and we would be ruined. In your zeal to increase your command it is possible you may carry conscription to an extent that will so seriously cripple the agricultural and mechanical interests of the State as to prevent the production of the necessary supplies another year, and thus ruin the cause you attempt to serve. As so much depends upon your orders whether bread shall be made in this State for another year, I beg to remind you of your duty to grant the most liberal details to farmers and other laboring men. When no immediate assault is expected by the enemy both common sense and patriotism dictate that the reserves should not be kept in camp, but that they should be detailed and sent home to labor in their fields and shops, to produce supplies to sustain their own families and the families of those who are absent in other States defending our rights.

If the policy adopted last fall with the portion of the Home Guards called into the field under your command is adopted with those now called out, and they are kept in camp away from their agricultural pursuits when there is no immediate use for their services, the most deplorable results must follow. You cannot be ignorant of the fact that after all the efforts the State authorities can make there is great danger that many soldiers' families will suffer this summer for bread, and that if there is enough in this State there is certainly no surplus. If this is so when all who are to constitute your command were at home last year, what may we expect another year if they are all taken away from their fields and workshops?

Your enrolling officers are now dragging from their homes hundreds who leave helpless families with no prospect of support, to be added to the long list already in so deplorable a condition. They have not the number of slaves necessary to entitle them under the act of Congress to exemption, and if you do not grant them liberal details or furloughs when not needed to meet an assault of the enemy, their families must suffer.

Again, others with constitutions wrecked and health ruined, are being forced by your enrolling officers to conscript camps or assigned by boards of surgeons to what is called second-class duty.

If you do not interfere for their relief many of these wretched men must linger out upon a sick couch a miserable existence for a few short weeks or months and fall victims to an unwise policy without the hope of being able to render any valuable service to the country.

I have reason to believe that it is this severe rigor in the exercise of conscription which has caused the people in many counties and districts in this State to elect men within conscript age to fill county offices. They have felt the necessity of having some able-bodied men at home to attend to home affairs and to look to the wants of the suffering families of soldiers.

You say we need farmers and mechanics and not justices of the peace, deputy sheriffs, clerks, and militia officers at home. You seem, however, to overlook or ignore the important fact that probably nine-tenths of the justices of the peace, deputy sheriffs, clerks, and militia officers of this State within conscript age, who are exempt, are neither farmers nor mechanics; and that a large proportion of them have been elected by the people to keep them at home as farmers and mechanics, as well as officers; far from the annoyance of conscript officers and the uncertainties of obtaining details which must be had at the sacrifice of much valuable time in running the red-tape round prescribed by Confederate officers to obtain them.

You refer to the number of justices of the peace and constables in the State, and express the opinion that a smaller number would be sufficient, and that persons over fifty years of age could as well fill these positions.

As I have already shown, the Legislature, which has the sole jurisdiction over this question, has not left it to you or me to say that a smaller number is sufficient. They have laid down the rule, and I have no discretion but to execute the law, nor have I any power to say what shall be the age of the man who receives the commission. The constitution and laws of this State leave the selection to the voters and not to the Executive. My duty is to commission those who are legally elected, and not to dictate to the people who they shall elect. As stated in the address to which you refer, there are some individual cases in which selections are made which I regret, but I have no right to reverse the decision in the legal exercise of the elective franchise. I have not said the officers are not necessary, the Legislature has decided that question, but I have expressed regret that in some individual cases the people had not selected a different class of men to fill them.

The same remark may probably be made with reference to the militia officers, the number of whom has been greatly overestimated by you. With occasional exceptions, the people have elected farmers and mechanics who are among our most useful citizens at home in producing supplies and relieving the necessities of soldiers' families.

The law requires me to keep up the militia organization which may be useful for police purposes, and may be needed to suppress negro insurrection in the counties, as well as to arrest deserters from the Army, which by proclamation I have required them to do.

In enumerating the civil and military officers in this State, you must not forget the important fact that a very large proportion of them are exempt from conscription, independently of their offices. Many are over the age of conscription, others are wounded soldiers, or exempt from physical debility or other causes; and many hold both civil and military offices, as, for instance, justice of the peace and captain of the militia, while others hold the office of clerk of the superior and inferior courts, and in some instances ordinary also. Thus you see that you do very great injustice if you count each office as filled by a separate individual, and each individual as protected by the office. A man is over the conscript age and holds the offices of ordinary, clerk of the superior and inferior courts of his county; here three offices are filled and nobody is exempted on account of either of them.

You refer to the great necessity for calling men into the field immediately to meet the enemy now pressing us on the sea-board and on the northwest.

In this connection I beg to remind you that the State had a militia organization which would have been thorough and complete by this time, ready to meet the enemy for this emergency, which has been much disorganized and crippled that its most active material might be taken to form your command, which I fear you may not be able to organize in time to meet the enemy on the front, where the great collision of arms occurs. If you should not, it may be very unfortunate for the State that the organization which she had prepared for her own defense has been disturbed.

Our gallant, self-sacrificing troops at the front, who stand like a living breast-work between their homes and the enemy, who have undergone much suffering for food and clothing, know the importance of having a sufficient force at home to make supplies for themselves and their families, and of maintaining the government and sovereignty of their State, for which—as well as for the achievement of our independence—they left their homes and took up arms.

These men also know how much the agricultural and mechanical interests of the country upon which their bread depends are crippled by the annoying detail system, which hinders so much of a farmer's time in keeping his papers right, to enable him to cultivate his land and make bread by the permission of the Government.

They also have the intelligence to see that it would be infinitely better that those whom it is the policy of the Confederate Government to leave at home to produce provisions should be left free from this annoyance to make all the supplies in their power, the surplus to be turned over under proper laws to the support of the Army and the families of soldiers at home. They do not therefore complain when a useful farmer or mechanic is elected to a State office, and left at home to attend to the double duty of making supplies and discharging the functions of his position; nor do they labor to raise a clamor and excite prejudice against the government of their State, which is exerting all its power and energies to clothe them when naked, and to feed and clothe their helpless families at home.

This outcry against the State government and State officers comes up from the almost countless swarms of Confederate officers, agents, and detailed men who, as the favorites of power, have obtained safe and comfortable positions in the rear, while their less-favored comrades, who seldom get furloughs or details, are required to meet the enemy in front. This class of protected men—vastly more numerous than all the protected State officers—all in the pay of the Government, who can be found in every city, town, backwoods village, railroad car, and hotel in the State, or almost anywhere else but in front of the Army, who are much engaged in attention to their own private business and speculations, or in earnest, industrious efforts to manage and control the politics of the State, while their fellow-soldiers are required to meet the enemy on the battle-field, seem to feel the necessity of diverting public attention from themselves, which they conceive can be best accomplished by raising public clamor, and attempting to excite public indignation against the State government and the State officers who are exempt from military duty. The chief difference between the two classes is, that the State officers are exempt from the fatigues and dangers of the battle-field without drawing pay from the Government during the time they are so exempt, while the Confederate officers and agents of the class referred to enjoy the same exemption from danger and draw regularly as much pay from the Government as those who are exposed to the greatest peril.

I am perfectly willing for the army in the field as well as the people at home to decide upon the respective merits of the two classes, and to say who most deserve to be “withdrawn from their official retreats” and brought into the active service of the country, where the enemy is to be met and the victory lost or won. In your earnest efforts to fill up the ranks of the Army with State officers, let me beg of you not to forget the numerous class above referred to, a large number of whom I feel quite sure could be spared from their retreats for duty in the field, and no injury done to the service, “while the ranks of our Army would be considerably increased.”

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, May [6], 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: The regimental organization and the command of the reserves having been provided for by the assignment of a general officer to each State for those purposes, I have the honor respectfully to submit that authority be given this Bureau to organize, equip, and place in conscript service in each Congressional district one company, to be composed of persons of the reserve classes and such others as may be declared unfit for active service in the field. These companies to contain not more than 100 men, to be either cavalry or infantry, and to be kept on duty at the discretion of the commandants of conscripts under the order of this Bureau, but to be subjected to extraordinary calls by the generals commanding the reserves, and in all things except the assignment to this special service to constitute a part of that corps. It is suggested that this arrangement will be beneficial—

First. As giving to the conscription authorities a permanent local force essential to the efficient performance of their duties.

Second. That these companies can be mainly constituted of non-producers, and thus will not affect injuriously the productive industry of the country.

Third. That they will form a nucleus for the rapid rendezvous of the regiments, and may be placed on guard in charge of the stores and munitions for such regiments; and,

Fourth. Being composed mainly of sedate persons, having personal interests in the localities, they will constitute an unexceptionable police.

For these reasons I respectfully recommend that the arrangement be allowed.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

JNO. S. PRESTON,

Conscript Superintendent.

[Indorsement.]

MAY 6, 1864.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL:

The authority may be given as guards are required in each camp and for conscript duty, but the persons selected should be of those least required for industrial pursuits.

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

RICHMOND, May 6, 1864.

General COOPER:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Assistant Adjutant-General Clay's note of the 4th instant informing me of the Secretary's decision in regard to the cases of the Marylanders whose term of service has expired, and can only say that I deeply regret the conclusion to which the Department has arrived in regard to the subject presented. Some of these parties are now in the Maryland Line, having been ordered to it since they enlisted, and will doubtless re-enter it if discharged; but their ground of complaint is, that they are endeavored to be conscripted into said line; not allowed their free choice. In plain words, they consider that the Government is violating faith, and the effect is anything but beneficial to the service. If they should be discharged and leave the front with the enemy before them, the infamy will be theirs; but if it is their right, they should be permitted to enjoy it. I don't believe that there are twenty Marylanders in the Virginia army who would leave it if discharged under such circumstances; but I am equally sure that if there be any of that description the attempt to hold them forcibly will fail to accomplish its object after their term has expired. This very question has been fully elaborated in the Richmond papers within the past week in criticisms on the action of the Yankee Government in holding their troops under corresponding circumstances, and you may rely upon it that acts savoring of bad faith will have the same effect everywhere, and such conduct heretofore evinced on the part of persons seeking promotion has had no little agency in paralyzing the efficiency of Maryland organizations. At this very moment men are here from Charleston, having reported to the provost-marshal here, whose term of service has expired. They applied for transfer to the Maryland Line near a month ago, but, as they say, their applications are disregarded, and that they are, in spite of such applications and the assurances of the Government given in the late general order to that effect, endeavored to be forced to re-enlist at Charleston. They are leaving their posts, availing themselves of any route to escape, as they say, acts of despotism. Such was the language of one of these men whom I met on the street here this very day, and when I admonished him that he was incurring the penalty of a deserter, he replied, the Government might shoot him if they pleased, but that he would not go back to Charleston, having served his full term of enlistment. I merely give you facts. This party I learn has registered his name with General Winder. The class of people who are here for plunder would gladly see such cases brought before the courts, to be used by them as a plea for not doing their duty. I can only report my conviction that the Department is, in my judgment, acting under very bad advice.

Yours, truly,

GEO. P. KANE.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL.

I cannot concur in these views. The Marylanders who have entered our service and cast their lot with us are surely to be regarded as residents, and are only required to do as our own citizens and other residents. The case of the enemy's soldiers cited in illustration has no analogy. Had all Yankees of the ages of these soldiers been subjected to like military service, could there be either surprise or complaint if they were retained in service? The injustice with them is, they were expressly receipted and exempted even from draft, but are still, notwithstanding, forced to remain in service. I see no cause to change the decision or course of the Department.

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

Major RIELY:

This is a correspondence that cannot have a different result from being extended. A previous letter to Mr. Kane explained to him the views of the Department and its determination upon the question involved. I do not think it essential, therefore, that the Secretary's indorsement should be communicated to Mr. Kane.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 47. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, May 6, 1864.

I. The following schedules of prices for articles named therein, adopted by commissioners appointed pursuant to law for the State of Virginia, are announced for the information of all concerned, and the special attention of officers and agents of the Government is directed thereto:

RICHMOND, VA., May 4, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON:

SIR: In reviewing the schedules of prices for May and June we invited the co-operation and aid of Mr. William B. Harrison, and it is just to add that the schedules received the unanimous approval of the commissioners.

We respectfully offer the accompanying schedules, A and B, with the understanding that the prices are to remain for the months of May and June, unless in the interval it should be deemed necessary to modify them.

The following prices are to be the maximum rates to be paid for the articles impressed in all cities and usual places of sale, and when impressed on the farms or elsewhere the same prices are to be paid.

Under existing circumstances we have deemed it not only just, but most likely to favor increased production, that producers in future should not be required to transport their surplus productions when impressed, but that the agents of the Government should employ or impress the neighborhood or county wagons and teams to haul all such articles, and so divide the work between the owners of wagons and teams as to be least prejudicial to those successfully engaged in agriculture.

a Pro rata as to greater or less width or weight.

b On the above enumerated cotton cloths, pro rata as to greater or less width or weight.

In assessing the average value of the first-class artillery and wagon horses and mules at $500, we designed that the term should be accepted and acted upon according to its obvious common-sense import. In other words, that they should be selected and then impressed accordingly as their working qualities and adaptation to army service, together with their intrinsic value, would warrant a judicious purchaser in considering them as coming within the contemplation of the commissioners when they assessed the average value of such horses as the Government needed at $500. But cases might arise, however, when the public exigencies would be so urgent as to demand that all horses at hand should be impressed. Yet under ordinary circumstances, when family or extra-blooded horses or brood mares of admitted high value are impressed, we respectfully suggest to the Secretary of War to have instructions forwarded to the impressing officers to propose and allow the owners to substitute in their stead such strong, sound, and serviceable horses or mules as shall be considered and valued by competent and disinterested parties as first-class artillery horses or first-class wagon mules.

The term "average value per head" is in contradistinction to a fixed and uniform price for each horse or mule. We supposed that in impressing a number of horses or mules, whether owned by several persons or one individual, that some might be estimated at $300 and others at different advanced rates, according to their worth, up as high as $700—thus making an average value or price for a number of good, sound, and efficient horses or mules $500 each.

In illustration of our views, we will add, that a horse with only one eye sound might, in all respects, be classed as a first-class artillery horse, yet the loss of one eye would justly and considerably curtail his value. So a horse from ten to eighteen years of age might be deemed in all other particulars as a first-class artillery horse, but of course, however efficient or able to render good service for a year or so, yet his advanced age would justly and materially impair his value. Any horse, however he may approximate the standard of a first-class artillery horse, must, according to deficiencies, fall below the maximum price; and as few comparatively come up to the standard, and therefore are entitled to the maximum price, so of course in all other instances the price should be proportionately reduced, as imperfections place them below the standard of first class, &c.

19	Hire of ox carts, team, and driver; rations furnished by owner.....	Per day.....	10.00
20	Hire of same; rations furnished by the Government .....	.....do .....	5.00

Upon further consideration we have concluded to value sheaf oats, hay, and blade fodder east of the Blue Ridge Mountains, when baled, at $5.40 per 100 pounds, and unbaled at $4.50 per 100 pounds, and shucks baled at $3.90 per 100 pounds, and $3 unbaled.

REVISION OF THE SCHEDULE OF FEBRUARY AND MARCH LAST.

Since the adoption of our last schedules for the months of February and March the financial bills passed by Congress, taxing the currency, have seriously impaired the value of the old issues of Confederate Treasury notes. At this juncture large numbers of horses and mules were impressed and paid for in a currency which was in a few days thereafter to be taxed 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per cent.

The Board of State Commissioners having adjourned, and one of its members being out of the State, it could not be convened in time to review our schedules of prices. Under this state of facts we have re-examined and rearranged our tariff of prices, so far as we have been advised of recent impressments, proposing, in this mode, to remedy any diminution of valuation which may have resulted from the action of Congress upon the currency. Therefore we assess the average value of artillery or wagon horses or mules, impressed since the passage of the currency bill of the 17th of February last, at \$600. This award will entitle each person to receive higher compensation accordingly as each horse or mule recently impressed may be considered as being a first, second, or third class artillery or wagon horse or mule, whether the parties appeal to our Board or not; and the impressing agents and officers should forthwith call on all of those persons of whom they impressed horses or mules and propose a settlement upon the foregoing basis, but allowing to each person only such prices as first, second, and third class artillery or wagon horses or mules may be estimated at, assuming our average appraisement of \$600 as a fair medium valuation. This, then, would allow a maximum price of \$800, and a minimum price of \$400, making \$600 the average price—thus allowing more for first-class horses or mules and proportionately less for the inferior, as they may fall below the grade of first class. Payment of whatever amount may be awarded to be made in the old issue of Treasury notes as circulated before the 1st of April, or else in the new issue, but with a deduction in such cases of  $33\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. from the additional sum allowed in each case.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ENGINEER BUREAU,
Richmond, Va., May 7, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to report that I have visited and carefully examined the Piedmont Railroad in order to ascertain from personal inspection its features and condition, and whether the Government could furnish any aid which would materially hasten the completion of the road. The Piedmont Railroad is forty-eight and three-tenths miles in length, the heaviest grade coming northeast, sixty feet to the mile. In an opposite direction, that of least transportation, and therefore no great disadvantage, there is a grade on temporary track of 106 feet, the maximum permanent grade being only 68. The necessity of rock cutting, combined with the scarcity of blasting powder, led to the adoption of the temporary track. The road is completed to a distance of thirty-one miles from Danville, where there is a break between iron and iron of four and a half miles, the rest of the road to Greensborough being completed. On this break the grading is practically finished, although there are still cross-ties to procure as well as stringers for Haw River bridge. The road will be opened, probably, by the 20th instant, or 25th at latest, and I do not know of any available labor at the disposal of the Government which would materially hasten the time of completion. The Quartermaster-General has been called upon for some assistance in hauling, which he has cheerfully promised, and the Engineer Department has been able to assist by supplying additional tools, principally axes. I found the road thoroughly well and intelligently located and constructed, in consideration of the times, and the company's force, although not large, energetically and satisfactorily employed, under the immediate and constant personal direction of the chief engineer, Capt. E. T. D. Myers, of the Engineer Corps. It gives me the more pleasure to be able to make this statement after personal inspection and conscientious conviction, as there is and has been much misapprehension. Few persons but those who have made the attempt have any conception of the innumerable difficulties which retard the completion of a great work of internal improvement in these disjointed times.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. L. RIVES,
Colonel and Acting Chief of Bureau.

[First indorsement.]

MAY 23, 1864.

Respectfully submitted to the President.

It is gratifying to have the assurance presented by this report of the diligence and ability with which the work of the Piedmont road has been prosecuted by the engineer in charge. As much misapprehension has existed on this subject, and some reproach in popular estimation has been cast on both the engineer and the contractors, it is deemed only just to them to submit the report to your consideration.

J. A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War.

Read with satisfaction and returned to Secretary of War.

OPELIKA, ALA., May 8, 1864.

General B. BRAGG:

GENERAL: I returned yesterday from my tour of investigation as to the secret treasonable society alleged to exist in this State. I met Colonel Falkner and Mr. A. R. Hill, who gave me their written statements herewith inclosed. Mr. Burke, who joined the society for the purpose of disclosing its secrets, became alarmed for his safety and has left this region of country. I was not able to communicate with him. I can find him at no distant period, I think, if it should be deemed necessary. Under these circumstances I was compelled to take his disclosures as made to Falkner and Hill and forwarded in their statements. I am satisfied that the society embraces more than half the adult males of Randolph, Coosa, and Tallapoosa Counties, a large number in Calhoun and Talladega Counties, and a considerable membership in some of the other counties in Alabama. It extends into portions of Georgia. I state as a fact that the society has no regular times or places of meeting, and has no organized "lodges" or "communities." Men who have studied the obligations, signs, &c., and who can communicate them well are styled "eminent," and pass through the country giving the "degree" to all whom they regard as fit subjects. The society is nameless, or, rather, has such name as any particular "eminent" may choose to give it for the occasion. Its general designation is the Peace Society. No records are kept. Each initiate is an independent, dis severed link in a perfect chain. He is told by his eminents who are his associates or brethren, but meets them at no "convocation" of the order. Hence the difficulty of procuring evidence. You prove one man to be a member, but outside of his statements you have no other proof of other memberships. It is a society without officers, a community without members.

But it is no less singular in its objects than its organization. Its obligation and its professed object, peace, are not objectionable, but its real teachings are as varied as the communities or even the men to which they are imparted. If the initiate is an ignorant but true man he is told that the object of the society is to procure an honorable peace; if disaffected as to the policy of the Government he is told that the aim is to procure a change of rulers; if a traitor, to produce mutiny among our soldiers, to destroy our loyal citizens, and to take the State back into the Union on any terms. A designing politician could precipitate the whole society into a measure that would appal many of its members if they could see the end of their actions or had results presented before them. I am inclined to the belief that no action will be taken by its leaders so long as our arms are victorious; but should great disasters befall us, the widespread distrust which marked the past winter would ripen into treason, and find in this society an organization that would prove disastrous to our cause.

Under these circumstances I scarcely know what to do. If you wish a further investigation I will cheerfully give it. A shrewd detective would be of great service if unknown in this section of country. I can enter no county in any of the cotton States east of the Mississippi River where I am not recognized by some citizen, officer, or soldier. If I take a step the door of information is closed against me as an officer in the Army.

I shall leave in the morning for Columbus, Ga., on inspection, and shall defer further action in this matter until I hear from you. I may say that I believe Mr. Parsons, a prominent, talented Yankee lawyer at Talladega, is one of the most prominent members if not the head of this organization.

I thought some time since that Colonel Seibels (late candidate for C. S. Senate) was connected with this order, and procured the statement of Major Hollis and Captain Dowd (the latter the commissary at this place and both most reliable gentlemen) in reference to him, herewith inclosed. I have found nothing further to connect him with the order. I have not been able to see Colonel Holly, to whom reference is made in this statement. If deemed necessary I will see him, although I have made considerable effort to do so. It is due Colonel Falkner to say that he enjoys the reputation of being a man of honor and a patriot. He is certainly a man of no mean abilities. Mr. Hill is an honest man, of good sense, but not of great ability. Should a detective be sent out, I will cheerfully give him all information in my possession and all aid in my power.

Since writing the foregoing I have heard of the raid on the railroad between Richmond and Petersburg.

The forwarding of this report will be delayed a short time. It will be forwarded by my wife as soon as communications are re-established.*

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EXHIBIT A.

Statement of myself in regard to a secret organization and disloyalty of certain citizens.

First. Are all present constitutional men?—Answer. I am.

It now becomes necessary that you take upon yourselves an oath or obligation, which oath or obligation does not conflict with your political or religious feelings.

The following is a synopsis of the obligation:

First. I promise and swear that I will not reveal or make known any of the secrets of this order to any person or persons, except it be to a brother of this order, and not to him or to them that I may hear so to be, but to him or to them, after strict trial and lawful information, I may believe him to be entitled to the same as I myself am now about to be.

Second. I furthermore promise and swear that I will not cut, carve, mark, scratch, chop, &c., upon anything, movable or immovable, under the whole canopy of heaven, whereby any of the secrets of this order might become legible or intelligible through my unworthiness.

Third. I furthermore promise and swear that I will not give it to an old man in his dotage, to a young man in his nonage, to a woman, or to a fool.

Fourth. (I have forgotten in toto.)

Fifth. I furthermore promise and swear that I will always be found aiding a brother of this order, that when I hear the word spoken or see the secret sign given I will rush to his relief, and would feign myself his enemy to accomplish his relief.

Sixth. I furthermore promise and swear that I will always be found aiding a brother of this order, his widow or orphan, they applying to me and I finding them worthy.

Seventh. I furthermore promise and swear that I will not wrong a brother of this order nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it.

Eighth. To all these and those, my solemn oath or obligation, I bind myself under no less penalty than that of having my head cut open, my brains taken from thence and strewn over the ground, my body cast to the beasts of the field or to the vultures of the air should I be so vile as to reveal any of the secrets of this order.

The above is as correct an exposition of the obligation as I am able at present to make.

The root and branch, as I understand, is to set on foot some tricks which would in the end become masters of the Government, according to the lectures of James Wood and Thomas Lambert.

The intention of this secret organization is alone in opposition to the maintenance of a Confederate Government. I had long and instructive lectures from both Wood and Lambert; they were bending their energies to make me an earnest worker of the order, that I might make this thing tell more effectually when I arrive at my command, then stationed at Mobile.

This thing was introduced to me by W. C. Brown, jr. After talking on the war subject he asked me how I would like to look into an order which had for its object the bringing about a speedy peace. I answered, "Quite well." He (Brown) then stepped away and beckoned to his friend to come thither, who was James Wood, who, after a few remarks, proceeded to confer the obligation which I have previously given. He (Wood) stated, as I was going to join my command soon I would be a very good hand to introduce the order in the army at Mobile. James Wood also said that Parton Vardenon was then gone to Virginia to introduce it in our army, and, if possible, to communicate it to our common enemy. He further stated that J. W. Joiner was gone in the direction of our Western army to get it through the lines in that quarter; and further, Wood said his son-in-law, John H. Paster, had been home on furlough and had also been initiated, and was going to the Tennessee army, and would soon have the army well posted in this thing.

The original of the above was handed me by Judge John T. Heflin, of Talladega, but I did not learn the name of the man who made the disclosure.

James Wood has since been taken up by our cavalry and hung. Thomas Lambert, I learn, has run away and is supposed to have gone to the Yankees.

Statement of Maj. E. Hollis and Capt. W. C. Dowd in reference to a conversation between Colonel Seibels, of Montgomery, Ala., and Col. J. J. Holly, of Tallapoosa County, and with Colonel Holly.

About the 1st of March last Colonel Seibels and Colonel Holly were sitting on the veranda of the Exchange Hotel in Montgomery, when Major Hollis and Captain Dowd stepped to the window to go out. They, Seibels and Holly, were talking in a low tone. Colonel Seibels remarked to Colonel Holly that the arrangement was made and he was going on. Captain Dowd immediately stepped back and Major Hollis went through the window on the veranda and was introduced by Holly to Seibels. Holly remarked to Seibels that he (Hollis) was all right. Hollis took a seat a short distance off and heard Seibels mention several names, amongst them Hon. James Johnston and Dr. Tuggles, of Columbus, Ga., and George Reese, of West Point. The conversation was in an undertone and aroused his suspicions. That night he asked Holly what Seibels was up to. He replied that Seibels said that the Lincoln Government would not hear any proposition from the Jeff. Davis Government, and that he, Seibels, was anxious to know what could be done; that he was going to Washington; that the Arkansas, or Sebastian, platform had taken in Arkansas and would take in Alabama, and that the proposition was that slavery should be abolished in the present century, or should commence with the end of the present century. Hollis thinks the former. Colonel Holly stated that he (Holly) did not approve of it, and thought it would result in a great deal of harm. The foregoing is the substance of the conversation.

Statement of Col. Jefferson Falkner and Mr. A. R. Hill, of Randolph County, Ala. (post-office, Wedowee), in reference to a secret society.

Some time about the 1st of March, 1864, Theophilus Burke, a citizen of Meriwether County, Ga., was induced by said Falkner and Hill to join a society, said to be organized for the overthrow of our Government. He did so. He was initiated into the society in Randolph County, Ala., by William Kent, of that county, known to be disloyal. He saw the obligation, herewith filed, marked Exhibit A,* and said it was the obligation of the society. The fourth point in the obligation he could not recollect. He stated to Mr. Hill that their object was, as soon as their strength would admit, to commence hostilities against the Home Guards (county reserve) and secessionists. J. Falkner states that he showed Burke what purported to be a copy of the oath or obligation of the order, or a part of it, and that after Burke joined he stated that the paper was correct as far as it went, but did not contain all the obligation. (Exhibit A, hereto appended, is the copy.) Said Falkner states, from the best information he can get from Burke and other sources, that the object of the society is twofold—

First. The organization of a political party opposed to the present Government.

Second. By means of getting a majority of the people at home committed to them, and as many of the soldiers as possible, to either overturn the present Government or, by opposing and refusing to support it, to compel the present Government to make peace on such terms as can be obtained, let them be what they may.

The grip of the order is given by taking hold of the hand as usual in shaking hands, only the thumb is turned with the side instead of the ball to the back of the hand, when the following dialogue ensues: "What is that?" "A grip." "A grip of what?" "A constitutional peace grip." "Has it a name?" "It has." "Will you give it to me?" "I did not so receive it, neither can I so impart it." "How will you impart it?" "I will letter it with you." "Letter it and begin." "Begin you." "No; you begin." "Begin you." They then spell the word peace by calling a letter alternately, beginning with any letter except the first. This is the password. The ordinary signs of recognition are given as follows: The party giving the sign takes up a stick or something of the kind in his hands, holding it in both in front of the body and carelessly throwing it to the right, using both hands. This is to be recognized by putting the right hand to the lock of the hair on the right side of the head as if pulling off something and throwing it to the right. Another sign consists in tapping three times on the toe of the right foot with a switch or stick and then waving it to the right. Another sign consists in taking a switch, stick, or whip and setting it on the right thigh and then leaning it to the right. The sign to be given by the soldier on the battlefield is by the soldier carrying his gun with the muzzle inclined to the right, or an officer carries his sword with the point inclined to the right, and if on horseback, with the hilt resting on the thigh. The sign of distress is given by extending the right hand horizontally and then bringing it down by three distinct motions; or, if the sign cannot be given, then the words "Oh, Washington!" are substituted for it. An expression used as a means of recognition is, "I dreamed that the boys are all coming home."

In the opinion of Mr. Hill two-thirds of Randolph County are members of the society; Colonel Falkner thinks a majority. Lieut. Col. E. B. Smith, commandant of the reserves of Randolph County, is a member; R. S. Heflin, ex-State senator and now a lawyer of that county; Dr. R. L. Robertson, also a prominent Methodist preacher; W. W. Dobson, a justice of the peace; William Kent, an influential citizen and one of the prominent officers of the order; David A. Perryman, late enrolling officer and a justice of the peace; Capt. William T. Smith, now at Demopolis commanding a company raised for conscript duty, and a large number of other citizens of Randolph County are members of the order. Colonel Falkner has been informed and believes that Henry W. Armstrong and A. A. West, the two members of the Legislature from that county, are members of the order.

Mr. Burke said that Lieut. N. B. D. Armon, the district enrolling officer at Talladega, is a member. Mr. Hill states that about the 1st of April last he, as an officer of the reserves, arrested T. J. Pennington, a deserter from the Army, with a forged furlough, sent him to the conscript camp at Talladega, and that Pennington (a member of the order) gave the sign, and that a lieutenant vouched for him, and he was thereupon released, and got back to the county as soon as those who carried him to Talladega. He has not since been heard from. Mr. Burke also stated that the Board of Surgeons at Talladega on the 1st of April were members. Colonel Falkner has learned through Burke that L. E. Parsons, a prominent lawyer of Talladega, is a member. L. McKee, a most prominent member of the order, told Burke that the battle of Missionary Ridge was lost and the surrender of Vicksburg was occasioned by the order. Burke also learned from the members of the order that Colonel Hannon (Army of Tennessee) and a large portion of his regiment were members of the order; that Captain Hannon, of same regiment, and most of his men were members of the order. The names of the members of the order as above furnished are given by Burke and Capt. M. D. Robinson, the enrolling officers of the county. Both Colonel F. and Mr. Hill believe it to be correct, from what they know of the men.

JEFFERSON FALKNER.

ABNER R. HILL.

CLINTON, LA., May 8, 1864.

His Excellency H. W. ALLEN:

SIR: At the time of Colonel Sandidge's departure for Richmond the enemy were moving so as [to] envelop this section of the country, and not being able to foresee the result of these movements, I did not feel at liberty to proceed to Richmond with Colonel S. I, however, wrote to the President a communication in which the following subjects were fully and forcibly placed under his consideration, to wit:

First. The appointments of commissioners to audit and pay the claims of our citizens for forage, subsistence, transportation, property, &c., impressed (whether legally or not) for Government use.

Second. The grossly illegal manner in which impressments have been made in this State, and the great abuses of private property by Confederate officers.

Third. The high-handed and lawless manner in which Confederate officers have violated and are still violating the rights of persons and things in this State.

Each one of these subjects was fully and strongly placed before the consideration of the President, and will be as efficient in provoking the application of the necessary remedy as a personal interview would have been, and perhaps more.

If Colonel Sandidge should need my presence he will telegraph to me. Your letter accrediting me to Richmond limited my authority to the matter of the negotiation of the bonds; but under the general terms of the credentials in the hands of Colonel S., I presumed to speak at large, and very plainly, in reference to the gigantic abuses of power by inferior officers, which are in derogation of and insulting to the authority and dignity of the State of Louisiana, and which are not demanded by any exigency of public safety or general success. I should, perhaps, send you the original communication, that you might judge whether my expressions have transcended your wishes or your views. The evils are enormous, and demand prompt and effective correction. The lives, liberties, and property of our citizens are disposed of with the same facility of subordinate military officers as if each of them was a hereditary despot in the district or department assigned to his command. Citizens of this State are taken, conveyed into the State of Mississippi, and executed without trial, civil or military. Six or eight have suffered death by the peremptory orders of Colonel Dillon. I believe the Constitution of the country provides that "all prosecutions shall be by indictment or information;" that "the accused shall be entitled to a speedy trial before an impartial jury of the vicinage," and that "he shall have the right to be confronted with his accuser and with the witnesses against him." I believe that the authority of the State and the guardianship of her tribunals over the rights and immunities of her people is original and reserved, and I am at a loss to know by what authority any military commander of whatever grade, from the President to the corporal, assumes to annul these great conservative provisions of the Constitution; to move across the lines of State sovereignty as if they did not exist, and by simple military orders to deprive our citizens of life.

I am at a loss to know in what article of the Confederate Constitution the power is lodged which authorizes the military power of the country to try and punish offenses committed by citizens or persons not enrolled in the Army and Navy. The pretext, I believe, is that the civil tribunals are too slow; they are neither sufficiently fast nor reckless for the purposes and wishes of many military commanders, who are neither the wisest nor the purest men which the country affords. This invasion of the just and constitutional authority of the civil and criminal tribunals of the country is a common portent of revolution; is the premonition of civil decay and political anarchy, and calls for the most sleepless vigilance from the mind of Your Excellency. Private property is subjected to the same abuses, and exhibits a field for deep reflection and prompt action by the authority of the State. Property of citizens of the State is taken by military seizure, carried out of the State, and under the pretext of confiscation is turned over to the quartermaster and consumed without any previous conviction of the owner for having violated the laws either of the State or of the Confederate Government, and without any action ad rem to procure the legal condemnation of the property. The constitution of the State, her jurisprudence, her tribunals, her original and undelimited custodianship over the civil rights of her citizens, her territorial lines, are all set aside and annulled by a military proceeding which has no use or respect for one nor the other. The evil here strikes deeper than the mere loss of property. It is the loss of principles, the reintegration of which may excite a bloodier revolution than the present. It is to be regretted that military men cannot keep in view the great cardinal principles of our Government, and preserve the harmony of its structure and action, even through the convulsions of war. There is no want of possibility, and the intelligent and upright mind can exercise all the necessary and proper powers of the military commander without invading in the slightest particular the just and peculiar province of the civil power. The evil results from the ignorance and recklessness of men in military power, who at once imagine themselves to be the exclusive and absolute authority in the district assigned to their command over all questions of property, liberty, or life, and the idea that such authority is restrained by any considerations of State jurisdiction or State sovereignty is received with open and violent contempt. How far these things may have passed under your own observation, and may have excited your official solicitude for the dignity of the State and the immunities of her citizens, I am not able to say. Doubtless you have seen enough to induce the conviction that the evil is not only enormous, but dangerous, and to inspire your mind with the determination that it must be checked.

Major Corkern is proceeding slowly with the organization of the State troops. A few days since an order was issued by the provost-marshal-general of the district annulling the State organization and forbidding enlistment in its ranks.

Major Corkern is proceeding, so far as I can learn, strictly according to law. He came to me for advice, and my advice was to disregard all such orders, maintain his organization, and proceed to complete it according to law and the orders received from you; that whether the State had the right and power to form troops of her own out of any material she pleased was not a question to be disposed of by the order of a provost-marshal or any other military officer in the Confederate service. It was a question to be settled in the event of any difference between the Governor of the State and the President. He will stick to his position—he appears to be one of the sticking kind—and I am glad of it.

We are rejoiced to hear of the brilliant success of our arms on Red River. We may hope that great and happy results will flow from it, and that this miserable abolition spawning of which Hahn is the appropriate head may no longer disgrace the soil and character of the State. The crushing out of that dirty thing is a result most devoutly to be wished, and the power once in our hands, its very root should be extirpated from the land. Not a man should be suffered to breathe the air of our State who would avail himself of the hours of her misfortune to assassinate her civil and political life. We may be thankful that they have all marked themselves for retribution, and when the authority of the State shall re-enter its wonted field the purgation will be prompt and thorough.

We have the rumor here that Texada and Elgee have taken the oath to the United States Government. I cannot believe that it be true. Is it possible?

I should like to be in the field again; and if I was with the proper command I could render great service to the country in this district. I know all the country intimately. I know the people, and can draw them into the service and retain them. I could introduce and maintain both military and civil order here; could annoy the enemy and defend the country. The people and the soldiery from the river to the lakes desire it, and I am ready and willing to undertake it. I suppose, however, that Mr. Davis would consider it a personal favor to me to grant me such a command, and consequently would not do so. I have no personal ambition to gratify in the matter, but am simply willing to assume the position as a matter of public duty. If the idea meets your concurrence, and you are of opinion that my services would be of any value to the State and to the Confederacy, I commit myself to your hands, to do as you may think best. I should be glad to hear from you if convenient by the return of Mr. Gayle.

Very truly, yours,

MR. PRESIDENT: Herewith I have the honor to transmit the letter which His Holiness Pope Pius IX addressed to Your Excellency on the 3d of December last. Mr. W. Jefferson Buchanan has obligingly undertaken its conveyance and will deliver it in person.

This letter will grace the archives of the Executive Office in all coming time. It will live forever in story as the production of the first potentate who formally recognized your official position and accorded to one of the diplomatic representatives of the Confederate States an audience in an established court palace, like that of St. James or the Tuileries.

I have the honor to be, with the most distinguished consideration,
 Your Excellency's obedient servant,

A. DUDLEY MANN.

PIUS NINTH—POPE.

ILLUSTRIOUS AND HONORABLE SIR: Health! We have received with all fitting kindness the gentlemen sent by Your Excellency to deliver us your letters bearing date the 23d of September last. We certainly experienced no small pleasure when we learned from the same gentlemen and the letters of Your Excellency with what emotions of joy and gratitude toward us you were affected, illustrious and honorable sir, when you were first made acquainted with our letters to those reverend brethren, John, archbishop of New York, and John, archbishop of New Orleans, written on the 18th of October of last year, in which we again and again urged and exhorted the same reverend brethren that, as behooved their distinguished piety and their episcopal charge, they should most zealously use every effort in our name also, to bring to an end the fatal civil war that had arisen in those regions, and that those people of America might at length attain mutual peace and concord, and be united in mutual charity. And very grateful was it to us, illustrious and honorable sir, to perceive that you and those people were animated with the same feelings of peace and tranquillity which we so earnestly inculcated in the letters mentioned as having been addressed to the aforesaid reverend brethren. And would that other people also of those regions, and their rulers, seriously considering how grievous and mournful a thing is intestine war, would be pleased with tranquil minds to embrace and enter upon counsels of peace. We indeed shall not cease with most fervent prayers to beseech and pray God, the omnipotent and all-good, to pour out the spirit of Christian charity and peace upon all those people of America and deliver them from the evils so great with which they are afflicted.

And of the most merciful Lord of compassion himself, we likewise pray that He may illumine Your Excellency with the light of His grace, and may conjoin you in perfect love with ourself.

Given at Rome, at St. Peter's, December 3d, in the year 1863, and of our Pontificate the eighteenth.

PIUS P. P. IX.

CIRCULAR } WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 8. } Richmond, Va., May 9, 1864.

I. Medical directors will instruct the medical officers that in all cases requiring surgical interference in which no serious risk to life is incurred by such action, they have the power (in the opinion of this office, sustained by the approval of the Secretary of War) to compel submission to surgical operations. This opinion is expressed with the full appreciation of the mutual obligations resting upon the soldier and the service, and with the intention of securing the mutual advantages equally derived from a just fulfillment of these obligations. The power vested in the medical officer should be exercised firmly, yet with due delicacy and caution.

III. In view of their intrinsic value and of economy to the Government, and also the impracticability of procuring sufficient supplies of medicines from abroad, medical officers are again urged to avail themselves of the resources of our native materia medica by the employment of such indigenous remedies as have been prepared for issue by purveyors, or as may be found growing in proximity to every hospital and station.

I have purchased 30,000 soldiers' blankets for the State of Georgia now in the islands, and have to send out cotton to pay for them. The steamer Little Ada, chartered by the State, has been loaded for three weeks with about 300 bales of cotton, ready for sea. She lies thirty miles from Charleston. I ask clearance for her to go out now, while we have dark nights. She is detained at heavy expense to the State. I solicit an early reply.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Richmond, Va., May 10, 1864.

COMMISSARY-GENERAL:

The inclosed are a letter by M. L. Bonham, Governor of South Carolina, covering four papers of complaint, and a letter by Major Guerin, covering the reports by Major Trout and Captains Means and Conner relative to the matters complained of, which are respectfully submitted with the following suggestions, viz:

With regard to the general tenor of these complaints this Bureau may properly refer to the paper of investigation submitted by it 16th of December last relative to certain complaints laid before the Secretary of War by Governor Bonham. In that paper the view was entertained and expressed—

That it is when the impressing agents detect and seize the stores of these speculators and those in the hands of illiberal producers, which are either being held by them for the appreciation in prices or are latently wending their way to the markets to secure their already extravagant rates, that these complaints, urged as they are by these self-serving parties, come teeming in.

It would be difficult to conceive of a batch of complaints with a development of facts in regard to the complainants which would more aptly illustrate and verify the above-quoted view than this under consideration. Mr. Mark E. Cooper, being an agent of the Navy Department, is not responsible to this Bureau, yet he submits a report through Captain Means, which the latter so indorses as to render it of undoubted veracity; and from his report it appears that Montague's property has not been impressed, but his feelings have been so much disturbed in consequence of the interruption of his schemes for speculation that he has given vent to his rage by an expressed apprehension of an insurrection by the people. Robertson and Rutland both evince (according to Major Trout's showing) considerable illiberality and unwillingness to aid properly in supplying the wants of the Government, although the latter urges no complaint for himself. The former (Mr. Robertson), it appears, made his own selection (from his herd of twenty-odd cattle) of the two cows for the impressment of which he complains; and this selection, too, seems to have been made contrary to the suggestions of the impressing agent and the advice of his friend. Moreover, Mr. Myers, the agent, reports to Major Trout that he has never carried out the impressment in this case, nor had any cattle whatever from John E. Robertson. Indeed, these complaints and this revelation of the complainant's conduct in the premises are of a character not very creditable to the latter, to say the least of it. With regard to the circulars or notices of impressment here questioned, this Bureau may, in justice to itself, submit a reference to the indorsement by it of 16th January last on the letter by the Hon. A. P. Aldrich, inclosing notice served on J. J. Brabham, &c., the concluding sentence of which indorsement was as follows, viz:

It is requested that the War Department cause a form of impressment notice to be drawn up, so that all may be uniform.

Major Trout is certainly well protected against the charge of willful or gross misconduct in the use of his circular or impressment notice, first, because it is the production of Senator Orr; and secondly, because this notice seems to have been well sustained by the law and orders as they then stood, and the notice used by Mr. Heriot seems to have been equally well sustained by them at that time also.

Now, while this Bureau recognizes in the law and orders a grant of power to the officer (when ordered to impress) of a discretionary character as to the amount he may impress from each individual of the articles required, limited only by the exempting clauses in the law and orders and by the decision of the appraisers as to the quantity to be exempted, yet it does not fully approve in its officers any system of tithing by impressment which is not controlled by the circumstances in each case. This Bureau had already at the time the within reports were called for instructed these officers through Major Guerin that "it is not the policy of the Government in procuring its supplies to destroy breeding stock, but to draw from the surplus of that which is fit and designed for consumption."

In reply to the view taken by Governor Bonham that "the people of the towns and cities, many of them refugees, &c., are absolutely in want of the necessaries of life, and the reason is that these circulars have deterred many citizens from selling," &c., it is proper to say that the law makes such exemptions from seizures as in the wisdom of the legislators were thought sufficient to enable the citizens to hold their necessary supplies, which provision, together with that contained in General Orders, No. 144, series 1863, is, it would seem, amply sufficient and cannot be augmented without dangerously relaxing the entire system of impressment, so indispensable at this time as a means to aid in the procurement of army supplies.

Further, in vindication of these officers it does not appear from the within papers that the above provisions have been denied by any of them to the citizens. It is also respectfully submitted that the officers and agents for impressing in the State of South Carolina have (so far as this Bureau is advised) done as much to palliate and as little to harass the citizens under the onerous consequences of impressment in that as in any other State in the Confederate States.

Therefore, that the officers here charged should receive no additional admonition whatever, is respectfully submitted.

A. F. EDWARDS,

Captain and Assistant Commissary of Subsistence.

[Indorsement.]

Approved and respectfully forwarded, with the recommendation that copies of Major Trout's paper and the affidavit of Mr. Myers be furnished to Governor Bonham for his attention, as furnishing matter for executive animadversion. This Bureau believes that subsistence is more than usually abundant in South Carolina this year, and that there is not much danger of suffering, as supposed.

L. B. NORTHPROP,

Commissary-General.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Columbia, March 2, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: Inclosed I send you copies of a circular served upon many citizens by Major Trout, one by Captain Heriot, and copies of communications from citizens of this State, C. Montague and John E. Robertson, one under oath; also a printed slip by J. S. Hair, an agent of the Government. These afford illustrations of the complaints made by many citizens. You will perceive that Major Trout forbids the removal or disposal of the surplus at the peril of the owner, and Captain Heriot also forbids its removal or transfer. The effect of this course of conduct has been that the poor of the country, the people of the towns and cities, many of them refugees from States now in the hands of the enemy and from our own sea-coast, are absolutely in want of the necessaries of life, which can only be purchased at ruinous rates; and the reason is that these circulars have deterred many citizens from selling a bushel of meal or flour to the needy at home, and from bringing it to the cities, towns, and villages, through apprehension of interference by impressing officers. The slip published by J. S. Hair, agent, is one of many of the same kind, showing that the Government is unable to provide depots for the tax in kind or to transport it. It is not improbable that one-half of the tax in kind in South Carolina yet remains to be disposed of by Government, and yet you will see by these papers that the agents are either taking grain to send elsewhere or compelling the citizens to withhold it from the non-producers, refugees, and the poor. The attorney-general has given the opinion that "the service of this circular cannot be supposed to act as a lien on the property of the person to whom it is addressed, and the threat of personal peril arising from the disregard of a general notice of this character is not, I think, authorized by the act."

I call your attention further to the matter mentioned in the statement of Mr. Robertson that stock cattle—cows with calf—are being impressed. I have heard of similar cases. I have desired to avoid even the appearance of a conflict with the Confederate Government, and have therefore abstained from making any publication to the people of this opinion of the attorney-general, as desired by resolutions of the House of Representatives herewith inclosed, and of their rights, but prefer first to ask you to require these agents to undo the mischief they are working. The surplus products of the country above its absolute wants cannot get out of the Confederacy and will not be destroyed, so that when the Government shall have transported its tax in kind to where it is needed it will still be able to find this surplus, and most probably in the hands of those who above all others should feel the operations of the law of impressment. I ask your early attention to this subject.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. L. BONHAM.

J. M. RUTLAND,

Executor:

SIR: As division commissary for this district I desire to purchase all the produce now in your possession, amounting, as I am informed, to cattle, hogs, wheat, flour, bacon, sirup, &c. I am authorized to pay you the prices fixed by the commissioners of South Carolina for the same, and will pay in currency at my office. Upon your refusal or declining to accept the above offer, the emergency of the Army and my instructions from Major Guerin, chief commissary of South Carolina, require that I should impress the same, which I hereby do, except the necessary supplies for your consumption. If you decline to accept, you are also notified that any effort to remove or dispose of the same will be at your peril. Should you decline to sell as proposed in paragraph 7, then, upon your making affidavit that the above is the growth and produce of your farm, you will immediately select one loyal citizen and I will select another, and in the event of their disagreeing then they will select an umpire, and after being duly sworn shall assess just compensation for the aforesaid. If you have not grown, raised, or produced the same for family use (which you must also verify by affidavit) then you shall be paid for the same 35 cents net for beef, 40 cents per pound gross for hogs, sheep $15 per head, it being the prices given by the commissioners of South Carolina under the fifth section. of the impressment act.

Statesburg, S. C.:

SIR: I propose to purchase in behalf of the Confederate States of America the sorghum molasses and surplus corn, bacon, lard, and pickled beef now on your hands belonging to yourself or others, and hereby offer you for the molasses $4 per gallon; corn, $2.50 per bushel; bacon sides, $1; hams, 90 cents; shoulders, 85 cents; lard, $1; and pickled beef, 50 cents per pound, in currency. Should you decline the price offered, I will be obliged to impress the said property; in which case compensation will be made according to the act of Congress for the regulation of impressments. This is sufficient notice under the act to bind the said property until the completion of the negotiation, so that there can be no removal or transfer of the same.

Respectfully, &c.,

COLUMBIA, January 18, 1864.

His Excellency the GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA:

The affidavit of the subscriber sheweth that, having been in Union District last week, for the purpose of procuring food for his own and other families of the city of Columbia, he was informed by various planters of the district that a certain man, purporting to be acting by the authority of the Confederate States, by the name of McClure, had seized or notified them that if they would not sell him their wheat that he would take it; that he left, and another young, hearty, stout-looking man, by the name of Cooper, came to same district in a few days to carry Mr. McClure's plan into execution; that the subscriber received a message from the said Cooper to go and see him; that on Sunday evening last deponent went to see the said Cooper, and that Cooper told deponent not to remove the flour he had bought and paid for some time before until he received an affidavit from him and the others for whom he had purchased that it was for their own use; that deponent told him that Lincoln or the devil could not devise any better means of breaking up this Confederacy than the plans he told me of; that he came to Mr. John Long's late last Sunday night, and that Long told me that Cooper appointed him an agent, and that he was to get $5 a day for acting while he was absent; that this wheat was to be sent to Augusta immediately, and then sent to Charleston for the use of the Navy; that Mr. Long told deponent that Cooper told him they were also going to take the corn and peas and deal them out to the citizens as they needed them. These and a great many more unreasonable propositions and questions were asked the subscriber, one of which was the number of persons in subscriber's family, and how long a barrel of flour would last him; and that Cooper told him that negroes must not get flour; that subscriber told him he would not get corn down the road, and would not let the negroes perish; that Cooper was otherwise impertinent; that subscriber fully believes that if these wolves are suffered to harass the country in the way they propose that an insurrection of the citizens is imminent, and that anarchy will ensue; and that great discontent prevails already and threats made to withdraw their sons from the Army; and when Cooper was told of this by deponent that he said they would be soon put down; that Mr. Long told deponent that Cooper said that we did not know what kind of crops we were going to have next year, and it was best to store the flour, and when Long asked Cooper what would become of the poor, that he answered that they would take care of them themselves.

C. MONTAGUE.

Personally appeared before me C. Montague and made oath that the above statements are true.

RIDGEWAY, FAIRFIELD DISTRICT, December, 1863.

His Excellency Governor BONHAM:

DEAR SIR: As a citizen of this State I think it my duty to inform you of some of the acts of the impressing agents, or sub-agents, or treble agents, or whatever you may call them, as I do not know their titles. On this day one of Major Trout's agents impressed two of my cows with calf, I protesting against it. I only own twenty-five head of cattle, consisting of cows and yearlings. He said he had made it his rule to impress one-tenth of all the cattle in this neighborhood. I asked by what authority he acted. He said he had done so to make it equal. I asked him how he knew there were that many. His answer was that he knew. I told him I objected because I had no beef-cattle, and that I wanted to increase my stock. I have eighty negroes or more on my plantation, and that I wanted the milk; as I only had about thirty hogs to kill, as it was cheaper to buy them before the war than to raise them, but if the agents were to go on in this way we will have no stock cattle, and I am afraid nothing else. I have inclosed you his impressment bill* on one of my neighbors. I asked him if he intended to give me a receipt for what he impressed. He said no; but he said he would take a receipt from me for the money. I told him he must give me a receipt, so as to show the next agent that came along. If the Government wanted the cattle, or if I had any beef-cattle, they could have them, but I did not believe they wanted stock-cattle. He said he would impress all my corn. I told him no; that I had agreed to support Doctor Powell and family, consisting of twenty-seven in white and black, and four head of stock, at $2 per bushel; and Doctor Powell was medical purveyor of A. P. Hill's division, and depending on me for supplies.

I have stated to you the facts of the case. I hope you will inform me how to act in this matter. If it is law there will be starvation in the country. We are willing to pay one-tenth to the Government, but nobody to receive it as yet. The agent pretends to be acting under some other authority. I am very sorry to intrude on you so much. I will be governed by your directions.

Hoping you will reply right off, I am, yours,

JOHN E. ROBERTSON.

OFFICE OF CHIEF COMMISSARY,
Charleston, April 26, 1864.

Col. L. B. NORTHROP,

Commissary-General of Subsistence, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith the replies of Major Trout and Captains Means and Conner to the several papers transmitted, with the letter of Capt. A. F. Edwards of the 16th of March. I have delayed sending these replies until I should receive that of Major Trout, which came to hand last night.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. C. GUERIN,
Major and Chief Commissary.

[Sub-inclosure No. 1.]

OFFICE OF DIVISION COMMISSARY,
Chesterville, S. C., April 16, 1864.

Maj. H. C. GUERIN,

Commissary of Subsistence:

MAJOR: The package of papers referred to me from your office under date of March 20, 1863 [1864], has my attention. I will simply premise that the delay in answering the complaints urged against my agents and myself has been caused by pressing business and having no assistance in my office. I have taken the liberty of numbering the papers so as to answer more intelligibly.

In answer to paper No. 1, indorsed "Major Trout's circular," I simply inclose one of the printed forms used, together with an affidavit of Mr. J. H. Devereux in relation to the authorship of this notice, which authorship certainly led me more readily to use that form.*

By paper No. 2 it appears that Mr. Robertson (John E.) complains of my agent having impressed two of his cows with calf, he protesting.† He likewise forwards the impressment notice and advocates the cause of Mr. J. M. Rutland, executor of the estate of Peay, in Fairfield District. In answer I beg leave to submit the attested statement of Mr. Franklin Myers, my agent in Fairfield District; also his letter to me (a copy thereof) dated December 18, 1863. This letter will exhibit the fact that the amount impressed from Mr. Rutland, executor, was far below the proportion adopted by Mr. Myers; and I will here state that in adopting a rule of this kind several of my agents were guided by their own judgment, and did it simply with a view to equalize the burden to the people. In carrying out this rule some of the agents caused the cattle to be penned; then he selected one head, the next choice to be given to the Government being accorded to the owner of the cattle, and so on alternately until the one-tenth was exhausted. The parties were, however, notified that in case of further need another draft would be made upon them.

* For affidavit, see p. 412.

† See p. 407.

In relation to Mr. Rutland's case, I will state that in the entire Third Purchasing Division of South Carolina he is the only party who has forced me to issue impressment paper, and in this case I felt it my duty to proceed; otherwise the people of moderate means seeing a man of wealth allowed to retain his cattle, a disposition to do the same might become general and force me to a general impressment. The statement of John E. Robertson in regard to the impressment of his two cows with calf is rebutted by Mr. Myers' sworn statement, and Mr. Myers informs me that he has never carried out the impressment in this case, nor had any cattle whatever from Mr. John E. Robertson.

Paper No. 3 is indorsed "Copy of letter of Governor M. L. Bonham, Columbia, S. C., March 2, 1864."* In connection with this I will premise that while the Legislature was in session I was in Columbia and conversed with one of the members of that body, stating to him the mode of procedure adopted by me in procuring the provisions of the country. In answer to the letter of His Excellency Governor Bonham I will state that General Orders, No. 37, section 11, paragraph II, distinctly states that the notice which the officer is directed to serve upon the owner "shall bind the said property until the completion of the negotiation for the sale or appropriation thereof, so that there can be no removal or transfer of the same;" and as regards the nature of the peril incurred, I have never regarded it as His Excellency terms it, "personal peril," but only that peril which every person incurs in resisting the carrying out of the laws by the properly authorized officers. Governor Bonham states that the effect of this notice has been to cause distress to the poor of the country, the people of the towns and cities, and refugees, &c. To this I answer that I received orders from the chief commissary of the State, Maj. H. C. Guerin, commissary of subsistence, not to interfere with provisions in transit to the markets, and I have given to all agents from the first moment of my taking charge of this division strict orders on this point, and I have frequently seen parcels of subsistence stores passing over the roads to Columbia and Charleston, and have often aided their transit. If the people of the towns and cities have suffered, it has most likely been from the speculators among themselves, to whom the farmers have been eager to sell the supplies which the Government needed for higher prices than the Department was authorized to pay, and who, swarming the country, have overbid each other and continued to accede to the increased demands of the farmers, and then in turn exacted from their customers prices and profits to suit their views.

As regards preventing the sale of a bushel of meal or flour to the needy at home, this may have happened, but I opine it was only in cases where the holders were only too glad to have a loop-hole to escape from that duty of benevolence; and I imagine that at the same time the opportunity was not lost to get good prices from speculators. It is true that supplies were interrupted, or rather that I vainly endeavored to interrupt them in transit out of the State. In this I acted under orders, but not being supported, and in danger of coming in conflict with the people, I abandoned the efforts, and thousands of bushels and pounds of subsistence stores have passed out, sold by the farmer to parties from neighboring States. This has been also another fruitful cause of the exorbitant demands of the farmers for provisions.

* See p. 404.

I note that Governor Bonham's letter is dated on March 2, 1864; the action of the Legislature was in December, 1863. The difference in time has made a great change in circumstances. In December last the tenth only of wheat, peas, &c., was the only portion being taken up by the tax-in-kind department, from whom our department received the tenth. This forced us to purchase corn, and failing to obtain it by purchase, to give notice that we would impress; but little, however, was taken in that way in this division. No bacon was then coming in, and hogs we could not obtain; consequently beef-cattle were an absolute necessity. These were not included in the tenth, and I was directed to make strenuous efforts to obtain as many as possible.

Finally, I beg leave to submit that in none of the districts under my charge has there been any complaint, except where the agents, misunderstanding their instructions, have created some excitement; and in some instances I have met with approbation from those whose property has been drawn upon by my orders for the suavity I have exercised to them in pursuance of my duties. I beg leave to submit herewith papers numbered 4, 5, 6, and 7; also to refer to a letter (a copy of which I have means of obtaining) written by William M. Shannon, esq., to General Beauregard, complaining of the foraging parties in Kershaw District from some command on the coast, in which he speaks of the action of Mr. J. H. Devereux, my agent in that district, as perfectly satisfactory. My only desire has been to perform my duty to the Government, and it was my openly declared intention in taking charge of this division not to come into conflict with the people, and I am satisfied that as a general thing I have been successful.

I am, major, with respect, your obedient servant,

T. B. TROUT,
Major and Commissary of Subsistence.

[Paper No. 4.]

CAMDEN, April 6, 1864.

I state with pleasure that I have never heard of any complaints against the commissary agent at this point. We pretty generally complied with his requisitions cheerfully, feeling that although it was a sacrifice to give our stock, that our Army needed it, which was sufficient impressment for me.

JNO. M. DE SAUSSURE.

[Paper No. 5.]

CAMDEN, April 9, 1864.

I state with pleasure that I never heard of any complaints against the agent of the Commissary Department at this place, and if any abuse of the law has taken place it is unknown to me. I have not any general intercourse with the people of this district, but I have heard frequent discussions among individuals as to impressments, and have not heard Mr. Devereux's conduct censured.

G. J. WITHERS.

[Paper No. 6.]

CAMDEN, April 8, 1864.

I certify on honor that while in the employ of the Commissary Department, under T. B. Trout, major and commissary of subsistence, I endeavored to discharge my duty in strict accordance with his orders, and that in doing so I never found it necessary to abuse or trespass on the rights of my fellow-citizens. I never selected cattle intended for the use of the Army, always leaving to the planter to give what he could best spare from his stock. I made no case of impressment; the people generally complied with request to sell me a portion of their stock.

JOHN CANTRY.

CAMDEN, April 6, 1864.

I certify on honor that I never received an order from T. B. With reference to my abusing the authority vested in me, I appeal to the gentlemen whose certificates accompany this certificate.

OFFICE ASSISTANT COMMISSARY OF SUBSISTENCE,

Alston, March 27, 1864.

Maj. H. C. GUERIN,

Commissary of Subsistence, Charleston:

MAJOR: A copy of the complaint of C. Montague to the Governor of South Carolina, with your indorsement, has been received. I would respectfully state that Mr. Cooper is a Navy agent, acting under the orders of Secretary Mallory, and is entirely independent of me. He is authorized to purchase and impress if necessary anywhere in the States of North and South Carolina. His instructions are to report to district commissaries wherever he may design operating, only with a view to prevent any conflict between them as to prices. While I do not in the least consider myself responsible for his acts, yet from my knowledge of his operations in my district I am willing to indorse him as a zealous, energetic, and skillful agent, and have been informed by a superior officer in his department that he was the best agent the Navy had. Mr. Cooper and myself have had frequent interviews, and he has unreservedly told me his plans and what he was doing, and I have invariably found his statements corroborated by the testimony of others. He has never to me indulged in the expression of such sentiments as those attributed to him by Mr. Long. There are some circumstances connected with Mr. Long's statement (within my own knowledge) that would make me extremely cautious in receiving it to the detriment of Mr. Cooper's reputation. From Mr. Montague's own statement it appears that he gave Mr. Cooper occasion to be what he terms "impertinent." Mr. Cooper (although a Government agent) is, I presume, in some respects like other men—can be provoked to strike back. In this case I think it probable he might have thought it best to obey the Bible injunction, "Treat a fool according to his folly." It is by no means impossible to provoke a man to say harsh things, and then make an ex parte statement apparently injurious to him. This thing has been very often done against that much abused class of men known as Government agents, or, as Mr. Montague would say, "wolves." When a man is pursuing a straightforward, upright, and honorable course he seldom refuses to make the necessary showing when demanded by one who even has the shadow of authority. It appears that Mr. Cooper had no intention of taking from Mr. Montague his necessary supplies, but not knowing him from any other speculator perhaps thought it best to ask the proof. Instead of feeling a just pride in vindicating himself, and showing that he was not aiming to evade the obvious intention of the law, he accuses Mr. Cooper of hitting upon a better plan for breaking up the Confederacy than had ever entered into the minds of Lincoln or the devil to devise; complains to the Governor and calls Mr. Cooper "impertinent," "wolf," &c. It really appears that he thought every one should know Mr. Montague, and that was sufficient, and that it was high treason even to question him. Unfortunately we seldom hear of our Governor except as he occasionally flings at the General Government and its agents. With your permission I will refer this matter to Mr. Cooper, feeling assured that he can and will vindicate. I disclaim being responsible for his acts only so far as my most cordial approval of those that have come under my observation will go. I will take pleasure in forwarding to you Mr. Cooper's report as soon as received.

I am, major, yours, very respectfully,

S. C. MEANS,

Maj. H. C. GUERIN,

Commissary of Subsistence, Charleston, S. C.:

MAJOR: I am this morning in receipt of copy of circular issued by Captain Heriot, which has an indorsement of your own. I have the honor to state that in a circular issued by me to the agents instructions were given to make due allowance for the wants of non-producers, and I am sure such allowance has been made. Since I have been in charge of the division but one impressment has been made. Notices have been served in one or two instances, but have been withdrawn at the parties' request. As far as my agents report, I think planters have as little to complain of in my division as in any part of the Confederacy.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,

Kershaw District:

Personally appeared before me, a magistrate of this district, John H. Devereux, who, being duly sworn, deposeth that in August, 1863, he was in the employ of the Commissary Department, and that he had occasion to visit Anderson Court-House, S. C. While there an impressment was about to be made, and the question arose as to which was the best form for serving a notice; that the Hon. James L. Orr was present, and the question was referred to him; that he, the said James L. Orr, told deponent to draw up a form; that deponent did so, but as the form did not meet his views the said James L. Orr did with his own hands draw up and write on paper a form; and deponent further stated that this form was placed in an impression copying book by Capt. K. L. Simons, assistant commissary of subsistence, the officer in charge of that purchasing division, and a copy taken; that the copy was given to deponent, the said Capt. K. L. Simons keeping the original. Deponent further stateth that from this copy he had printed a number of forms, one of which in October, 1863, he sent by mail to Maj. T. B. Trout, assistant commissary of subsistence, Chester Court-House, and at the same time stating that the form was prepared by the Hon. James L. Orr. Deponent also stated that the said Maj. T. B. Trout, assistant commissary of subsistence, did have printed and put into use a number of these forms, and that he, the said deponent, believeth that Maj. T. B. Trout, assistant commissary of subsistence, adopted this form in consequence of the authorship.

WINNSBOROUGH, March 31, 1864.

Maj. T. B. TROUT:

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiries relative to the complaints made against me as an agent of the Government by Mr. John E. Robertson, in behalf of himself and Mr. Rutland as executor, I desire to submit the following statement:

That soon after my appointment as agent, knowing that Mr. Rutland as executor had a good many beeves, I called on him to purchase some for the department. He seemed not at all inclined to accommodate me, and I soon found out that if I got the number of beeves I supposed I was entitled to I would have to impress. In fact, he informed me that I could only get them according to law. I then served him with notice of impressment, which notice, through inexperience, was improperly filled out, as I discovered next day. I then served him with another notice properly filled out. After the notice was served and the persons were to be selected by the parties to appraise the property, Mr. Rutland selected Mr. John E. Robertson. To him I objected, because I believed he was not a loyal citizen required by the law, and would not act impartially in the matter. I concluded for several reasons that he was not loyal, and especially because I had just heard him say that he thought we (meaning the seceded States) had best compromise on the best terms we could and get back into the old Union; and previously I had heard him say that he thought the sooner this damned Government fell to pieces the better it would be for us. Indeed, it seems strange that Mr. Robertson, wholly disconnected with the parties interested in Colonel Peay's estate, should manifest so much interest in the welfare thereof and attempt to guard it against this deponent, who is a first cousin to all the parties interested therein. Mr. Robertson himself was served with a notice of impressment, which has never been formally carried out. After this notice Mr. Robertson exhibited to deponent some twenty-odd head of cattle, from which deponent selected a yearling, and Mr. Robertson objected to that and pointed out two cows which he said he preferred to part with and could spare best, as they were old. Deponent and Mr. Jones, the friend of Robertson, both suggested to Robertson he had better retain these cows as they were with calf. Robertson still insisted he could part with these two best. Deponent would here boldly express the opinion that Mr. Robertson was not influenced by any pure or laudable motive in making the representations he has done to His Excellency in this behalf. I am sure that he has suffered nothing at my hands as an agent of the Government that will justify him in the course he has taken.

In conclusion I would suggest that Mr. Rutland, being a man and a good lawyer, would at least be as able as Mr. Robertson is to defend himself if he thought himself aggrieved.

Yours, respectfully,

FRANK MYERS.

Maj. T. B. TROUT,

Chester:

DEAR SIR: I inclose you a letter from J. M. Rutland, executor of the estate of Peay, in this district. I began buying, and when parties refused to sell I impressed one-tenth of every man's cattle. Rutland has 300 head of cattle. I require of him thirty head as the quota, and you see what he says. I did do wrong in agreeing at first to let him off with eight, but I immediately reconsidered the matter and came to the conclusion that I must discharge this duty impartially and make him furnish what all of his neighbors had done—one-tenth of the number. His statement as regards my visiting one man and taking none is incorrect. You will please instruct me how to proceed in this matter. Write to me at Ridgeway.

Yours, respectfully,

FRANK MYERS.

P. S.—Shall I impress corn? No one will sell, and I think there is 10,000 bushels of surplus corn in the neighborhood where I now am.

[Inclosure.]

LONGTOWN, December 18, 1863.

DEAR SIR: I received your letter by Nap., and read it with surprise. It seems to me that you are entirely at sea on the subject of impressment. You first claim everything except a bare support for the place. You next claim one-tenth of the hogs, cattle, sheep, bacon, &c., and next one-tenth of the cattle, and finally firmly agree that you will accept eight beeves as the quota of this estate; and I am told in one instance you have visited a citizen of this place who objects to furnishing of his cattle, and that you have acquiesced, or at least did not impress. To be candid with you, I think it is your duty to find out where there is a surplus of hogs and cattle, and take from such surplus only what is necessary to satisfy the present necessities of that portion of the army which you are acting for. We have no surplus on this estate except of corn, fodder, peas, and a little wheat. We have raised no cattle except for our own use for several years, and I can safely make affidavit that we have raised neither hogs nor cattle except for our own use, and that we have no more than we need for use. I consented, however, to spare eight beeves to you, and I am perfectly certain if others will do as much in proportion you will get more beeves than you will need for months to come. Besides your adopting the rule of impressing one-tenth of a man's entire stock, and taking your tenth in number altogether of beef-cattle is entirely arbitrary and unjust, and without authority, even where there is a surplus, unless it can be shown that the necessities of the army imperatively demand it. I am still willing to comply with the agreement made with you this morning, but I will not consent to go beyond it, and if you get more you will have to take it by force, and if it comes to that perhaps you ought to be careful not to overstep the limits of your authority. I don't wish to be offensive, but I wish to speak plainly. I think your demands on the community at this time, if you require of others as you seemed disposed to require of me, amount to a great deal more than the army you are acting for has any use for at present, and I know something of its numbers as well as you, and of course can judge as well as you.

Respectfully, yours,

J. M. RUTLAND,
Executor.

P. S.—Since receiving your letter I shall not drive in the eight beeves unless I hear from you again.

MARION, May 10, 1864.

Hon. W. P. CHILTON:

MY DEAR SIR: It is evident that if the army bill of the last session of Congress is carried into effect by sending the reserves to the camp of instruction this month it will be productive of incalculable misery without any corresponding benefit. I do not pretend to know what the military necessities of the country are, but I am informed that it is not the purpose of the Government to call the reserves into the field at this time, there being no necessity for it, but that with the view of organizing them into companies, regiments, &c., the reserves are ordered to the camp of instruction, and when these organizations are completed they, the reserves, will be furloughed home. Some weeks will be required to effect this. Nine-tenths of the reserves are laboring men, who make their living by their own manual labor on their farms. To take them from their farms at this season of the year and keep them away for a few weeks would result in the loss of their crops. After their crops are "laid by" they would much better spare three months from home than ten days now. I therefore earnestly solicit you to urge the Secretary of War to suspend the order to send the reserves to the conscript camp.

Yours, truly,

W. M. BROOKS.

[Indorsement.]

Respectfully referred to the Honorable Secretary of War, asking his particular consideration of the within suggestions.

RICHMOND, May 10, 1864.

His Excellency Governor BROWN:

Your telegram of the 9th to the President in relation to the steamer Ada has been referred to this Department. On the 12th of April a telegram was sent to you stating that the act of Congress imposing restrictions on export of cotton required that the regulation of trade should be uniform. Therefore the requirement that one-half of the cargo of every outward-bound vessel should be for account of the Confederate States cannot be relinquished as an exception in your favor. April 27 Mr. Lamar applied for a clearance for this steamer, and was informed that she could not go until she complied with the regulation.

HEADQUARTERS CONSCRIPTION, STATE OF GEORGIA,
Macon, Ga., May 10, 1864.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Governor of Georgia:

SIR: It having been reported to me from many counties in the State that men enrolled under the act of Congress 17th of February, 1864, "to organize forces to serve during the war," are claiming exemption from service by virtue of their election to civil State offices subsequent to date of enrollment, and under the erroneous impression that you will protect them in their claims, I have the honor, very respectfully, to request you to authorize me to inform the officers under my command that you will not countenance claims for exemption from military service on the ground of election to State offices subsequent to enrollment in the C. S. Army. It [is] my earnest desire to avoid, by myself and by my officers, any real or apparent conflict with the officials of the State, and am therefore very desirous that Your Excellency should make such declaration as would remove the difficulty to which I have referred and which is of constant occurrence.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. M. BROWNE,
Colonel and Commandant.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, N. C., May 11, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond:

SIR: Circumstances have arisen which make it necessary that I should again call your attention to the claim which the State of North Carolina has against the Confederate Government for cotton loaned it some twelve months since. The cotton loaned was part of that purchased by the State and pledged to parties in Europe, who upon such pledge advanced the money necessary to purchase and bring over army supplies. The terms upon which this cotton was so pledged were that the party holding the obligation might at any time, on sixty days' notice, receive the cotton from the State. This notice has now been given, and the credit of the State requires that the cotton shall be delivered. The cotton loaned to the Confederate Government was loaned with the distinct understanding that it was to be returned at any time when called for, and at the port of Wilmington, and yet, in answer to repeated applications, I have received but 300 bales, leaving 1,500 still due. In the present juncture of military affairs it is impossible to command transportation, and unless you order your agent in Wilmington to pay the debt due the State her credit must suffer. Should the credit of the State abroad receive this blow it will very seriously cripple me in my efforts to bring in supplies of food and clothing, which efforts up to this time have been attended with a fair portion of success, and this blow will most unnecessarily be inflicted by the Confederate Government. The Government has now lying in the town of Wilmington, in charge of the Navy Department, a large amount of cotton, and the War Department, I am informed, has also a large amount there. I submit to you, sir, that I should not be met by the answer that the cotton was loaned to the War Department and that cotton belonging to the Navy Department cannot be used. The loan was made to the Government, and justice demands that it should be paid, even at some inconvenience. I will be most entirely satisfied with an order on your agent at Wilmington to deliver to my agent 500 bales of cotton per month until the debt is discharged, and as I am so moderate in my demands I have every hope that I will not be disappointed.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. B. VANCE.

To Colonel Bayne for attention and remarks.

[Second indorsement.]

MAY 28, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The same exigency (demand for transporting food for the Army) prevents the War Department from bringing its cotton to Wilmington. The cotton has been due to the State a long time, and I propose to pay as desired at the risk of not having an adequate supply for shipment; and I inclose orders with letter I respectfully propose should be sent to Governor Vance. The quantity of cotton due is, I think, about 1,000 bales.

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA RESERVES,

Macon, May 12, 1864.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,

Governor, &c., Milledgeville, Ga.:

SIR: Your letter of the 5th instant reached me to-day, and I reply to once, to correct some of the misapprehensions under which you are laboring; and I must express my regret in finding that I was mistaken in the inference which I drew from your published proclamation, that you would co-operate with the Confederate authorities in their efforts to carry to the Army all men who could serve the country better in the field than at home. There was certainly nothing in the language I quoted from that address to induce me to look for a labored argument from you in justification of the course of those who were seeking the evasion of duty under the cover of State commissions.

In imputing to the officers of the Confederate Government the doctrine that "the States derive their powers and the people of the States their rights and privileges from the will of Congress," you have done them an injustice, of which I presume you were fully conscious at the time you penned the charge. To suppose otherwise would be to impute to Your Excellency a degree of ignorance which it would be offensive to intimate. The only ground upon which you can justify such an imputation in this correspondence is the fact that I addressed you under (what now seems to be) the mistaken supposition that Your Excellency had determined to comply with the act of Congress calling upon the Executives of the several States to "certify" what officers were required for the proper administration of the respective State governments. I did not suppose that I had subjected myself to so grave and unjust a criticism by manifesting confidence in the Governor of my State to the extent of believing that he would comply with an act of Congress of which he had made no official complaint and with the provisions of which the Executives of other States had cheerfully and promptly complied. I did not suppose that the sons of Georgia, who had manifested their devotion to her, her rights, and sovereignty in every way in their power, would forfeit their claims of loyalty to that sovereignty and those rights by complying themselves and expecting others to comply with the laws of the Confederate Government. They supposed a law that could be enforced in Virginia and the other States of the Confederacy, and cheerfully responded to by Governor Smith and the Executives of other States without impairing the rights or violating the sovereignty of those States, might be enforced in Georgia with equal impunity and responded to with equal cheerfulness; and I venture, even at the hazard of incurring again Your Excellency's rebuke, to say that such would have been the case if the Governor of Georgia had, like the Governor of Virginia, witnessed in person the privations and sufferings of our brave soldiers in the field and shared with them, as he did, the hardships of the camp and the dangers of the battle-field. It was the personal knowledge by Governor Smith of the wants of our Army and the necessity of bringing to their support every able-bodied man who could be spared from his pursuits at home, that induced on his part a cordial co-operation with the Confederate Government, increasing the numbers of the Army and thereby adding to its efficiency. A similar experience on the part of Your Excellency might have induced similar action.

It was quite natural that I should have fallen into the error of supposing that Your Excellency intended to comply with the act of Congress from another consideration. I saw in your published address that you had furnished to the authorities at Richmond the certificate which the act of Congress required. It is true you state the fact that the Legislature had declared that all civil and military officers should be exempt; still you did not say that the Legislature demanded the exemption, but that you claimed it. Your language is: "I claim as exempt all civil and military officers of the State." If, as you now intimate, you regarded the act of Congress as an infringement of the sovereignty and rights of the State of Georgia, why did you humble that sovereignty and compromise those rights by a pretended compliance with a law of Congress which you considered and intended to treat as a nullity?

I submit that it would have been more candid and dignified to have said to the Confederate Government that you refused to comply with a law that you had determined to nullify.

Not only so, but in the very certificate you furnished in response to the law of Congress, you do not content yourself with informing the President of the action of the Legislature, but you add:

I therefore hereby certify, in conformity to the resolution of the General Assembly of this State, that I consider all civil and military officers of this State who hold commissions or have been appointed as directed by the constitution and laws of this State to be necessary for the proper administration of the government of this State.

This [is] a plain, unequivocal certificate that you consider all military and civil officers in Georgia necessary for the proper administration of the State government. Now, I am informed that there are at least 2,726 militia officers in the State. In your message to the late extra session of the Legislature, alluding to the act of Congress, you say:

If the act is executed in this State it deprives her of her whole active militia.

Well, the act is being executed in Georgia with the concurrence and approval of the Legislature, and, according to your own official statement, there is now no active militia in the State.

How, then, are these 2,726 militia officers necessary for the proper administration of the State government? To what use or purpose are they applied? The only legitimate use to be made of them is, that they should take military charge of themselves, for they constitute in and of themselves their sole and entire command. You have solemnly stated that you consider them necessary for the proper administration of the State government. Such is your certificate to the President, but in your reply to my communication you no longer pretend that such is the case; you now put your action purely and simply upon the resolution of the Legislature, and seek to place upon that body the odium and responsibility of withholding these and other sinecure officials from the Army. I cannot pass unnoticed this attempt to throw upon the Legislature the just indignation universally felt at the effort to keep able-bodied men out of the service. In my former letter to you I expressed the opinion, based upon my knowledge of the members of that body, that they never intended to withhold from the Army some five or six thousand men liable to military service, as by your certificate has been done. I repeat that opinion, notwithstanding your gratuitous assumption that it reflects upon the intelligence of the body. My remark does the members of the Legislature the justice to believe that they would scorn to participate in the wrong and injustice done both to the country and our noble Army by the withholding of these sinecure officers from military service. Your defense puts upon the members of the Legislature the entire odium and responsibility of the act. I am more than willing that they shall be the judges between us as to who has done them the greater wrong—I, in saying that they never intended to screen holders of sinecures from their duty, or you, in making them responsible for what you have done yourself. Before your efforts to throw upon others the responsibility which has attached to yourself in this matter succeeds, the public will be curious to know why you did not arrest the action of the Legislature by your favorite resort to the veto power, if, indeed, you did not approve and sanction this wholesale exemption of sinecure officers.

In view of the fact that you first gave a certificate, as required by the act of Congress, and your present denial of any intention to recognize the obligation of the law, I conclude that your position is this: You comply with the law in form, and nullify it in substance. Whatever doctrine our supreme court may have announced in the decisions to which you refer, I feel confident you will find nothing in those decisions to justify such a practice in morals.

Though I do find in the decisions quoted in your letter that our supreme court holds that "the enrollment (by the Confederate Government) of the officers and agents by whom the State governments are operated, and without whose agency their machinery must stop," would be violative of the very existence of the State government, and hence void; yet you can not fail to observe the strict conformity of the act of Congress to the doctrine of our supreme court, for that act in terms exempts all officers necessary for the proper administration of the State government; but neither Congress nor our supreme court, nor anybody else but Your Excellency, ever conceived the idea that justices of the peace who never held a court, constables who never served a warrant, and militia officers who have no men to command were necessary for the proper administration of the State government, "without whose agency the machinery must stop."

Will even Your Excellency on calm reflection assert and certify that in any county in Georgia twenty justices of the peace and an equal number of constables are necessary for the proper administration of the State government, and that "without their agency you have serious apprehensions the machinery of the State government must stop." It does seem to me your fears and apprehensions might be quieted, especially in those districts which have had no justices or constables for several years preceding the time when the present incumbents sought and obtained those offices to keep out of the Army.

You seem to think that there is ample justification for withholding these men from the field, and protecting them in their "official retreats," in the fact that there are "Confederate officers, agents, and detailed men, who as the favorites of power have obtained safe and comfortable positions in the rear, while their less favored comrades who seldom get furloughs or details are required to meet the enemy in front." Granting the truth and justice of this imputation upon the Confederate officers and men on duty in the rear, instead of inducing you to withhold still others from the field, if you are the friend you profess to be of our gallant soldiers in the front, it should have stimulated your efforts to fill up their decimated ranks and strengthen their efficiency. It will be hard to convince those true and brave men that you were befriending them in the hours of their greatest trials by keeping out of the Army justices of the peace who have not a case upon their docket, constables who never saw a warrant, and militia officers whose whole duty consists in drilling themselves. It may be that there are Confederate officers and men in the rear who are more needed in front, and who are engaged, as you allege, in attending to their private interests and the disgraceful practice of speculation. You know that such is not the case with all of these officers, and that some of them at least occupy their present positions not at their own suggestion, but in obedience to the orders of those who have the right to assign them to these duties. But if it was otherwise, there is this striking difference in their case and that of your sinecure officials: They have seen service in the field, and have borne the heat and burden of the war in the past; they have, for a time at least, endured the privations of the camp, and encountered the dangers of the battlefield, whereas your officials have from the beginning enjoyed the same quiet and security from danger which have fallen to the lot of Your Excellency. Besides, these Confederate officers and men are liable to be summoned to active service at any moment, whereas your officials have secured permanent exemption. It may relieve to some extent your feelings on this subject to know that one of the main objects in organizing this Reserve Corps is to relieve these very Confederate officers and men from duty in the rear and send them to the front, leaving the easier duties in which they are at present engaged to the men now being called out. Already has this object been accomplished in part, and some of the old veterans thus relieved are on their way to join their comrades in the field. Others will follow in due time.

The habit of speculation, whether indulged in by Confederate or State officers, or any others, is equally reprehensible, and as Your Excellency doubtless has personal knowledge of such conduct among State officers, I commend to your consideration the propriety of a thorough examination into and public exposure of all such cases.

The complaint you make that your militia organization has been broken up by the action of Congress in bringing the men who composed that militia into Confederate service, and that the proper defense of the State has thereby been weakened, is not justified by the facts unless you intend to throw every obstacle in your power in the way of the efficient organization of the Reserve Corps. Unfortunately for the good of the country you have it in your power to do much mischief in this way, though it will not go to the extent you intimate.

As all the material that belonged to your active militia is transferred by the act of Congress to the Reserve Corps, I do not see why the men cannot be as well spared from their business at home to serve in the one as in the other organization. If these very men could be spared from their official duties to serve in the active militia, I do not see why they may not be as well spared to serve in the Reserve Corps. The only difference is that in the one case the force would be under your command and control, and in the other it will be under the command and control of the President. You seem to think that its efficiency would be greatly increased by having the control yourself, but in this opinion I apprehend you will find few, if any, to agree with you. One thing is certain—the Legislature entertained a different opinion, for notwithstanding your earnest protest, that body did not hesitate to say by their action in turning over these men to the Confederate authorities they preferred the President to yourself. In the correctness of that decision of the Legislature there is a very general, if not universal, concurrence. Your Excellency constitutes as far as I know the solitary exception. You say:

Prior to the extension of conscription from seventeen to fifty the President never made a requisition upon me for troops that I did not fill. To his last call I responded with more than double the number required.

This reference to your response to the last call of the President is an unfortunate one if brought forward as evidence of your peculiar qualification for raising and organizing troops. It is true you furnished the President, on paper, double the number he asked for, but owing to your divisions of the State into territorial districts, beyond which the troops could not be required to go, the number of men obtained where their services were needed, in response to every appeal and effort that could be made, was not much greater than one-half the number called for by the President.

The anxiety which you manifest for the agricultural interest and your fears that it might be seriously injured by a withdrawal of too large a portion of that worthy class of our people into the public service involve matters of grave importance which have received, and will continue to receive, the earnest consideration of the Confederate authorities. Details and furloughs for the benefit of this interest can be as freely made under the existing organization as could have been done under your militia organization. If it is not done it will not be owing to any unwillingness on the part of the Confederate authorities to make such details and furloughs, but will be attributable to the fact [that] you have withheld so many sinecure officers from the service. I am aware that some of these officials belong to this class, but a large number of them are, doubtless, of that non-producing class whose absence from home would cause no injury to the agricultural interest. If these men could have been brought into the Army a proportionate number of our farmers and mechanics could have been permitted to return to their homes. As it is, these worthy and useful citizens must be kept away from their business for the benefit of the less useful but more fortunate holders of State commissions in sinecure offices. To the utmost extent, however, that it can be done consistent with the public interest, I have no hesitation in saying details and furloughs will be granted.

In view of the deep interest you manifest on the subject, and satisfied as you must be that the resolution of the Legislature under which you profess to act was never intended to receive the construction you have placed upon it, I submit whether the circumstances would not justify another extra session of that body, that your hands might be untied and the services of your sinecure officials secured to take the place of the farmers and mechanics now kept from their farms and workshops. As in the programme of efficient defense which you had provided in your disbanded militia organization, you evidently calculated upon the services of your militia officers in the field, I am sure you do not consider it "necessary for the proper administration of the State government" that they should be kept permanently at home.

You are right in supposing that I am anxious to make the Reserve Corps—to the command of which I have been assigned—as large and efficient as practicable. It is my duty to do so, and I am happy to know in discharging that duty I am advancing the best interests of the country. The strength and efficiency of the Army are objects of vital importance, and those objects cannot be more efficiently advanced than by adding to its numbers. I regret that the zeal I have manifested in this matter should have incurred your implied censure, but am consoled with the reflection that it will be more kindly and favorably regarded by the brave and gallant men of our Army, who will see in it a desire to add to their strength, increase their efficiency, and advance the best interests of our country.

The liberty exercised by Confederate officers and men of participating in the discussion of political questions affecting the interests of their State seems to be a grave offense in your eye. I am charitable enough to believe that you would have regarded their conduct in this particular in a far different light if they could have found in Your Excellency's course more to approve and less to condemn. You should bear in mind that is your fault, not theirs.

I am, respectfully,

HOWELL COBB,
Major-General, Commanding.

RICHMOND, VA., May 13, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to return to you the letter of the Honorable Secretary of the 30th ultimo referred to me for remarks. I think it is true that the policy of the Government is changed to a great extent by the late act of Congress and the regulations established as therein provided. Originally the cotton paid by the Government for supplies and freight did not diminish the quantity of cotton which private vessels were required to carry out for its account. The only exception made was in the case of the Davis & Fitzhugh contract, under a proviso that they should build or purchase new steamers and bring in entire cargoes for the Government, thus providing that the supplies might be secured, and the tonnage in the trade should not be thereby diminished. Whether or not any discrimination should be made between payments of cotton obligations given by the War Department for supplies delivered, or to be delivered within the country, or such obligations as have been given by the Treasury Department for money, cannot be determined without a better knowledge than I possess of the relative wants of the Army and of the condition of the Government loan abroad. The public faith is, I consider, equally pledged in each case. In both cases, where there is no stipulation requiring the Government to make delivery of cotton at Wilmington, I think that notice should be given that payments of cotton will only be made at other ports, or at places stipulated in the obligation, leaving that port to be used by the Government for loading its own steamers, and to pay such cotton obligations as specifically require delivery there.

It is unquestionably true that every pound of cotton that goes out under the thirteenth regulation, as now interpreted, diminishes the means of the Government abroad to purchase supplies or to provide money for other use. The cotton paid by the War Department under its oldest contracts is valued at 6 pence per pound; under later contracts at 10 pence per pound. The cotton paid by the Treasury will, I suppose, cost the person receiving it about 4 pence per pound. The cotton thus paid is exported without exaction under the thirteenth regulation, and diminishes the quantity which the Government can send out on private steamers. It would be cheaper to send the cotton out for the Government, receive the enhanced price of a foreign market—say 20 pence net—and make payments by drafts on the proceeds. The object of thirteenth regulation was doubtless to encourage the introduction of new ships into the blockade trade, to appreciate the public credit, and to enable the Government to purchase foreign supplies with cotton when it had no foreign funds at its command, or at ports where it found such purchase to its advantage. Under the operation of the thirteenth regulation I am satisfied that the whole character of the trade will be changed. All owners of private vessels will provide themselves with cotton bonds, which will enable them to carry out full cargoes for their own account, and the Government will be compelled to rely upon its own steamers to carry out its cotton. There is nothing in the contracts made by the War Department which offers any profit upon cargoes of supplies delivered. The price does not cover more than cost and usual insurance and freight. The profit is made upon the cotton, which is given in payment, and as the cotton is valued at 6 pence per pound, it cannot compete with cotton delivered or bonds which may be purchased at such rates as to reduce to 3 or 4 pence per pound the price of the cotton. If this view is correct, then any cotton that may be given in payment for supplies will not in reality diminish the quantity which will be sent out for the Government, but only divert it from being absorbed by cotton bonds. If the Government is still the owner of the bonds, or of the most of them, it may be a matter of general good policy to allow them to absorb all the outward tonnage of private vessels, and thus enhance their value, so as to place the Treasury Department in funds to meet all the wants of the War Department for foreign supplies. If it is not the owner, and the Government has only a small number of steamers running for its own account, the necessities of the War Department will compel it to purchase some foreign supplies in its own ports and to pay for them in cotton to avoid ruinous rates of exchange. No contracts are now made for delivery of cotton at Wilmington. Two have recently been authorized by you for deliveries at Mobile and the Florida ports to encourage ships, if possible, to run between Havana and Mobile and Havana and the Florida coast, and secure much needed supplies at those ports.

Colonel Helm, at Havana, has made some small engagements with parties owning vessels and arms to deliver them on the coast of Texas, stipulating that they should receive cotton in payment. Some few exceptional contracts of the kind are desirable, and it is necessary at times to purchase some indispensable supplies brought in on private account, but the general policy, I think, should be, as suggested by the Honorable Secretary of the Treasury, to pay by draft against cotton exports both for imports and freights. But no cotton can be exported for Government unless it is transported to the ports in preference to private cotton, and cotton in payments of bonds which do not stipulate for delivery at ports.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. L. BAYNE,
Lieutenant-Colonel, &c.

DUNCAN MACAULEY, Esq.,
No. 4 Fourth Street, Edinburgh, Scotland:

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter of the 20th of January last,* and learn with much gratification that a very large portion of the inhabitants of Edinburgh appreciate and sympathize with this people in their struggle for freedom and self-government. It is quite encouraging to know that all the efforts of our enemies to misrepresent the true nature of the conflict on this continent have been without success, and that numerous associations have been formed in Great Britain for the purpose of giving effectual expression to public opinion in our favor. The names of Mr. James Spencer and Mr. Thomas Kesshaw were known to us long before the receipt of your

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

General S. COOPER,

Adjutant and Inspector General:

SIR: A resolution calling for information as to the number of men in the military and naval service of the Confederate States, the number that have been killed or died of wounds received in battle, and the number that have deserted, with the States of the Confederacy from which each and all of these have come, has been referred by the House of Representatives to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have been instructed by the committee to inquire whether it is in the power of the Government at present to give the desired information. Will you be kind enough to let me know, that the committee and the House may determine the propriety of approving the resolution.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Raleigh, May 19, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: Your letter* relative to the claim of exemption for D. L. Russell, jr., as a State officer has been received, and, as I dissent from the conclusion at which you have arrived, I beg leave most respectfully to present the reasons which have influenced my judgment.

In the first place, I am unwilling to concede that the exemption of State officers depends upon the action of Congress, believing as I do that each State has the unqualified right to exempt from military service such officers as the General Assembly may declare necessary for the due administration of the government and laws of the State. The act of Congress declaring there shall be exempted "all State officers whom the Governor of the State may claim to have exempted for the due administration of the laws and government thereof" was not to confer power on the Governor to exempt State officers, for the Governors derive their power from the constitution and laws of the State, and not from Congress, but to make the operation of the act of Congress depend upon the action of the Governors in claiming certain State officers for the due administration of the laws of the State. (See Jones' Reports, ninth volume, p. 186, in the matter of Kirk.)

The supreme court of appeals of Virginia, in the cases of Burroughs vs. Peyton and Abrahams vs. Peyton, has decided that Congress can have no right to deprive a State of the services of any officer necessary to the action of its government, and the State itself is the sole judge as to the officers that are necessary for this purpose.

* Of May 2, p. 375.

Again, I am unwilling to concede that the Confederate Government has the right to retain in its service and refuse to discharge any conscripted citizen of a State who has been elected or appointed to an office which the Legislature has declared to be necessary for the due administration of the government and laws thereof.

You make no question as to the fact that Mr. Russell was elected to an office which I had declared necessary, but you assume that he was at the time of his election in the military service, and that "the conscription acts provide for the continuing in the Army those belonging to it, and the exemptions allowed by the acts plainly refer to persons who are not in the Army, but who are made liable to conscription."

In my opinion you are mistaken both as to the fact assumed and the construction placed upon the law. You say that Mr. Russell "was reduced to the ranks by the sentence of a court-martial." Such is not the language of the sentence of the court. It is as follows:

And the court does therefore sentence the said Capt. Daniel L. Russell, jr., Company G, Thirty-sixth North Carolina Troops, to be dismissed from the service, and on account of his extreme youth, the court recommends the said Capt. Daniel L. Russell to the clemency of the commanding general.

What then was his status? The court sentenced him to be dismissed from the service, the commanding general approved the sentence, and the War Department directed it to be carried out, and yet you hold that he is now, was then, and had previously been in the military service.

To dismiss means to send away; to give leave of departure; not to retain; not to reduce to the ranks. The language of the court, the recommendation to clemency in consequence of the extreme youth of the party, plainly show that it was not the purpose of the court to subject him to the humiliation of being reduced to the ranks, and it is respectfully submitted that no action of the commanding general could modify or change the sentence; he could only approve or disapprove it.

You say that the first section of the act of Congress, approved the 17th day of February, 1864, entitled "An act to organize forces to serve during the war," placed in the service those between seventeen and fifty all residents in the Confederate States not belonging to the Army, for the war. From this class exemptions were to be made. This restricted operation of the act cannot be admitted. The tenth section of first clause of the act is as follows:

That all laws granting exemptions from military service be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and hereafter none shall be exempted except the following.

After enumerating certain exemptions, it provides:

And such other Confederate and State officers as the President or Governors of the respective States may certify to be necessary for the proper administration of the Confederate or State governments, as the case may be.

The act continues in the service those between eighteen and forty-five who were then in the Army, and declared all "white men, residents of the Confederate States, between the ages of seventeen and fifty," to be in the military service from and after the passage of the act during the war.

From the date of the passage of the act, therefore, the latter class, namely, those between seventeen and fifty, are in the military service as well as those then actually in.

The clause of exemption is general in its terms, and not restricted to any particular class, either those placed or continued in service by said act.

In the matter of Bradshaw, Chief Justice Pearson, in commenting upon the previous exemption act, the language of which was, "There shall be exempted all State officers whom the Governor of any State may claim," says, "I can see no good ground to except from the operation of these general words State officers who were in the military service." If such was the intention, a proviso to that effect would have been made, and there is no rule of law by which it can be made under construction. It was suggested in the argument that the exception should be made by implication from the use of the words "shall be exempted," and it was said that the word "exempted" is restricted in its meaning to persons who are not in the military service, and "discharged" is the proper word when referring to persons who are in the military service.

This distinction may obtain in military circles, but the word "to exempt" is not a technical term. It is a plain English word, and means, literally, "to take out of or from," and its ordinary signification is, "to free from," not to subject to any service or burden to which others are made liable, as, to exempt from military service, to exempt from taxation; and it is a settled rule of construction that words in a statute are to be construed according to their ordinary meaning unless there is something to show that they are used in a different sense.

You concede the right of the Governor of a State, from whatever source that right may be derived, to claim the exemption of such State officers as he may deem necessary, provided the exempted person be between seventeen and fifty years of age and "not in the Army." The act of the 17th of February, 1864, declares that "all white men residents of the Confederate States between the ages of seventeen and fifty shall be in the military service from and after the passage of this act." If your construction be correct, the States cannot rightfully place in office (except certain officers enumerated by Congress) any citizen except he be one under seventeen or over fifty years of age. This power being conceded, Congress may extend indefinitely, upward and downward, the age of conscription, and thus absorb the whole male white population, place them in the military service, leave the States without an officer, and thus blot them out of existence.

Upon consideration of the whole case, my conclusion is that by the sentence of the court Mr. Russell was dismissed from the service and became liable to be enrolled as a conscript; that before his enrollment he was duly elected to an office which I deemed necessary, namely, a "commissioner for distributing money and provisions to soldiers' families." I am aware of the existence of an order of the War Department which provides "that officers of the Army cashiered by courts-martial, and who may thus become liable to military duty under the conscription acts, will, when present with their commands, be at once enrolled by their respective brigade commanders. When not so present their names will be furnished by their commanding officer to the proper enrolling officer of the district to which they belong."

This proves the position which I hold, that Mr. Russell was not in the service when elected to the office of commissioner, but by being cashiered he became a conscript. You concede my right to claim the exemption of persons liable to conscription who have not been in actual service, although declared to be in service by act of Congress.

Why, then, may I not claim the exemption of one declared in the service by the order of a commanding general or the War Department? I can see no difference. State officers have been enrolled and placed in camp of instruction, and yet the commandant of conscripts and the Bureau of Conscription have uniformly discharged them upon my claim for exemption.

What difference can it make if the party has been enrolled by a commanding general after being dismissed from the service by the sentence of a court-martial? General Whiting, in a letter to the adjutant-general of this State, says that "Mr. Russell had been allowed a short leave to make his choice of a company in which to be enrolled," but I indorsed upon it a positive order, directing him to remain at his home until further orders, viz, those of the 7th.

In a subsequent letter to me General Whiting says:

Previous to his receipt of these orders (of the 7th instant), which directed him to report to General Hébert at Smithville, I am informed that he had been elected a county commissioner or trustee by the bench of magistrates of Brunswick County.

The order of the 7th directed him to report at once to General Hébert or General Martin for assignment or selection, as you may choose. He had not, therefore, been enrolled as a conscript at the time of his election, but had simply been ordered to report for enrollment, which order had not been received by him.

Should I be in error upon the law of the case I must earnestly urge upon you not to wound the spirit of this gallant and promising young officer by sending him into the ranks. At the age of sixteen he left the university of the State, raised a company, served in such an acceptable manner as to win the admiration and applause of his superior officers. Major-General Whiting, in approving the sentence of the court, bore testimony to his very good character as an officer. Colonel Lamb, under whom he served, gave most flattering testimony as to his capacity and efficiency. His aged father feels most keenly and sensitively upon the subject, and on his account, in behalf of the promising young officer himself, and as a matter of justice and right, I again most respectfully insist that my claim of exemption for him be allowed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. B. VANCE.

Lieut. Col. JOHN D. TAYLOR:

MY DEAR COLONEL: I would have written with great pleasure some time since my high opinion of Capt. Daniel Russell's social and moral worth, but I was at a loss to whom to direct the letter, so that if my opinion was of any value it might be used to his advantage. My first acquaintance with young Russell was when, in the spring of 1862, the gloomiest period of our war, he left the attractive lecture rooms of the university to encounter the dangers and fatigues of the tented field, and I witnessed his successful efforts to raise a company in his native county when the spirit of volunteering had departed from our people. I remember well an exhibition of his patriotism in refusing, on account of his age, to take command of the company he had raised and getting a senior to assume command. Afterward, when he became captain by promotion, I was pleased to see that he brought his company to a state of discipline and perfection in drill unsurpassed by any of the companies with which it was associated in the defense of this important district. I have never heard anything but commendation from his commanders, and it was subject of deep mortification to his comrades in arms when by a decision of a general court-martial he was deprived of his command for a most unfortunate indiscretion. * * * It is my sincere hope that the President, in consideration of his past services and the promise his character gives for future good, will overlook the unfortunate result of a high spirit chafed by real or fancied indignity to a father, and restore him to his command.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

The following resolution passed by the House on the 14th instant has been received:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the House, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether the reasons given in his special message for suspending the writ of habeas corpus still exist, and what additional reasons now exist to such extent that the public safety requires the continuance of the suspension thereof.

In my opinion the reasons given in the special message transmitted to Congress at its last session, recommending the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, still exist in undiminished force and the present juncture especially requires the continuance of the suspension. The effects of the law for that purpose have been most salutary, and to that law in no inconsiderable degree are we indebted for the increased efficiency of the military preparations which have enabled our gallant armies, under the providence of God, to beat back the vast invading forces which still threaten us.

In my judgment it would be perilous, if not calamitous, to discontinue the suspension while the armies of the enemy are pressing on our brave defenders with persistent effort for their destruction and for the subjugation of our country.

It is a source of gratification to be able to inform you that the mere passage of the law suspending the writ was so effectual in restraining those who were engaged in treasonable practices and in dangerous complicity with our enemies that the instances are very few in which arrests were found necessary.

The effect of the law in preventing the abuse of the writ for the purpose of avoiding military service by men whose plain duty it is to defend their country can hardly be overestimated.

The sensitiveness exhibited in different parts of our country to the legislation on this subject is indicative of the love of freedom which is innate among the people, and which should ever be cherished as the sole guaranty for the preservation of their constitutional liberties. It is not doubted, however, that if those who have expressed dissatisfaction with the law had been in possession of the information which it was my duty to communicate to you, and which may not yet be revealed without injury to the public interest, they would fully have approved the exercise of the power of suspending the writ, which was intrusted to Congress by the Constitution. All trusts impose duties. The power was intrusted expressly with the intent that it should be used when necessary to the public safety in case of invasion. Congress concurring with me that the exigency had arisen which required the exercise of the power, performed but a plain duty in passing the law, and such will, I doubt not, be the judgment of the people when the facts can be made known without detriment to their interest.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR:

SIR: I have the honor, by direction of the President, to forward for your attention and the proper action the following copy of a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 5th instant:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, whether the cavalry and artillery portion of the Holcombe Legion of South Carolina Volunteers are now serving together or separate. If separate, how long they have been separated, and for what reasons they were separated, and whether there exist any commands in the Confederate Army now doing duty under legionary reorganization.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BURTON N. HARRISON,
Private Secretary.

[First indorsement.]

MAY 20, 1864.

To Adjutant-General for prompt attention and response.

J. A. S.

[Second indorsement.]

ORGANIZATION OFFICE, May 28, 1864.

The Holcombe Legion consists of infantry and cavalry. No artillery has ever, within the knowledge of this bureau, been attached to it. There are special legionary organizations in the Provisional Army; that is, several organizations combining different arms of the service. It has been found impracticable for these arms to act together in the field, and in every instance they have practically been separated from the date when each organization has gone into active service. The infantry and cavalry of the Holcombe Legion, though constituting one organization in law, have been doing duty separately since August, 1862. The legal separation of these arms in the several legions is earnestly desired by the troops concerned as well as by the War Department. To do this, however, it has been decided, requires legislation.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

SAML. W. MELTON,
Lieutenant-Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Milledgeville, May 20, 1864.

Maj. Gen. HOWELL COBB,
Commanding Reserves, &c.:

SIR: In your letter of the 12th instant, received on the 16th, is the following language:

I do find in the decision quoted in your letter that our supreme court holds "that the enrollment (by the Confederate Government) of the officers and agents by whom the State governments are operated and without whose agency their machinery must stop" would be violative of the very existence of State government, and hence void.

This admission on your part is sufficient reply to your earnest and labored argument to prove that I, in certifying that all civil and military officers of this State are claimed as exempt from conscription in conformity to the resolution of the General Assembly of this State, have nullified, or attempted to nullify, the act of Congress. If the Confederate Government has no jurisdiction whatever over the State officers, and an act of Congress directing their enrollment would, as you admit, "be violative of the very existence of State government, and hence void," such an act, being a nullity, would not be the subject of nullification, as that which is absolutely void can have no force and can bind nobody. No act of mine could make void that which is already void.

In your former letter you claim for Congress the jurisdiction to confer upon the Governors of the States the power to decide in opposition to the act of the Legislatures of the States what State officers shall be exempt and who enrolled as conscripts. You now admit that the Confederate Government has itself no power to enroll a State officer; but you do not inform me where the Confederate Government gets the jurisdiction to delegate to the Governor of a State the power to do that which it has no power to do itself. You are certainly entitled to the credit of originality for the discovery that Congress can delegate to the Governor of a State the power to do a thing which Congress itself has no power to do. The State alone has jurisdiction over her own officers. You admit that Congress has no jurisdiction over them, and cannot enroll one of them without the consent of the State.

The Legislature of the State has not only refused to give that consent, but has expressly declared that they shall all be exempt. Congress now, after the Legislature has expressly refused to give its consent to their enrollment, refers the question to the Governor to say whether they shall be enrolled, and you insist that the Governor has power under this act of Congress, which you refer to as the "laws of the Confederate Government," to set aside the act of the Legislature and order their enrollment, though you admit that if Congress itself did the very act which you insist that the Governor should do under the act of Congress, it would "be violative of the very existence of State government, and hence void."

I am perfectly willing to submit the question to the judgment of any candid man whether I did any "injustice" to an "officer of the Confederate Government," who claims for Congress such powers over the States, and whose opinions rest upon such reasoning when I expressed regret that he had fallen into the error of believing that the "States derive their powers and the people of the States their rights and privileges from the will of Congress." An officer of the Confederate Government has no just right to charge any one with ignorance or conscious misrepresentation for attributing to his own mind the conclusions which necessarily result from its own reasoning.

If an officer of the Confederate Government had never been considered a very decided advocate of State's rights or State sovereignty, but had filled office in the Federal Government most of his political life with an eye to its highest official position, and while he considered his prospects bright had seemed to regard the Union as the greatest good, but when he lost sight of obtaining the highest position in the Union, if he warmly espoused for a time the cause of State's rights, to get out of the Union that he might take his chances in the new organization, and he then claimed for Congress such powers over the States as I have above referred to, it might not be injustice to consider these things in forming a conclusion as to his present political opinions.

You are so much accustomed to practice upon popular credulity and appeal to popular prejudice by the cry of conflict between the State and Confederate governments that you seem to feel that an opportunity for making political capital is lost when you are left without a pretext for bewailing a supposed conflict which you so often attempt by a stretch of the imagination to discover far in the misty distance. As this cry of conflict now constitutes your political stock in trade, and you have much reason to fear "Othello's occupation gone" whenever you can no longer alarm the people with it, I can well imagine your disappointment when I so shaped my certificate as to maintain the sovereignty and rights of the State, carry out the resolution of the Legislature, and avoid all conflict or appearance of conflict with the President.

You refer to the example of Governor Smith, of Virginia, who, it seems, has turned over the justices of peace of that State under fifty years of age to conscription. If the newspapers are to be credited, while he has done this he has claimed as exempt other classes of persons who are not strictly State officers or agents, and are not, therefore, claimed by me as exempt, which sums up the whole number claimed by him to a larger aggregate than I have claimed under the resolution of the Legislature of this State.

I am not advised as to the action the Virginia Legislature had taken upon this subject. From my knowledge of Governor Smith's character I feel satisfied, however, that he has not turned over to conscription any officer of the State whose enrollment has been forbidden by the act of the Legislature. I unite with you in honoring Governor Smith for his services in the military field, which, I suppose, afford satisfactory evidence even to yourself that he is not wanting in either courage or patriotism; and yet I suppose you will not pretend that he has shared in the dangers of battle or spent much time in the field with the soldiers since he has been called by the people of Virginia to the responsible position of Executive of his State.

I have not heard of the military exploits in the field of Governor Smith, of Virginia; Governor Vance, of North Carolina; Governor Bonham, of South Carolina; Governor Watts, of Alabama; Governor Clark, of Mississippi, or Governor Allen, of Louisiana, since each, respectively, was called from the Army to preside over the executive department of his State. Take a more distinguished example. I have not heard of the instance since the war commenced in which Mr. Davis has exposed himself to the dangers of battle. Each of these gentlemen since he has been called to the discharge of executive duties has enjoyed "the same quiet and security from danger" which you say "has fallen to my lot," and I presume neither of them has been less useful, or found his cares and responsibilities less embarrassing in the "security from danger" which he has enjoyed in the discharge of his official duties, than they were when he occupied a position in the field.

I am perfectly willing that the hardy, wayworn veterans of Georgia who are kept in the front, and have no comfortable office, and no command in the rear, who left their wives and little ones to defend your large inheritance, as well as their own log cabins, to whom, when naked and barefoot in the dreary storms of winter, I have sent clothes and shoes when they could get none from the Confederacy, and whose poor, helpless wives and little ones I have labored day and night to procure appropriations, and get up supplies to feed and clothe, when suffering for food and raiment, shall judge whether my services have been more valuable in my present position than they could have been in the field, however a good soldier I might have been able to make; and whether I have indeed been their friend, or, as you would intimate, only their "pretended friend." I am as well content to abide their judgment now as I was last fall when, with remarkable unanimity, they gave me assurances that they were my friends, which were as gratifying to me as they were mortifying to conflict croakers and enemies of the State government, who had spent more time and labor in misrepresenting my motives and my acts and attempting to convince the people at home that the Army was almost a unit against me, than they had in providing for the wants of the soldiers or the comfort of their families at home.

You call attention to the number of militia officers in this State, and refer to my statement in my late message that if the act of Congress is executed in the State it deprives her of her whole active militia; and you say the act is now being executed which leaves these militia officers to take "military charge of themselves," for, say you, "they constitute in and of themselves their entire and sole command."

Now, it does seem to be a little remarkable that a Confederate major-general of the reserves, who you say are to be left to the "easier duties" "in the rear," in which others who are to "join their comrades in the field" are "at present engaged," should conclude that he is entitled to a monopoly in the easier duty in the rear, and should assume that his own reserves are the only reserves. I beg you to remember that the laws of this State provide for militia reserves, who are to participate with you in the discharge of those "easier duties" "in the rear," and who, when the active militia—or militia proper—have gone, may in great emergencies be called out to "repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or execute the laws." If, when the active Confederate soldiery have been called from the discharge of the "easier duties" "in the rear" to "join their comrades in the field," you, as the commander of the Confederate reserves, find other occupation than the military charge of yourself, experience may soon teach you what use there may be for officers of the militia reserves after the active militia have gone to the field. The great desire on your part seems to be that these officers of the militia reserves shall be transferred from their present reserve service to the Reserve Corps under your command.

Their "official retreats" in command of reserves seems to annoy you, but you have no objection to their "private retreat" as reserves, if placed under your control. In other words, it seems to be a question whether you or the proper State authority shall command these State reserves, and the Legislature with great unanimity determined to leave them under the command of the proper State authority. If you are not the "solitary exception on the other side" who find fault with the action of the Legislature, I would submit whether modesty may not suggest the propriety of your acquiescence in the decision of the General Assembly of your State upon this point. I do most respectfully insist that while engaged in the command of reserves, who you must admit are a very useful organization, you should have a little more fellow-feeling for those who are engaged in the honorable and useful employment, which occupies all your own time which you cannot spare to the important political duties of your office. In your letter appears a reiteration of your former statement that from your knowledge of the members of the Legislature they never intended to exempt all State officers, though they have solemnly declared on their official oaths that they did so intend. And you go further, and in effect say that neither Congress nor our supreme court nor anybody else but myself ever conceived the idea that the justices of the peace, constables, and militia officers (for whom you seem to have a great aversion) were to be exempt.

I am aware that you, while your fellow-generals were in front of the enemy in the field, spent days and nights in Milledgeville lobbying and lecturing the members of the Legislature at its late session for the purpose of convincing them that it was their duty to sanction the late act of Congress suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus; but as neither your knowledge of them nor their knowledge of you influenced them to sustain your views, I am still at a loss to know, and you have not been pleased to say, how you are able to determine from your knowledge of the members that they did not understand the meaning of plain English words, and when they said all civil and military officers should be exempt, they did not mean justices of the peace, constables, and militia officers; and how it was that the supreme court, when they said State officers and agents, did not mean justices of the peace, when the constitution of the State, which the judges of the supreme court are sworn to support, expressly mentions justices' courts as part of the judiciary of the State, and makes justices of the peace as much State officers as judges of the supreme court. As this new rule, which you have the honor of discovering, of interpreting the meaning of the language used by the Legislature by your simple knowledge of the members, which proves that the English word "all" means only part, is unknown to the authorities on the rules of construction, and as you have not thought proper to explain or elaborate it I presume the world must remain in ignorance of it till such time as you may think proper to enlighten the judges and other luminaries of the law. I suppose you were guided by this new secret rule of construction when you, while referring to my certificate, use this language:

The Legislature had declared that all civil and military officers should be exempt; still, you did not say that the Legislature demanded the exemption; your language is, "I claim, as exempt," &c.

To say that the Legislature has declared that all civil and military officers shall be exempt, but the Legislature does not demand their exemption when it says they shall be exempt, is to draw a distinction which, I presume, would be rather refined for the comprehension of the supreme court.

But you recoil at the odium which would attach to the Legislature if their language should be construed to mean what every sane man in the State except yourself knows it does mean, and was intended to mean. Now, I trust you may be able to quiet your apprehensions for the safety of the Legislature with the cool reflection that after all your efforts to stir up public odium upon this question it is only inhaled in the atmosphere breathed by yourself and co-laborers, many of whom were themselves defeated candidates for the very offices whose incumbents in "official retreats" they affect to regard with so much loathing and detestation. As a majority of the voters elect these officers, the reasonable presumption is that they feel less indignation at their own action than is professed by defeated candidates and designing politicians.

My attention is invited by you to the propriety of convening an extra session of the Legislature to repeal this resolution and turn over these State officers to conscription. As it is a question upon which the same Legislature which I am invited to convene has already acted, and as they have, after returning home and consulting with their constituents, been in session since the passage of the resolution, and as they had the benefit of a lecture from you upon their duties when last in session, and did not think proper to reconsider and reverse their action, I do not feel called upon to incur so heavy an expense to the State for the gratification of a single individual who was much exercised about the unnecessary expense incurred at the late extra session.

Again, when I take into account the fact that we are obliged to have provisions another year, and to have some able-bodied men at home to attend to the business of the country, and to look to the wants of the wives and children of our brave defenders in the field, and that you are taking so large a number of the population of the State by conscription, including the lame and the halt, if not the blind, who might be of some use at home, but can be of none in camps of instruction and in hospitals, and that of the whole number of State officers probably nine-tenths are either farmers or mechanics, or, as shown in my last letter, exempt without regard [to] their State offices, or who were elected to those offices because the people considered their services more valuable at home than in the battle-field, I must decline to comply with your suggestion, however much I may regret my inability to relieve your mind from the disquietude which the presence of some of these State officers as co-laborers in command of reserves seems to excite. You will at least have the consolation to know, however, that you have the oldest commission as major-general of reserves, and are therefore the ranking officer in that service. If you should at any time chance to go to the front, where the emergency is pressing, I trust you will find the officers of the reserve militia with a goodly number of the civil officers there in advance of you, prepared to welcome you, and to vie with you in patriotic deeds and heroic valor till the danger has passed. As they are now hastening to the front to meet the enemy in the present emergency, let me suggest for your consideration whether it would not be more profitable to the country that you follow their example than that you remain at home to make issues upon them, and attempt to stir up public indignation against them in the rear while they are confronting the enemy at the post of danger.

I am assured by your letter that the defense of the State will not be weakened by the breaking up of the State militia, under the act of Congress, to give you material of which to form a command, unless I throw every obstacle in my power in the way of the organization which you are to control. Since the action of the Legislature I have not thrown the slightest obstacle in the way of your calling out and putting into your organization every man subject to your control under the laws.

You have had a fair, open field of operations for nearly two months, while the enemy were massing a heavy force upon the soil of the State, with every reason why you should expect a most formidable attack by this time. You have had all the motives to which you refer with so much apparent feeling in favor of re-enforcing and relieving our gallant men in front to prompt and stimulate you to activity and energy, and with all this time for preparation and these weighty reasons to wake you up to prompt action; without which no military commander can be useful, I fear you are not prepared, and that it may still take you weeks to complete your organization and reach the field with your command in condition to strike an effective blow for your State in this critical hour of her danger. Within as long a time as that already consumed by you the adjutant and inspector general of this State, under my direction, had organized over 20,000 militia, who would have been subject to have been called out for the emergency upon the shortest notice, and might now have been in Cherokee, Ga., ready to aid in the great struggle had not the organization been crippled that its most active material might be turned over to make your command.

Your attempt to divert attention from your tardiness in this most important and critical period, when so much depended upon your promptness, by taking up time in raising issues about the exemptions of State officers, and whether it was best that I or the President should command the militia, cannot succeed. After assuming that everybody desired that the President should command them you put me down as the solitary exception on the other side. I presume you had neglected before making the assertion to examine the journals of the Legislature upon that question.

While the resolution to turn over the part of the militia between seventeen and fifty to the command of the President passed by a majority of the Legislature, you may probably learn from the journals and from your knowledge of the members that the minority was too large and respectable to leave any foundation in fact for your assertion.

If it should turn out that the President has been so unfortunate in his selection of a proper officer to organize and command this force as to render it useless at the time when it is most needed, the action of the minority of the Legislature, which was in favor of retaining the State militia already organized for the emergency, may be proven to have been wiser than you are willing to admit.

While referring to the Confederate officers who hold positions in the rear you say that I know that some of them occupy their present positions not at their own suggestions, but in obedience to orders of those who have the right to assign them to these duties. I think I do know of at least one instance in which the President, having once trusted a general with a command in the front which required some qualification for the position, afterward transferred him to the rear, and I know of no reason for calling into question either the patriotism or the prudence of the President in making the transfer. Doubtless his action was prompted by a desire to promote the best interest of the service.

Referring to my statement in my last letter that I, in response to the last call made upon me by the President for troops, had furnished over double the number required, you say the reference is an unfortunate one, &c. You then admit that it is true I furnished the President on paper double the number asked for, but you affirm that owing to my division of the State into territorial districts beyond which the troops could not be required to go, the number of men obtained when needed, &c., was not much greater than one-half the number called for by the President. In order to test this statement by the standard of truth it is proper that I refer to the call made by the President for those troops and the service to be rendered by them. The call made by the President through the Secretary of War was based upon the two acts of Congress passed 21st of August, 1861, and 13th of October, 1862, to raise troops for local defense and special service. One of these acts, as you well know, declared that troops under it may be mustered in for local defense, and gives the troops the right in their muster-rolls to set forth distinctly the "services to be performed." In specifying the objects of the call the Secretary of War, in referring to those acts upon which it was based, uses this language:

Under the former of these, if organizations could be effected with the limitation prescribed in their muster-rolls, of service only at home or at specified points of importance within the particular State, they would be admirably adapted to obtain the desired ends of calling out those best qualified for the service—of employing them only when and so long as they might be needed, &c.

Under this call each company had the right to specify on paper—that is, in its muster-roll—what places it would engage to defend. If the muster-roll specified that the company would act for local defense, in the language of the Secretary of War "at home" or at "specified points," it was a full compliance with the call, and troops so organized, the Secretary says, are admirably adapted to obtain the desired ends. Now, so far from accepting troops with the narrow territorial limits in their muster-rolls, which by the call of the President they were authorized to prescribe, I required them—except in cases of troops for the defense of certain cities, &c.—to prescribe a larger limit, covering at least one-fourth of the territory of the State. I not only furnished over double the number of troops required by the President, but I tendered them, most companies covering with their muster-rolls a much larger space of territory than the President required. Indeed, a considerable number of their muster-rolls covered the whole State as their limit. Each and every company was therefore tendered with as large a territorial limit as the President called for, and each and every one was subject to do service at any moment within that limit if the emergency happened which they were organized to meet. You were the major-general placed in command of these troops; you had before you the acts of Congress under which they were organized; you knew that their muster-rolls covered as much territory as either the act of Congress or the call of the President required, and you admit that I furnished double the number called for.

Your denial that I filled the requisition according to the call of the President was made with full knowledge of the facts that the call was not only filled, but doubly filled. As you cannot plead ignorance in mitigation of your palpable misstatements, I must leave you to reconcile it with the facts as best you may. Whether you employed those called to the field "only when and so long as" the emergency lasted for the kind of service which they were called for to perform, as was promised by the President, or kept them in the field at great inconvenience to them and loss to the State after the emergency had passed, that you might not be left with wreaths upon your shoulders without a command, is a subject upon which those who were then subject to your orders are entitled and doubtless have their own opinions.

Upon the subject of "reprehensible speculations" you take occasion to say that I "doubtless have personal knowledge of such conduct among State officers." In this you labor under a very erroneous impression. I know of no reprehensible, dishonorable, or unjust speculation among State officers. If you have knowledge of any such it will doubtless be an agreeable task for you to expose it, and I commend the subject to your earnest attention.

Taking the term "personal knowledge" as used by you in connection with reports in circulation that in the bitter denunciations of me with which you are accustomed to entertain those around you, reference has been made by you to certain lands which I have purchased in Southwestern Georgia, with some other property, and insinuations thrown out that I had obtained the money by unfair means, I may be justified in making such reference to my individual affairs in this connection as under other circumstances would be improper.

Before the war commenced I had a handsome property, which yielded me, outside of my salary, a competent income. I had inherited very little of it, but had made it by industry and energy and what the world is pleased to call good luck—as by the discovery of a mine upon lands which I had purchased for a small price for other purposes.

Since the commencement of the war I have inherited, as the records of the county will show, over $20,000 in gold or its equivalent, which was invested before the depreciation in a manner to be worth in the currency in its depreciated condition the past winter a larger sum than would have been necessary to pay for every dollar's worth of property I have purchased, including my lands in Southwestern Georgia.

If you will take the trouble to calculate a moment you will see that $20,000 in gold last winter, or this spring, at 20 for 1 was worth $400,000 in currency; or if the gold had been invested so as to be worth 10 for 1 it was worth in currency $200,000, which latter amount in currency will a great deal more than cover all the investments in property which I have made.

As the amount of inheritance to which I have referred came to me in right of my wife and children, I feel quite sure that you will not object to this as a "reprehensible speculation" or a dishonest mode of obtaining property, if the sum inherited even amounted to all I ever made.

At the time I made the purchase of the southwestern lands and a small interest ($10,000 in currency) in iron property in Bartow County I did not choose to convert all the securities I had into currency, and I borrowed most of the money to meet the payments, and owe $50,000 in currency. I expect to pay this back whenever, in my judgment, the securities in which I invested gold, or part of my lands, will bring the best price in currency and take the least amount of property to raise the money. I believe my creditors are not apprehensive of loss. I will only add that I have the gratification to know that I never lived in ease upon the property of my wife and children while my judgment creditors were delayed in the collection of their just dues.

I am probably due you an apology for this reference to my individual business. I certainly am if by the use of the term "personal knowledge" you did not intend to impute anything dishonorable or unjust to me in my individual transactions. If you did, I have given you such information as will enable you in future to avoid misrepresenting me personally, if you have the will to do so, whatever may be your opinions of the merits of my official acts [as] a public officer; upon the latter subject I must confess I feel a very cool indifference.

Respectfully,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Milledgeville, May 21, 1864.

Hon. C. G. MEMMINGER,

Secretary of the Treasury, Richmond, Va.:

Your telegram of the 10th did not reach me till yesterday. The act of Congress to which you refer, which prohibits the exportation of cotton and other productions except under such uniform regulations as shall be made by the President, has in it this express proviso, "that nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the Confederate States or any of them from exporting any of the articles herein enumerated on their own account." The 300 bales of cotton upon the Little Ada belong to the State of Georgia, and I propose to export it on State account to pay for blankets for Georgia soldiers, and if any surplus to apply it to the purchase of cotton cards for the people of the State, under an act of the Legislature.

I deny your right to repeal the act of Congress by your order, or to refuse clearance to the State under any just rule of construction which you can apply to the plain proviso in the act of Congress. I therefore again demand clearance as a right, not as a favor, and waiving for the present the question of your right to ask it of the State, offer to pay export duties.

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA RESERVES,

Macon, Ga., May 21, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: I am, in accordance with your directions, preparing with all earnestness the organization of the reserves into regiments. Two of these regiments are now on duty at Anderson. I expect to send a third in a few days. One is on duty here, and by the middle of next week I shall have another organized at this point. By the 1st of next month I hope to have three others organized. I fully concur in the views of the President and yourself that these men should not be kept permanently in the field, but with the demands made upon me for guards, &c., I shall be compelled to keep them all in service. I trust that the condition of the country may soon authorize a different course. A circular from the Conscript Bureau positively forbids any persons between eighteen and forty-five from holding office in the reserves. I beg most earnestly that no such order will be enforced. It is a virtual disbandment of the reserves. If the officers of that age were now taken from the regiments now on duty it would utterly ruin them. These regiments are employed in an important service, and I do hope, trust, beg, and entreat that the officers be permitted to remain with them. They are inefficient enough, God knows, without this final, fatal blow. The number of men fit for the field is too small to make any difference with the efficiency of the Army, whilst with this corps they are all important. Rest assured the efficiency of our Army will not be weakened by the simple act of justice to our brave privates of allowing them promotion. Don't, I beg you, don't permit this wrong, both to the service and good men.

Very respectfully and truly, yours, &c.,

HOWELL COBB,
Major-General.

[Indorsement.]

MAY 27, 1864.

From the time you were charged not merely with the duty of receiving companies of reserves and organizing, but with the duty of organizing the companies also, you were of course exempt from the obligation of Colonel Jordan's circular, and was free to exercise your discretion. Besides, that order went further than my intent, which was misunderstood by Colonel Preston. I did not wish active conscripts or men in the field between eighteen and forty-five eligible, but I expect many of the exempt or invalided classes to be so capable of selection. I cannot agree with you in thinking men should be taken for such casual service from the field, but I will not take away existing officers or prevent the selection of invalids or exempts, &c.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Milledgeville, May 21, 1864.

Col. WILLIAM M. BROWNE,
Commandant, &c.:

SIR: I am gratified to find that it is your desire, while you discharge your duties faithfully to the Confederacy, to respect the rights of the State and her officers and to avoid, as you say, any "real or apparent conflict" with the State authorities. You submit the inquiry whether I claim as exempt from conscription persons who have been elected to State offices since their enrolment as conscripts. I hold that any citizen not actually in military service may accept any office to which he may be elected, and that he is not in service till he is actually enrolled and personally notified of his enrollment. I have already informed many who have applied to me for information that if there has been actual enrollment and personal notice to the conscript that he is enrolled before he is elected or appointed to a State office the election or appointment will not protect him. Some have differed from me on this point for whose legal opinions I have much respect, and have expressed the opinion that persons in the military service of the Confederacy have the right, without the consent of that Government, to accept civil or military office under the State government, which entitles them to protection under the resolution of the Legislature of this State, which declares that all civil and military officers of this State shall be exempt from conscription. I have therefore advised such as entertain this opinion to submit the case to the judgment of the judiciary by habeas corpus if not content with my ruling; and if they are sustained by the judiciary, which I trust will not be disturbed in or denied the right to hear such cases, it will then be my duty to protect them.

Till the courts have decided otherwise I shall act upon the rule that all who are elected or appointed to State offices before they have been actually enrolled and personally notified of their enrollment are entitled to protection under the decision of our supreme court which denies jurisdiction over State officers to the Confederate Government, and the resolution of the Legislature, which has jurisdiction over them, that they shall all be exempt; but shall hold that those who are in the actual military service of the Confederacy cannot, during their term of service, accept office in the State without the consent of the Confederate Government.

You are doubtless aware that there are certain classes of State officers whose previous enrollment will not interfere with their right of acceptance, as the Confederate Government has already by the act of Congress given its consent to their discharge from military service when elected as members of the General Assembly, judges of the courts, clerks of courts of record, sheriffs, ordinaries, &c. I shall expect you to discharge even from camps of instruction persons elected or legally appointed to fill any of the offices mentioned in the act of Congress, as I consider that they have the consent of the Confederate Government, which for the time has control of them, that they be discharged to accept these positions when legally tendered to them; but till the courts rule otherwise I shall hold that persons in military service have no right to be discharged to accept offices not mentioned in the act, as the Confederate Government has given no consent in these cases.

I am happy to be able to state that there is no prospect of conflict between me and the Confederate Government upon this point. I also hold that a State officer who has voluntarily enlisted in the military service of the Confederacy has waived his right as an officer and cannot fall back upon his office for protection. If, however, he volunteered under threats of coercion or of immediate enrollment and arrest if he did not do so, or his consent was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, you will no doubt agree with me that his act in volunteering would not bind him; and I shall expect you in such case to order his discharge upon proper evidence that the enlistment was not voluntary. I will also add in this connection that under my proclamation, which has never been revoked, all military officers of this State are required and civil officers expected to be active and vigilant in the arrest of deserters and stragglers from the Army. They are therefore expected to co-operate with and assist your enrolling officers in making such arrests, as they have frequently made arrests in remote portions of the State and had much difficulty in disposing of the deserters to a proper Confederate officer and in procuring the repayment to them of money which they have paid out as necessary expenses and which they are not able to lose. I would suggest that you publish some proper regulation to meet these difficulties in future.

You are authorized to make such use of this letter as you may think proper.

Appreciating your personal courtesy and reciprocating your desire to avoid all misunderstanding,

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

AN ACT to provide passports for Senators and Representatives in Congress when traveling in the Confederate States.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State of the Confederate States to furnish, without application, each Senator and Representative in Congress, Delegate and officer of each House, with a certificate under seal, setting forth the official character of such Senator or Representative, Delegate or officer; and such certificate, when exhibited, shall entitle the person to whom it is issued to travel without other evidence, of any kind, in all parts of the Confederate States, except that it shall not entitle him to visit an army or vessel of war against the orders of the commanding officer thereof.

Approved May 23, 1864.

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA RESERVES,
Macon, May 23, 1864.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN, Governor,
Milledgeville:

SIR: Your letter of the 20th instant was received by yesterday's mail.

I am not disposed to consume time upon the irrelevant topics which you have dragged into the discussion, especially as you have lost sight of the practical questions involved, and seem to write for the sole purpose of indulging in personalities which you supposed would be offensive. This correspondence commenced in an effort to get you to abandon a certificate which you had given, that it appears both from your admissions and conduct was untrue. You had certified that "you considered all the civil and military officers of the State necessary for the proper administration of the government of the State." Now, in view of all you have said on the subject in this correspondence, as well as your recent orders calling a large number of these officers into military service, do you not feel self-condemned in having certified to a statement which is untrue, and which you knew to be untrue at the time you gave the certificate? This is the whole point of controversy, and all else has been drawn in by your efforts to avoid the odium and responsibility which you have incurred by conforming your action to this false certificate.

That you have been driven to abandon this pretense to the extent of calling out the officers who are not necessary for the proper administration of the State government proves that my efforts have not been wholly fruitless. Had you done so at the time and in the mode I suggested, it would perhaps have been better for the country, and at the same time saved you from the exposure to which you have subjected yourself. You reiterate your claim upon the gratitude of our soldiers for what you have done in providing for their wants and the necessities of their families. Everyone has awarded to you and your officers full credit for what you have done with the public money. In these particulars you seem, however, to be nervously apprehensive that it may be forgotten, as you never lose an opportunity of calling attention to it. I would suggest that it might not be inappropriate, in some of your future references to the subject, to give some of the credit to your fellow-citizens, who by their cheerful payment of the taxes imposed upon them have placed in your hands the means with which you have contributed to the wants of our noble soldiers and their deserving families. It is a duty in which all have participated with a cheerfulness and earnestness worthy of the object, and for which all deserve and will receive the grateful thanks of our gallant soldiers. We have not and cannot do too much for these noble men and their suffering families. In your zeal to magnify your own conduct you should not forget what is due to others equally as deserving as yourself. The men whose gratitude you seek to obtain will not think the less of you for it.

You have so often repeated the statements of your great success in furnishing more than double the number of troops the President called for in September last that I am not surprised at your loss of temper at the exposition of the fact that you simply furnished that number on paper. You should remember that you are responsible for the introduction of the subject into this correspondence, and if the exposure is mortifying to your pride you brought it upon yourself.

The acts of Congress under which the call was made are plain and simple, and could have been responded to without the embarrassment of territorial divisions which you resorted to. Your effort to escape from the exposure by the use of offensive language is quite natural to a man who has lost his temper, and may be pardoned in one who has so many graver offenses to atone for.

In reference to the one Confederate officer who was transferred by the President from a position in front to one in the rear, you say you "know of no reason for calling into question either the patriotism or the prudence of the President in making the transfer." Whether your description of this position as a "safe and comfortable" one be correct remains yet to be seen; but it is evident you so considered it, and, so considering it, your application to become his volunteer aide, with the fact that you never so honored him as long as he was in the enemy's presence, is a very significant illustration of the direction which your ambition takes in time of war. It seems that not until you perceived his fitness for a "safe retreat" did you perceive your own fitness to become his aide. Let me assure you that if that officer had then known the conviction under which you acted he would have been more impressed with your qualifications for the post to which you aspire, for whilst your opinion of that officer may not be concurred in by others, no one will question the correctness of the estimate you have placed upon yourself.

It is due to myself to say that in my allusion to your "personal knowledge" of State officers engaged in speculation I did not refer to the charge made against you of dividing with some of your State contractors the large profits they were accumulating from these contracts. What I said was in direct response to your own remark about "protected men" engaged "in attention to their own private business and speculations." I had no reason to believe that you had been "dishonorable or unjust" in your speculations, so fully explained in your letter, and I had too much respect for your sense to believe that you would engage in any improper transaction in which you were liable to be so easily detected. As to the manner in which you have accumulated your fortune, whether by inheritance or by trading and trafficking, I neither know nor care, as it does not throw the least light upon the question involved in this discussion, which is the truth of your certificate, in which you say you consider all the civil and military officers of this State necessary for the proper administration of the State government.

I shall leave you in your allusions to my own pecuniary embarrassments in the past to the full enjoyment of all the pleasure which a low and groveling mind derives from the repetition of stale and malicious slanders. When those who originated them blush in the remembrance of their turpitude, the subject becomes eminently suited to one of your taste and instincts.

Respectfully,

HOWELL COBB,
Major-General, Commanding.

BOX 1122, RICHMOND, VA., May 23, 1864.

Colonel HOLLIDAY:

DEAR SIR: I think you told me that if I could give the Secretary proof that I could raise fifteen men he would authorize me to form them into a company for the special service I had suggested.

The following-named gentlemen have several times assured me that they would serve with me on such, and most of them have done so. They are from the Eastern Shore and about Norfolk, and Missouri, Kentucky, and Canada. Some are now in prison, captured with me; others are in the Confederacy, and some on Eastern Shore:

Annan, Baker, Brown, Brock, Cobb, Crouse, Chinn, Doughty, Doughty, Fitzgerald, Hudgins, Ilamson, Morehead, Reed, Stedman, Thomas, Wheeler, McGrim, Kiedel (19). Several others have made similar promises whose names I cannot recall, and communication now is so uncertain that I cannot get their names. I entertain no doubt of my ability to get more men, provided we can get the privilege of remaining in this branch of service as long as such branch exists.

I hope you will [not] feel troubled by my sending you this and requesting you to use it if you think it will [be] of any assistance to me.*

Respectfully,

J. Y. BEALL.

MAY 23, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON:

DEAR SIR: I have known Mr. Beall, the writer of the within, from his earliest infancy, and have observed closely his bearing and conduct since the very beginning of the present war, and I beg leave to say to the Secretary, in the first place, that he may rely with the most implicit confidence, not only on assurance given within of his ability to raise the company of men referred to, but upon any and every other statement that Mr. B. makes on the subject or on any other subject.

I consider Mr. B. one of the most gallant and patriotic young gentlemen that Virginia has produced during the war, and that he is not less noted for intelligence and his loyalty to truth and honor.

I have the best reasons for speaking thus emphatically of Mr. B., and I do not hesitate to pledge my own reputation for the correctness of what I here avouch.

Respectfully,

ANDREW HUNTER.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPT.,
 ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
 Richmond, Va., May 24, 1864.

Colonel PRESTON,

Chief of the Bureau of Conscription:

COLONEL: The following extract from the inspection report of Lieutenant-General Polk's command, by George B. Hodge, colonel and assistant inspector-general, is respectfully referred to the Bureau of Conscription for its information. It is requested that information may be afforded the assistant inspector-general of what measures have been adopted to remedy the evils herein mentioned.

"From the commencement of his administration of the affairs of the department, the lieutenant-general commanding complains that he was embarrassed by the evils ensuing upon the inefficient administration of the conscript laws and the failure of the Bureau of Conscription, which was charged with the duty of arresting absentees, to perform its functions with the necessary vigor and energy. He estimates that on assuming command there were in his territorial limits quite 10,000 men liable to military duty absent from their commands and evading the claims of the Government for their services. In the county of Jones, in Mississippi, as heretofore intimated, there were a large number of disaffected persons who had proceeded to such extremities as to engage in a raid upon and plunder of the public stores at Paulding, in Jasper County. In the country northwest of the Tallahatchee, Captain Rison, of the Confederate service, having deserted his post and enticed away with him a portion of his command, had established and inaugurated a system of private plunder ostensibly against the common enemy, but too often without regard to the sentiments of the owners of the property. He was constantly sending messages to his friends in the army and inviting them to join him, buying them by promises of brigandage and free quarters.

"In the counties of Lawrence, Morgan, Blount, and others in Alabama the recruiting agents of the Federal Government were organizing mounted regiments, colluding with disaffected citizens, and carrying on with them an almost avowed correspondence."

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. CHILTON,

Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General.

RICHMOND, VA., May 24, 1864.

His Excellency JOSEPH E. BROWN,
Governor of Georgia, Milledgeville, Ga.:

DEAR SIR: Your letter of November 18, 1863, has remained unanswered until this time through no want of respect, personal or official, but from the pressure of events which have prevented an earlier response. It has been my earnest wish that every officer of the Confederacy, whether employed in a civil or military capacity, should testify his reverence for the law of the land by a strict adherence to its forms, as well as its spirit. In the presence of the enemy and with an army scantily supplied with the commonest necessities of life, a general, whose first care must be that his troops do not suffer from want of food, should be charitably judged if in providing for them he inadvertently exceeds his legitimate authority. No instructions were issued to General Cobb, and none were necessary, the law empowering him to order impressments when the exigency requires it. The order of Captain Byers, the commissary, provides for the local appraisement established by law. If in the enforcement of their orders subordinates displayed rudeness or a disregard for the rights of citizens or acted violently and illegally, the complainants, by pointing out the individual offenders to the local commanders, would, I confidently hope, have procured redress; but accusations against undescribed persons afford no means of bringing them to justice. Hardship, privation, sacrifice, must be suffered for the sacred cause we contend, and I am sure that the people of Georgia will prove themselves in other respects, as they have on the field of battle, equal to the most trying tests to which they may be necessarily exposed.

Very truly and respectfully, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

OFFICE C. S. MILITARY PRISONS,
Richmond, Va., May 26, 1864.

His Excellency the PRESIDENT:

I have the honor to report that while on a tour of inspection of the prisons in Georgia, I had an interview with General Howell Cobb at Macon, and communication by mail and telegraph with Richmond being interrupted, he requested me to represent to Your Excellency certain facts in connection with the prisons in Georgia, the importance of which is so great as to require the consideration of the authorities.

By a recent order from the War Department, all veteran troops on duty at the prisons in Georgia have been ordered to the field, and the prisoners are at present guarded by the Georgia reserve force, the regiments of which are, for the most part, officered by men who have seen some service, are acquainted with guard duty, and are capable officers. They number altogether from 250 to 300, but they are between the ages of eighteen and forty-five and therefore liable to conscription. A recent order from the Conscription Bureau directs that they should be conscripted and sent to the field. If this order is enforced new officers will have to be elected; boys and old men totally unacquainted with guard duty, drill, and discipline, scarcely one in a hundred understanding the manual of arms or capable of taking charge of a guard, will have to be taken to officer the regiments of this reserve force.

For these reasons and in consideration of the very large number of prisoners of war to be guarded, comprising as they do 18,000 drilled soldiers and 1,500 officers ranking from brigadier-generals down to the lowest grade, some courageous and desperate men, General Cobb considers it extremely hazardous for the above-mentioned order to be enforced, and earnestly requests that Your Excellency will cause it to be suspended, at least for the time being.

I have the honor to be, Your Excellency's most obedient servant,

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
WAR DEPARTMENT, ORDNANCE BUREAU,
Richmond, May 27, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to lay the following statement before you, and request that if possible you will render such assistance as may be needed in the premises. On the 5th instant requisitions were issued from this office for the various disbursing officers connected with this Department to the extent of $2,500,000. Others have since been added, making in all about $3,500,000. Up to this morning not one of these requisitions has been made out, and pay-day is now rapidly approaching. I am informed that this Department is only allowed to draw some $2,600,000 per month, which is entirely inadequate to the current expenditures, according to our last estimates, somewhat over $4,000,000 per month (including Trans-Mississippi). The above-mentioned requisites are absolutely needed, and I beg that you will authorize the same to be issued as early as practicable.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. GORGAS,
Colonel and Chief of Ordnance.

MAY 27, 1864.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR:

The $2,600,000 is not a limit; it is only the pro rata of the Ordnance Department upon the basis of an aggregate expenditure of $50,000,000 per month. The appropriations for six months for all the bureaus being $503,000,000, and the Ordnance Department $23,000,000, this monthly expenditure upon the basis of the estimates would be nearly $84,000,000, and the pro rata of the Ordnance Bureau would be about $4,333,333.33 per month. In April the Ordnance Bureau had $7,000,000. By the same scale, i. e., the basis of the appropriations, the Quartermaster's Department would expend monthly $53,171,000. During the last month all the bureaus except the Quartermaster-General got their requisitions passed through your office for about the amounts they would be entitled to on the scale of the appropriations, except the Quartermaster's Department, which had requisitions so passed for only $28,081,580.92, against $36,000,000 by the one scale and $53,000,000 by the other.

Respectfully,

R. G. H. KEAN,
Chief of Bureau of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 48. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, May 27, 1864.

I. The receipts of bonded quartermasters and commissaries and of agents of tax service are the only receipts valid to a producer for his tithe tax. All others are worthless and unjust impositions on the tax-payer. It is strictly forbidden that any other persons than those above named shall give receipts for the tithe.

II. In all cases of collections of tithes by officers of the Quartermaster and Commissary Departments in the field, receipts will be given monthly to the district quartermaster on tax duty. Such receipts must state the name and county of the producer.

III. Quartermasters and commissaries who have means of transportation, and all such officers collecting supplies, will give special attention to the removal of the tax in kind from interior depots to railroad stations and to the supply store-houses of the army.

IV. Officers with troops are prohibited from forcibly taking possession of the tax depots or appropriating the tithe. If they need supplies, requisition therefor will be made upon the tax officer or agent.

V. Paragraph II, General Orders, No. 107, 1863, is amended to provide that if conscripts accepted for field duty and sent to camps of instruction are, upon medical examination, found disqualified for field service but capable of performing duties named in section 8 of the "act to organize forces to serve during the war," approved February 17, 1864, certificates setting forth the ground of disability and stating the appropriate duties in any of the departments of service for which they are best fitted will be forwarded through the Bureau of Conscription to the Surgeon-General for approval, and returned to the superintendent of conscription for final action.

VI. Paragraph II, General Orders, No. 6, current series, is amended as follows:

The decision of this board, if approved by the brigade or district commander, will be final. If not approved, it will be forwarded "disapproved" to the division or department headquarters for final action, when it will be the duty of the brigade or district ordnance officer to notify the company commander, as required in the paragraph to which this is amendatory.

VII. Officers of the Quartermaster's Department will return to the quartermaster from whom grain is received the sacks in which it is contained. Failing to do so, they will be charged $1.90 for each sack not returned.

VIII. Post commanders will inspect the offices of such officers as are prohibited from employing able-bodied men in their departments or bureaus, and in cases of violation of the law, take the action required by the department and district commander, in section 9, act of February 17, 1864 (General Orders, No. 26, current series).

IX. The attention of post commanders is called to the Nineteenth Article of War. The monthly returns therein required will be made directly to this office. The name and rank of every officer at the post, and how and by what authority each is employed, will be reported in addition to the other information called for by the printed notes on the forms. Blanks will be furnished from this office upon requisition of commanders.

By order:

The evils from not giving a special certificate in each case are greater than I am sure you appreciate. I directed the head of the Conscript Bureau to explain them fully to you and respectfully ask you to accord to a special certificate. Of course, officers certified to by you will be exempted, and I shall not insist on any mode of certificate you object to, but urge the uniform one least liable to abuse.

J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

RICHMOND, May 28, 1864.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

A bill "to provide and organize a general staff for armies in the field to serve during the war" was passed by your predecessors and submitted for my approval at the close of the last session.

I was unable to approve it, and now desire to state my objections to it, as well as my views on this important subject, in a hope that by a comparison of opinion some measure may be framed equally acceptable to the Legislative and Executive Departments of the Government.

I believe it to be established by the experience of Europe as well as our own that it is impracticable to organize and administer armies with efficiency without the aid of a general staff, permanent in its character, trained in its duties, aspiring to promotion in its own corps, and responsible to the head of the department. Such a staff should be composed of a small body of officers, whose education, experience, activity, and special adaptation to their duties render them peculiarly competent to perform functions on which an army depends for its capacity to act with vigor. In Europe years of varied education in the schools, the cantonment, and the field fit the staff officer for his position, and a long experience in the lower grades is required before he is deemed competent to duty in a more important sphere. We are forced to make experimental appointments of officers unprepared by any previous training, and who can only acquire in actual service that experience which must serve in place of well grounded instruction. It is scarcely possible to make this experience supply the defect of previous military education, otherwise than by the organization of the officers into one corps, responsible to one head, who can assign them to positions independent of the movements of general officers, and who, by judiciously varying the field or character of their duties, can give them larger opportunities for instruction and prevent their views being narrowed to the routine and usages of a single commander, himself, perhaps, without military education.

Hope of promotion, founded on their own merit and length of good service, is as necessary to the officers of the general staff as to those of the line, furnishing the best stimulus known to honorable exertion and zealous discharge of duty. This stimulus cannot exist unless the staff be organized into one corps, responsible to one chief, who thus becoming intimately acquainted with the capacity and merits of each is able properly to distribute the duties so as to secure the services of the right man in the right place, and to afford to each an opportunity for distinction. If, otherwise, each staff officer becomes dependent upon the particular commander with whom he is serving, no means of comparison exist between the relative merits of the officers. Each looks for promotion to the favor of his general, and rises in grade, not by his own relative merit, but by the patronage of his commander. A gallant and able commander, whose own promotion is exceptionally rapid by reason of his special merits, is thus enabled to lift to higher grades the officers of his staff to whom he has become attached by companionship in the field, although these officers may be far inferior in merit and length of service to others whose duties have connected them with generals less distinguished. Promotion thus becomes with the staff a matter of hazard, dependent not on the merit of the officer himself, but of the general with whom he serves, and heartburnings, jealousy, and discontent are the natural results of so false a system.

Again, if the general staff is not formed into corps there will not be the "esprit" necessary in all military organizations, and there cannot be the co-intelligence among the officers thereof which secures the certain and rapid communication of all information through the different parts of an army. There will also be embarrassment in their tenure of office and assignment to duty, as when a general officer dies or is relieved from his command there remain no duties to be performed by the staff which has been authorized for him especially. However valuable or meritorious the officers may be, they are displaced by the staff chosen by the successor of their commander. Nothing remains but to deprive them of their commissions, without fault of their own, or to keep them in service as supernumeraries, and thus to add to the number of officers already in excess of the wants of the Army.

Again, an organization of a general staff should possess flexibility, so that the proper number and class of staff officers can be sent where needed. If an inflexible rule of assignment be fixed by legislation, some commands will be cumbered with unnecessary officers, while others will be deficient in the number indispensable to perform the necessary duties. Legislation would surely be considered unwise if it allotted by inflexible rule the number of troops to be used in each military department; yet it would be scarcely more objectionable than the assignment of the same specified number of staff officers to each commander, according to his grade, thus applying a general rule to a series of cases each requiring special treatment.

The inspecting duties in an army ought not, in my judgment, to be separated from those of the adjutants. The erroneous impression prevails that an inspecting department, independent of the general staff, is established in most of the armies of Europe. The reverse is the fact, and the duties of inspection are so intimately connected with the other duties of the general staff that they can be properly performed by it alone. The objections to the separation are manifold. In the first place, officers having no other than inspecting duties must frequently be unemployed, even in war, while in peace their duties will occupy but very little time. Next, it is to be observed that where the adjutants and inspectors form one corps the duties of the adjutant make him familiar with the details of the service where reform and discipline are most needed, and thus render him more competent to effective inspection when assigned to that duty than he could be if exclusively employed as inspector. Lastly, the duties of an inspector are such as not to render the officer who performs them acceptable to his brother officers, if his duty be properly performed. It is not to be wondered at that an officer whose duties may not be inappropriately described as those of a detective, should, if his duty be rigidly performed, incur somewhat of the odium of an informer; and when these duties constitute the sole service of an officer permanently attached to an army, he must become either so lax in their performance as to render him useless, or his professional pride and self-respect are wounded and his relations with his brother officers unfavorably affected by the distrust and dislike resulting from his official reports. When, however, an assistant adjutant and inspector general is from time to time assigned to the making of necessary inspections at various points, this temporary discharge of an unpleasant duty becomes but an incident in his professional career, and does not affect his relations with his brother officers.

Having stated these as the general principles which in my judgment should govern legislation on the subject, the objections to the bill passed at the last session can be more easily understood, and I proceed to state them briefly:

I. The first section of the bill authorizes a general commanding armies, or a separate army, to assign to duty one of the general officers under his command as chief of staff, one of the brigadier-generals under his command as inspector-general, and one other brigadier as chief quartermaster, one officer below the rank of brigadier as chief commissary, and one as chief of ordnance.

This power of assignment is given without reference to or consultation with the War Department or the Executive, and might be exercised in contravention of the views and judgment of both. Leaving out of view the question whether it is in accordance with the Constitution to make the commander of an army independent of the Commander-in-Chief in the discharge of any of the duties of his office, and looking only to the effect of such a system, it plainly creates in this branch of the service as many independent executives as there are generals commanding armies in the field, and thus destroys that unity of design and concert of action which are indispensable elements of success in war. The generals commanding armies would be by this section vested with the right to derange the organization of their commands as settled by the Commander-in-Chief by removing from their appropriate functions the commanders of corps, divisions, and brigades, whom the Executive had selected and the Senate had approved as specially fitted to lead the troops in battle.

That the general commanding the army has, under the terms of this section, the right of assigning general officers under his command to the duties of the general staff without reference to the authority of the Executive is plain from the other sections, which declare that the President is to appoint, with the advice of the Senate, the staffs of all general officers other than those who command armies.

Nor does this section restrict the commanding general in relation to the branch of service or the grade of the officers whom he is permitted to assign to commissary and ordnance duties of the general staff. It is only necessary that they be below the rank of brigadier-general. The commanding general would have the power, therefore, to assign a captain commissary to be chief of ordnance, or a lieutenant of infantry to be chief commissary, without check or control from the President or Senate, while the President would be without power to appoint subordinates to the officers thus selected by the general of the army without submitting their nominations for the approval of the Senate. Not only, therefore, is all order of authority introverted by these provisions, but the officers assigned to duty by the commanding generals, not being permanent members of the general staff, would be independent of its chief, and inextricable confusion would necessarily result.

This section, so far from responding to the title of the bill by providing a general staff, in reality breaks up that which now exists, subdivides it into a number of small bodies, irresponsible to the head of the department, and destroys the possibility of any regular, consistent, and intelligent co-operation in the action of our forces, so essential to success. Its effect is to create a staff for generals, not a general staff.

If a contest should arise between the quartermasters-general, the commissaries-general, or the chiefs of ordnance of Generals A and B, in any district of country for supplies or means of transportation, who is to determine between these rivals, each equal in authority and each dependent on a separate chief? How are the chiefs of those bureaus in Richmond to apportion the supplies in store according to the wants of the different armies without authority to exact from them reports and returns? If it be said that these officers would become temporarily responsible to the heads of departments, how is this responsibility to be enforced if the orders of the general and those of the chief of the department should conflict? If ordnance depots are provided at different points for different commands, how is the officer in charge of these depots to act if ordered by the chief of ordnance of a general in the field to make a different disposal of the stores from that ordered by the head of the department in Richmond?

If such a bill should become a law, in vain would the War Department seek to exact rigid obedience to law or orders from the irresponsible staff created under its provisions. In vain would it seek for the information necessary for its guidance, or attempt to change the relative strength of armies to meet the varying movements of the enemy. The staff officers could be made the ready and safe means of thwarting the Government in its orders for the removal of troops from one command to re-enforce threatened positions in another, and could be easily rendered subservient to the natural but dangerous propensity of most commanders to retain all the troops under their own control for the safety of their own commands, without reference to more urgent needs at other points.

It is scarcely necessary to add to these considerations more than a bare allusion to the tendency of such bodies of officers, when dependent for their own promotion on the favor of the special chiefs, to resort to agencies less commendable than the zealous discharge of their legitimate duties for the attainment of their desires.

II. Another very objectionable feature of the bill proposed is its effect on the officers of the general staff other than those who may be selected as the favorites of commanding generals.

Numbers of zealous, meritorious, and valuable officers have made the duties of the general staff objects of special study; have embraced the staff as a branch of the profession in which under existing laws they are entitled to promotion for merit and long service, just as the line officers have a right to promotion in their branch.

This bill deprives the staff officers of this the great incentive to the zealous discharge of duty. It debars them from promotion to the higher grades of their own branch of service, and bestows these prizes of honorable ambition on the officers of the line, who will thus monopolize the promotions to the higher grades, both in the line and staff, to the entire exclusion of the officers of the latter. Few will be willing to remain in the staff under such circumstances. Those who consent to continue will be those least ambitious of promotion, and the whole staff service will be impaired in tone and efficiency.

III. The assignment of general officers to staff duties as provided in the bill would leave many brigades, some divisions, and perhaps some corps without their appropriate commanders, and no provision is made to supply the vacancies thus created. Are their commands to be considered vacant and successors appointed? If so, what is to become of those assigned to staff duty should the commanding general revoke the assignment? If the contrary, many brigades will be commanded by the officer next in rank to be assigned brigadier, however incompetent such officer may be to command a brigade, and the like would occur as to divisions and corps, in contravention of the policy, well considered and established, that general officers are appointed by selection for merit, and not promoted by seniority. If the commanding general is ordered to another command, is he to take his staff with him, or is he to leave it for service with his successor? In either case, is the whole general staff of each army to be changed at the caprice of the new commander? This must be the effect of the bill, for the power to assign necessarily implies the power to revoke, as it would otherwise be equivalent to a permanent appointment that could only be made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

IV. The fourth objection to the bill is that it applies one rigid rule for the number of the general staff, based solely on the rank of the commander and having no reference to the necessities of a command. The staff allowed is excessive in number and rank in many instances and entirely inadequate in others. A law providing a general staff on such a basis as is assumed in this bill cannot, from its very nature, be executed according to its terms. The labor required of the staff connected with a brigade, division, or corps depends on the fact of its being part of an army or a separate command as well as on the number of men; the extent of the country over which operations are to be conducted; the abundance or scarcity of supplies in the district; the existence or absence of railroad, river, or other transportation; the concentration or dispersion of the troops, and the many other circumstances which control military movements in time of war. It is impossible to apply a rigid, unbending rule to such diverse cases. An organization into corps meets all these difficulties by providing for assignment of the proper number of officers to different commands according to the needs of each.

V. The number and rank of aides-de-camp allowed by the bill is believed to be greatly in excess of those allowed by other governments and quite unsuited to the nature of ours. They would rather impede than improve the service. They would encourage love of ostentation and feed a fondness for vain display, which should rather be discouraged than fostered. The experience of this war has demonstrated that the most efficient commanders, those who have most attracted the respect, gratitude, and admiration of their country, have avoided the large retinue of personal staff which this bill would seem to sanction as proper or desirable.

VI. The objection to the enormous increase in the number of officers and expenditure that would result from the passage of such a bill becomes a matter of serious concern when no corresponding increase of efficiency is secured; of still graver importance when the opposite result is to be feared.

According to the bill as passed the staff would embrace an addition of about 400 officers, involving an increased annual expenditure for pay, rations, forage, and allowance amounting to $1,138,728 above the present staff as organized by general orders under existing legislation.

If generals are to be allowed to change the staff of each army to which they may be assigned at their pleasure, it is difficult to calculate the extent to which this abuse would grow, the number of men that would be drawn from useful service to cumber the staff, or the increase of expenditure involved.

Congress will perceive that with objections so radical it was impossible for me to approve the bill passed at the last session, and that the subject was too important to be treated in a hurried message within the last few hours of the close of a Congress. Concurring in the expediency of legislation for the organization of a general staff, I have thought a full exposition of my views on the subject would perhaps conduce to the framing of a measure which would carry into effect the views of the Legislative Department while excluding the provisions which have compelled me to decline approving that devised by your predecessors.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

ATLANTA, May 30, 1864.

Maj. Gen. HOWELL COBB,
Commanding Reserves:

SIR: Your letter of the 23d instant, mailed to me at Milledgeville, has been forwarded to me at this place. As you enjoy more leisure for bandying words and indulging in personal abuse than now falls to my lot in this crisis of our fate, while the enemy is pressing hard upon us, I shall content myself with a short reply to your misrepresentations.

Having already shown to the satisfaction of any intelligent mind, not too much warped by prejudice to see the truth when presented, that my certificate claiming all civil and military officers of this State as necessary to the proper administration of the government of this State is in strict conformity to the resolution of General Assembly, whose authority and sole jurisdiction over the question has been solemnly adjudicated by our own supreme court; and not having claimed a single officer as exempt from conscription whose office is not created by the constitution or laws of the State, because considered necessary to the proper administration of the State government, I can afford to pass as harmless your naked and unsustained assertion that my certificate is untrue. You can draw no support from the fact that in a great crisis like the present the State officers for a time have rallied to the front in response to my call to aid in repelling the enemy. It is true their offices are temporarily closed and their official duties neglected till the enemy shall be repulsed, but that does not prove that their presence at home is not necessary or that their official duties are unimportant.

A judge of the superior court, who has reported for duty in the military field, has for a time suspended his official functions; but this does not prove that his office is unimportant or that he could be enrolled as a conscript and his duties suspended during the war without detriment to the public interest.

You say if I had called out the State officers at the time and in the mode suggested by you it would perhaps have been better for the country. By this I suppose I am to understand you to assert that it would have been better for the country if I had turned them over to your command. Judging from the fact that after all the militia of the State between seventeen and fifty, except the officers, had been turned over subject to enrollment by you, and you have had two months to bring them to the field, you have not succeeded in getting ready for service as many as I now have in camp, assembled in one week after my call, I am of opinion you will find few persons so prejudiced as to agree with you that the public interest would have been promoted by placing these men under your command, which I fear, if I may judge from the past, it will yet take you months to organize. The public safety calls for men in the field now, while the enemy is pressing us, and it is fortunate for the country that the State officers were not placed in a position to be kept back by you.

While I trust I have faithfully discharged my duties to our gallant soldiers and their families, in supplying their wants, I have never arrogated to myself the credit due the people of the State for affording the means. If I am entitled to credit for the judicious and faithful management of those means my ambition is satisfied.

After I have convicted you of willful misrepresentation of the facts relative to the number of troops furnished by me in response to the last call of the President, and have shown from the record that the requisition was filled in letter and spirit, with over double the number called for, most of whose muster-rolls covered a larger part of the territory of the State than the act of Congress or the call of the President required, which facts you knew when you penned your denial, you still persist in reiterating the assertion, and attempt to escape exposure by charging that I have lost my temper in replying to your statement. While it may be a little trying to the patience of a right-minded man to see truth so utterly disregarded by one occupying so high a position, I am willing to leave it to the judgment of the unbiased who has most exhibited the loss of temper, I, in exposing your willful misrepresentations, or you, while laboring under the exposure.

When you were assigned by the President to the command of the troops called out last fall for local defense, and I assured you of my willingness to render all the aid and assistance in my power, and in the case of active services in the face of the enemy to act temporarily with you, it was not possible for you to have understood me to express a willingness to act as your aide-de-camp while you were lying in a state of inactivity in a safe place in the rear. I supposed in the case of an exigency, such as we passed through when our army was driven back from Missionary Ridge to Ringgold, that you might leave your safe retreat and go to the front. But if I had no higher ambition to serve the country and no more important duties to perform I could not, of course, expect to be favored with a position upon your staff so long as your retreat is safe and comfortable, as you probably have no place to spare after you have provided for your numerous relatives, whose prior claims upon you entitle them to preference in sharing the honor with you.

As in your reference to the words "personal knowledge" you say you had no reason to believe that I had been dishonorable or unjust in my speculations, I need only remark that had I understood you then as I now do I should have made no allusion to certain complications in your own past financial history. I did it upon the principle that "those who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

As I made no allusion in my letter, however, which had not truth for its foundation, and as a statement of truth can never be a "malicious slander," I can see no just reason why it should have thrown you into so towering a passion; nor can I attempt to imitate the elevation of thought, the elegant style, or the refined taste of the closing paragraph of your reply.

Respectfully,

JOSEPH E. BROWN.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., May 31, 1864.

His Excellency JEFFERSON DAVIS,
President:

DEAR SIR: I am happy to inform you that after some little struggle the bill to authorize the conferring temporary rank passed both Houses last evening, and the motion to reconsider failed. It may be regarded, therefore, as settled, and I venture to suggest that the nominations required be at once prepared and made. Will you send me the names required by General Lee for the respective positions? General Lee sent me again last night an urgent message as to the imperative necessity for these appointments.

Very truly, yours,

J. A. SEDDON,

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA RESERVES,
Macon, Ga., May 31, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: It is with great reluctance I address you at this important and critical juncture upon the subject of this letter, but believing that the interests of the public service demand it, I do so. I have been directed by a telegram from Judge Campbell, Assistant Secretary of War, to restore to its former status the battalion of Major Howard, at Columbus, Ga., and I have replied to him that to do so "would destroy all my power of usefulness in this command, and therefore I ask to be relieved." Let me ask your attention to the inclosed papers, which were forwarded to me from your office for my action. I will simply indicate the points to which I desire particularly to direct your attention:

First. The two letters of Colonel Robertson, commandant of the post, showing the inefficiency of the battalion and recommending that it should be disbanded, with the approving indorsements of Generals Beauregard and Gilmer.

Second. The indorsement, by your order, referring the whole matter to me, with the announcement that upon my recommendation the battalion would be disbanded.

Third. My order directing my aide, Col. M. J. Crawford (who was kindly acting as volunteer aide), to examine fully into the condition of the battalion, and his report stating its condition, as well as the extract from his unofficial letter showing the conduct of Major Howard on the occasion and the hopelessness of filling the ranks of the battalion.

I desire simply to add that I preferred to retain the battalion organization and fill it up, and only determined on a different course when I became satisfied that there was no hope of recruiting its ranks, and that the only way to get the small remaining material of the battalion into useful service was to disband it and let new companies be organized. This I did, and from Colonel Crawford's letter you will see that so little was left that only one company was formed and another started. With these facts I telegraphed to you for authority to disband this and other local organizations, and you replied, giving me the authority, and I have acted upon it. The company formed has reported here and is on duty, and I had hoped to have organized another regiment of reserves this week, with the assistance of the two companies from this battalion. I submit to you that if my action is overruled by the Department without even an opportunity of vindicating my conduct, I necessarily lose the respect of the men under me. It is well known that this matter was submitted to my discretion and that I acted after thorough and mature examination. I would submit to the humiliation if I thereby promoted the public service, for I am determined to allow no mere personal feeling to interfere with an honest effort to discharge my duty; but in this case the public interest would suffer by my remaining in command of men who looked upon my action and decisions with no respect, feeling that they had only to ask for a reversal and it would be granted. I am sure you will agree with me that I ought to be relieved if this order to restore Major Howard's battalion is to be carried out, and if such continues to be the judgment of the Department I trust that my request may be granted. The telegraphic communication between Judge Campbell and myself being on file in your office, I do not inclose copies.

I am, with sentiments of sincere regard, very truly, yours, &c.,
HOWELL COBB,

Major-General, Commanding, &c.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

HEADQUARTERS POST,
Columbus, Ga., February 15, 1864.

Maj. J. H. ALEXANDER,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Savannah, Ga.:

MAJOR: Some time since I forwarded documents with reference to the status of Howard's battalion of non-conscripts. A few days since I received a copy of the order allowing the organization of this battalion, and find that a condition annexed is that as members of the battalion arrive at the age of eighteen years they shall be turned over to the enrolling officer for conscription. I have ordered this condition enforced, and would now respectfully call attention to the following facts with reference to this organization: The battalion now numbers five companies, composed of boys from fourteen to seventeen years old, officered by young men in many instances under eighteen years, and who are, in my opinion, too young and inexperienced for the positions they occupy. The supreme court of Georgia has decided that any member of this organization under eighteen years old, although enlisted with the written consent of parent or guardian, can at any time be discharged on a writ of habeas corpus. Many have been discharged. This decision renders discipline out of the question, for should a court-martial inflict a punishment considered by parents or friends at all severe, the party could be discharged before the sentence is enforced. After all members of eighteen years are enrolled the companies will not in a single instance reach the minimum number required, and cannot be recruited, as the majority enlisted under the impression that they would be permanently retained here. For the reason given I find the battalion inefficient and regard it as a useless expense on the Government, and respectfully recommend that it be discharged from service, and that other means be adopted by which the post can be supplied with troops reliable for provost and guard duty. The amount of Government property in Columbus, valued at $5,000,000, certainly warrants a guard for its protection. I would respectfully suggest that companies which have been decimated by the casualties of war, and which now number, many of them, only ten and fifteen muskets, be temporarily assigned to this duty, which would give them an opportunity to collect the absentees and increase their effectiveness, and that when their effective total reaches twenty they be replaced by some other decimated company, or that State troops be called for to perform local duty.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. W. ROBERTSON,

Colonel, Commanding Post.

[Indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS,
Savannah, February 18, 1864.

Respectfully forwarded to department headquarters.

I concur in the recommendation of Colonel Robertson that Major Howard's battalion be disbanded as soon as troops for State service can be organized for the protection of the Government property at Columbus under the recent act of Congress, as reported troops for the purpose recommended will soon be available in large numbers.

J. F. GILMER,

Major-General, Second in Command.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

HEADQUARTERS POST,
Columbus, Ga., March 26, 1864.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS JORDAN,
Chief of Staff, Charleston, S. C.:

GENERAL: I inclose with this a commission* received at these headquarters through Maj. Gen. Howell Cobb, commanding Georgia State Guard, and respectfully ask your attention to the following remarks:

Major Howard is commanding an organization doing provost guard duty and guarding public property at this post, and known as Howard's battalion of non-conscripts. Major Howard claims that this organization is recognized at the War Department as the Twenty-seventh Georgia Battalion. I have no official information to that effect. The authority granted by Secretary of War to Major Howard to raise the battalion specified that it was for special duty in and around Columbus, Ga., and required Major Howard to turn over to the enrolling officer all members of the battalion as they became liable to conscription by virtue of age or otherwise. The battalion is composed of five companies made up of boys from fourteen to eighteen years old, and now numbers only 161 non-commissioned officers and privates, with a full quota of commissioned officers, thus rendering this battalion of boys as expensive to the Government as any other battalion of five full companies in regular service. The commissioned officers are nearly all over eighteen years of age, and claim that they are not liable to conscription by virtue of their commissions. The fact that the inclosed commission was sent through Maj. Gen. Howell Cobb indicates that the battalion is a portion of the Georgia State Guard. If so, should it be on duty at this post? By virtue of section 8 of an act entitled "An act to organize forces to serve during the war," should not this battalion be discharged from service?

In view of the facts stated I respectfully recommend that the battalion be discharged from duty at this post, and that troops for provost and other guard duty be supplied in accordance with General Orders, No. 36, Department of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, dated March 14, 1861.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. W. ROBERTSON,
Colonel, Commanding.

[First indorsement.]

HDQRS. DEPT. OF SOUTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA, &C.,

The views of Colonel Robertson appear to be sound, and I approve of them.

General, Commanding.

Respectfully referred to Major-General Cobb, commanding Georgia Reserves. If this battalion can be made effective by recruits from the reserve men it should be continued. The commission of Major Howard, improperly returned by General Beauregard, is inclosed, and will be delivered to Major Howard if General Cobb concludes the battalion can continue to be effective. The taking of men from active service to command local troops cannot be thought of. They may of course elect men permanently disabled, especially those placed in the Invalid Corps, and should be encouraged so to do, but able-bodied men between eighteen and forty-five cannot be spared.

By command of Secretary of War:

SAML. W. MELTON,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure No. 3.]

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
April 16, 1864.

The several papers inclosed are respectfully referred to General Howell Cobb for his consideration and action.

The battalion was raised by authority of the Secretary of War by T. B. Howard upon condition that the youths upon coming at eighteen years of age would be assigned to companies in the general service under the conscript act. This condition must be carried out. If the battalion thereby fails, very good; let it be disbanded. There should be a competent guard at Columbus of the reserve material. If it be practicable to retain this organization and fill it up to the requisite number, let it be done. If not, the Department will disband it upon General Cobb's recommendation. The material in it will be organized as other reserve material. The rolls are on file.

By command of Secretary of War:

SAML. W. MELTON,
Major and Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Inclosure No. 4.]

COLUMBUS, GA., May 10, 1864.

Maj. LAMAR COBB,

Assistant Adjutant and Inspector General:

MAJOR: In obedience to Special Orders, No. 13, I proceeded to this place, and have inquired into the election of the officers of Howard's battalion, and find that all the companies have been organized and the officers elected since the 15th of October, 1863, at which time orders were issued prohibiting the election of any officer unless permanently disabled from field service. My information is that none of these officers come within the orders. The strength of the battalion is eighty-three. The remainder have been discharged by the courts or gone to other commands, and most generally without leave. Of those present but seven are understood to be over forty-five years of age, and those under eighteen are leaving almost daily for the Army; thus the battalion is reduced to its present numbers and cannot be easily recruited. The guard furnished by the battalion has not been satisfactory to the officers in charge of public works and property.

In reference to the protection and defense of the public property, there is abundant material here for any ordinary occasion. There is one battalion regularly and legally organized numbering 245 men, composed of factory and railroad hands. There are at the naval iron-works 138 men; at the arsenal and workshops under its control 175 men; in the quartermaster's office 200 men; and at the Government transportation works 37 men, making an aggregate of 795 men. All these men are not enrolled, many of them having been detailed by the War Office when first liable under the conscript law without being members of any company. They should all be enrolled at once and lists made out of those in each of the public establishments, and no furloughs granted unless signed by the officer in charge of the work and approved by the commandant of the post. Out of these men two companies might be formed at the naval iron-works, three at the arsenal, and three in quartermaster's department, electing their officers from among their own number, and drilled at such times as would be least inconvenient to the officers in charge of them. The public property is now guarded by watchmen composed of disabled and maimed soldiers, who upon neglect of duty are at once discharged. They afford ample protection against any damage liable to occur from ordinary sources. It is perhaps proper to state further that this whole force (the detailed men) could be used only for local defense, as they are employed as mechanics and laborers in the city.

I am, major, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. J. CRAWFORD,
Aide-de-Camp.

[General HOWELL COBB:]

DEAR GENERAL: I have succeeded in making one company only out of Howard's battalion. It was difficult to do that, as they have used no means to keep them here since it has been known they would be disbanded. I do not know that it is so, but I believe it. The company will leave for Macon to-morrow (Thursday) night. Captain Davis, of the enrolling office, will aid me in getting up such as have gone home and who reside in this district, and send them up as rapidly as possible. There were not more than about eighty-one men who were doing duty here, and never more than 115 or 120 at any time. Very many were from Alabama, and have gone over there out of reach, but their names shall be forwarded to the enrolling officer of their district. They have men on all their rolls who are not and have not been here for five or six months. Howard refused at first to disband his men, and I had some trouble about it, because he had orders from the War Department as late as the 9th instant, and besides he claimed to be in nowise under your authority, &c., but he acted at last upon my making out and showing him my report to you of his refusal. He wanted also the order to come through the commandant of post. It is all arranged, however.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OF ALABAMA,
Montgomery, May 31, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: Some weeks since I wrote to you in reference to several volunteer organizations forming in the State of men and boys between the ages of forty-five and fifty and below eighteen years old. Some of these companies were formed before the act of Congress of February 17 was passed, some after that time, but before the notice issued by the President and required by law was published. These companies, most of them, were made up and tendered to the Governor for the war for State defense. Their rolls were filed in this office, and copies of such rolls were furnished the enrolling officers of the counties in which the companies were located. The enrolling officers are harassing these men and requiring them to be enrolled and sent to camp. This action of the enrolling officers is not warranted by the law of Congress. These organizations are in strict accordance with the spirit of the law of Congress, if not with its letter. The manner in which the enrolling officers are doing their work in this State is creating much injury—actual injury—to the planting interest of the State, and actual injury by estranging the best people from the proper regard to our cause. They can see no use in taking men over forty-five years old and boys under eighteen from their farms at this season of the year and placing them in camps to do nothing, and let their crops be destroyed. And I must be permitted to say that I think it the most egregious folly, to call it by no harsher name. These volunteer companies of which I speak have been organized in their respective counties and they are ready to respond whenever a call for the reserves is made. In the meantime, except when called out to drill, which is once a week, they are permitted to remain at home making something to eat for their families and for our soldiers. I have resisted, by remonstrance, the action of the enrolling officers, and I may feel myself justified in going farther unless some stop is put to the matter by you. I have no complaint to make of Col. H. C. Lockhart, the commandant for the State; he is a gentleman for whom I entertain a very high respect. He has common sense, a very rare sort of sense, paradoxical though it may seem, but he says he is restricted by his orders. I learn now that it is not allowed to mix in the same company boys under eighteen and old men over forty-five years of age. Surely such orders could not have issued from the War Department; they would violate the act of Congress. What is the object of such orders I cannot discover, unless it is to prevent any State organizations. It must not be forgotten that the States have some rights left, and that the right to troops in time of war is guaranteed by the Constitution. These rights, on the part of Alabama, I am determined shall be respected. I cannot permit the troops organized for State defense and ready to obey my calls to be all taken out of the control of the State. The laws of Alabama must be executed and I must have some troops at my command to execute them; such troops, while I am Governor, will always be ready to obey any call made by the President.

I wish to call your prompt attention to the contents of this letter and ask for a prompt reply.

I have the honor to remain, your obedient servant,

T. H. WATTS,
Governor of Alabama.

[Indorsement.]

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, June 18, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The commandant of conscripts for Alabama has been instructed to organize the reserves and turn over the muster-rolls to Major-General Withers. That organization is to be made in exact accordance with General Orders, No. 45, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series. These claims by local authorities for troops, stated to be organized by them, are having the effect of entirely defeating the law in relation to the reserve forces.

If the Governors persist in raising and holding armies composed largely of classes brought into the service of the Confederacy by the act of 17th February, 1864, then the anticipated effect of that act is neutralized. If these organizations are turned over to the Confederate Government there can probably no harm result from retaining them after abstracting from them the material due to the general service, and this course is recommended.

The promise to hold them by State authority, ready to answer the call of the President, does not fulfill the purposes of the law, which places them in Confederate service. The jurisdiction of the conscription ceases on the completion of company organizations, and the holding the men in camp or restoring them to their avocations is a matter for the action of the general commanding. I have the honor herewith to submit a correspondence of the commandant of conscripts for Georgia with the Governor of that State relative to like matters.*

The tendency of the action of the State authorities is to absorb the whole class of reserves.

TREASURY DEPT., CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
Richmond, June 2, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I would respectfully ask your special attention to the fact that on yesterday, the 31st of May, the issue of new currency from the Treasury amounted to $57,483,903. In the report made to Congress at the opening of the present session by the Secretary of the Treasury it was shown that under existing laws the issues of new currency authorized would probably reach $200,000,000, and it was recommended that this amount should be reduced one-half. An increase of taxes and the issue of certificates of indebtedness were recommended as means to make good the deficiency in supply to the Treasury. You are doubtless aware that the Senate has passed a bill adopting the first suggestion. Should this bill pass the House, then the new issues of currency at the command of the Treasurer would be reduced to $100,000,000. As already stated, $57,000,000 of this sum have already been issued, leaving only $43,000,000 in currency for the payment of all further requisitions. In view of this state of things the Department has for some time past advertised for sale part of the 6 per cent. untaxable bonds; but the disturbance at the Capital produced by the approach of the enemy has prevented the proposed sale, and may delay the same for several weeks longer. Under these circumstances I would respectfully urge upon you the absolute necessity of withholding your requisitions for money, and instead thereof making use of certificates of indebtedness. There are certain payments which must of necessity be made in money, such as pay of the Army and Navy, wages, salaries, and interest on the public debt. It would be well, therefore, to reserve for these purposes the remaining amount to be issued, and insist upon paying all other demands in certificates, at least until bonds can be sold. Unless some such course shall be promptly adopted the Treasury will soon be without the means to respond to any requisition.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. G. MEMMINGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

MEMORANDUM, June 1, 1864.

Hon. J. K. SIMMONS.

I have written you twice in reference to volunteer companies organized under my authority. I have no reply from you. Please not advise the commandant of companies to keep interfering with such companies there will be a conflict between the Confederate general and State authorities.

T. H. WATTS,
Governor of Alabama.

JOINT RESOLUTION, relative to the secession of the General Assembly of Virginia, asserting the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the State of Virginia over her ancient boundaries.

Whereas resolutions of the General Assembly of Virginia, adopted October eighth, eighteen hundred and sixty three, have been recommended to Congress by the Governor of that State, on the request of the General Assembly, wherein that body, referring to former proceedings and to the attempt of the enemy to form a new State out of the State of Virginia, declares that "it is the firm determination of the State, and known to be that of the Confederate Government, to assert and maintain the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the State of Virginia to the unimpaired limits of her ancient boundaries, at any and every cost."

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do resolve, That in no event will this Government consent to a division or dismemberment of the State of Virginia, but will assert and maintain her jurisdiction and sovereignty to the unimpaired limits of her ancient boundaries, at any and every cost.

Approved June 3, 1864.

CIRCULAR.] ASSISTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE.

Richmond, June 1, 1864.

The following general instructions are published for the guidance of Inspectors in the performance of their duties:

INSPECTION OF ARMIES.

First, report to the commander of the army to be inspected, and request his co-operation in so far as it may be necessary to secure facilities for making an inspection. Obtain from him such information respecting the condition of his army as he may deem proper to communicate, and request any suggestions which may lead to the more intelligent performance of the duty, or call attention to points requiring especial examination and report. Examine the office records of the army headquarters in order to secure a proper understanding of the system of government prevailing in each army, and the extent to which it is observed. The inspection of the troops of the different organizations composing the army will be made in the manner herein prescribed for inspectors serving with armies, looking especially to their armament, discipline, drill, and sanitary condition; the relative efficiency of the different organizations, and the merits of their officers; and where the differences are marked, the causes thereof, as such information, if unprejudiced, may lead to the promotion of the meritorious. As to intelligent and efficient staff officers properly carrying out the orders and intentions of commanders the success of an army is in a large measure due, their acquaintance with and faithful performance of the duties pertaining to their respective departments will be critically observed, and where found to be inefficient or negligent they will be so reported. All officers with the commands inspected who are in excess of the number authorized by law and orders will be reported, with the nature of their duties and the circumstance of their assignment.

The supplies pertaining to the different departments being difficult to procure, especial attention will be given to the due observance of property responsibility by the officers of each, respectively, seeing that all property is properly preserved or distributed strictly in accordance with allowances authorized by orders. Learn the sources from whence supplies are drawn, their amount and availability for the present and the future, their nature, and the system under which they are collected. Call attention to any obstacles in the way of their procurement, and suggest any improvements calculated to secure their more prompt, abundant, and economical delivery.

As impressment is sometimes necessary to secure supplies and injustice is occasionally inflicted through the indiscretion or viciousness of agents, impress upon officers resorting to it the importance of softening its rigors by explanations of the law, and the courteous assertion of duty under it, leaving in all instances the certificates required by General Orders, Nos. 30 and 39, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series. In passing through neighborhoods where impressments have been made inspectors should listen to all complaints; advise those really aggrieved how, under orders, to redress their wrongs, and note the names of the impressing officers, the amounts impressed, and dates of impressments, with the view to after comparison, in examining the officers' accounts, of the facts so reported with those exhibited by their vouchers.

DUTIES OF INSPECTORS SERVING WITH ARMIES.

Inspect troops in the manner prescribed by Article XXX and for the purposes indicated in paragraphs 459 and 460 of the Army Regulations published by authority of the War Department in 1862.

The number, appearance, and bearing of officers and men present at inspection and of their arms and accouterments should be ascertained, and also that all arms or parts of arms and accouterments lost have been properly accounted for, in accordance with General Orders, No. 148, of 1863, and No. 6, current series, from the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office.

The inspections under arms completed, examine the police of camps, quarters, hospitals, and guard-houses; the number of prisoners in the latter, and the nature of the charges against each; the messing arrangements, and the character and quantity of the ration issued. If troops inspected are artillery or cavalry, see that guns and caissons are properly parked, ammunition chests filled and properly packed, and the ammunition dry and serviceable; that harness and horse equipments are properly cleansed, greased, and placed on racks raised from the ground; the number, character, and condition of the guns, caissons, and horses, and that the latter are properly groomed and fed and never used except on public service; the number of stables and their location, which should be upon dry, sloping ground and well protected from the northern winds. The same examination should be extended to all army transportation as regards stabling and the care bestowed upon animals, harness, and vehicles.

The company, regimental, and brigade records should be next examined with reference to the strength, present and absent, reporting by name all officers and numerically all enlisted men improperly absent from inspection or their commands, and ascertaining if lists required to be furnished by General Orders, Nos. 125 and 130, of 1863, from the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, are regularly forwarded.

Observe the correspondence in number of the rations drawn with that of the men entitled to draw actually present with the command; this correspondence to be verified by examination of the brigade reports and the abstract of issues made by the brigade commissary.

See that regimental returns and reports of ordnance are regularly made. Knowing, from inspection, the number of arms in the hands of the men inspected, they, with those in charge of the ordnance sergeant, and others accounted for by certificates of boards of survey, should cover the responsibility of regimental commanders.

Learn whether the orders issued from the War Department and the different headquarters of the army are duly promulgated, understood, and observed throughout the commands inspected.

Examine the medical department with reference to provision made for the sick, their hospitals, medical supplies, the sanitary condition of their commands, the efficiency and capability of the medical officers, and that all required returns and reports are promptly rendered. The property and money accounts of quartermasters and commissaries should next be examined, seeing that they are correct and promptly rendered; that all public property is properly appropriated; that forage received and issued is only given to animals legitimately within command, and subsistence only to troops actually present, and that sales to officers are limited to regulation allowance—reporting all irregularities and inefficiency or neglect of duty on the part of officers and all employés, vehicles, and animals in excess over those authorized in orders.

The ordnance department will be similarly examined. The employés in all these departments should be men unfit for active duty in the ranks, as far as the nature of the duties to be performed will permit. The number of detailed men employed should be reduced to the lowest limit, and all supernumeraries and able-bodied men be remanded to the ranks.

Inspectors will attend drills occasionally, or at stated times, and call upon officers to put their commands through any movements within its school. Lieutenants should understand company, captains and field officers regimental, and colonels brigade drills, as the casualties of service frequently impose upon officers commands above the grades which they hold.

Inspectors will frequently ride through and about the neighborhood of their camps, observe the conditions of inclosures, private property, crops, &c.; repress all irregularities or depredations, and, where committed, cause prompt indemnity to the injured and punishment of offenders. As troops habitually encamp by brigades, and establish guards for the protection of all neighboring property, and the preservation of order and discipline within their own camps, such irregularities amongst well-organized and disciplined troops rarely occur.

Before leaving vacated camps inspectors will ride over the ground encamped upon by the troops and cause all property left by them to be collected and placed in the wagons. The regimental quartermaster and ordnance sergeant should be required to do this in each regiment. Do the same with all arms, accouterments, or other property left by stragglers on the line of march, and if left by those of his own command, bring offenders to trial; or, if not, turn property so collected over to the department to which it pertains. Arms, &c., thus found will be placed in any wagon, irrespective of commands, most easily reached. Roll-calls and an examination of arms, which should be invariably made in every company at the commencement and at the end of each day's march, would measurably prevent both straggling and the loss of arms, and every inspector should secure within his command the publication of an order enjoining this duty, and look to its strict observance. He will pass frequently along the line of march, cause the ranks to be kept properly closed, and all stragglers, whether of his own or other commands, to rejoin their companies; or, if this is impracticable, to turn them over to the nearest provost guard, to be marched forward and returned at the end of the march. See that the second officer in rank, with one of the medical officers of each regiment or battalion, is in rear of his command, to preserve order, prevent straggling, and to give written authority to the sick and broken down to ride in the wagons or ambulances moving with the brigade.

Note the names of stragglers, and those of their regimental and company commanders, who will be held responsible for their neglect of duty in permitting such irregularity, and required to give their immediate attention to its correction. See that staff officers in charge of trains or public property are with their respective trusts, and hold them responsible for all irregularities committed by their employés.

Preparatory to battle inspectors will locate their provost guards at eligible points for arresting all stragglers; acquaint themselves with the localities of the ordnance, supply, and ambulance trains, and of the field hospitals, the character of the grounds in the vicinity of their commands, front and rear, and of all roads to and from the line of battle, and connecting with the main traveled roads in rear; the troops supporting both flanks; the position of reserves; the watchfulness observed by pickets and skirmishers thrown to the front, and report this, and all other information, derived from the examination of prisoners or other sources, which may prove important in aiding his commander in the intelligent performance of his duties.

In the intervals of the fight, where practicable, he will cause to be collected all arms, accouterments, or other movable property left by our own men or the enemy, to points in rear easily accessible for the wagons. They will keep an account of all captures made by their commands, whether of prisoners or property, sending in a tabular statement of the same after the battle, in order that each command may receive due credit for its services; and cause all property captured or collected to be turned over on public account to the officers of the department to which it pertains.

INSPECTION OF DISTRICTS.

These inspections involve more general duties than those of an army, in the examinations of the various public interests located at the numerous posts, depots, camps of instruction, or other institutions, growing out of the wants of the different departments of the Government. In making them inspectors will give their especial attention to the following points:

The strength, efficiency, and character of the troops occupying the different stations inspected, recollecting the requirements of General Orders, No. 26, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, while inspecting detailed men and provost guards, the latter usually composing the garrisons of all stations, other than posts of a strictly defensive character.

The strength and efficiency of the troops garrisoning fortifications; the extent and nature of the defensive works and their armament; the fitness and sufficiency of the ammunition for the guns, and the care bestowed upon its preservation; and that all other supplies necessary to the maintenance of a vigorous and effective defense are on hand.

The money and property accounts of all disbursing officers within the district inspected; and their prompt rendition at prescribed periods, to the chiefs of departments to which they belong.

That all public property, wherever found, is properly cared for, and in charge of responsible agents, and in no instance misapplied.

That adequate storage is provided for the protection of all stores collected at depots, and that the supplies received correspond with amounts invoiced; or if not, the measures adopted to correct the deficiency.

That rations, wherever issued, correspond strictly with the number of men present and entitled to them; and where this number varies between the regular periods of issue, that any surplus thereby accumulated is deducted from the next returns. That impressing officers, where supplies are obtained by impressment, conform strictly to regulations and orders governing this system.

The means adopted by tax officers to collect the tax in kind, the resources of the country within their respective districts, if faithfully and impartially assessed and collected; the amount of supplies collected and remaining uncollected; the facilities for their transportation from points of production to the depots, and thence to points of consumption; and the intelligence, integrity, and energy of officers and agents employed in this duty.

The authority under which detailed men are acting in the different departments in the employment of Government contractors, and that they are reduced to the lowest number which will accomplish the work to be performed. All supernumeraries to be reported, in order that they may be remanded to their commands.

The arrangements adopted at camps of instruction for the accommodation and instruction of conscripts, and for their examination, distribution to commands, and exemptions; and the number received, assigned to duty, or exempted within the year.

The records at conscript agencies; that they show thorough enrollments, collection and examination of all persons of conscript age within each district; that the examinations by the medical boards are strict and impartial, and where giving exemptions on account of physical disability, that they act strictly in compliance with regulations and the true interests of the service.

The energy with which conscript officers apprehend and return to their commands all deserters, and officers and men improperly absent; and their strictness in enforcing the orders relating to sick, furloughed, or retired officers and men within their districts.

That registers are kept at each agency of all men of conscript age; and of all exempted, detailed, furloughed, or retired officers and men within their districts, and the authority under which each is acting.

The management of hospitals, the number of invalids they receive, return restored to their commands, transfer to other hospitals, or who have died within them during the month preceding inspection. The number and efficiency of officers and men employed at each, the quality and quantity of supplies, and that no rations other than those issued to men in the field are allowed within the hospitals, except to the sick, for whose use alone all extra supplies are designed.

At depots in rear of the armies, adjuncts thereof, and at which all surplus supplies are accumulated, shops for repairs are established, and to which unserviceable animals are sent back to recruit; examine the different departments, and the efficacy of measures adopted by each to carry out these various objects.

To perform efficiently their duties inspectors will acquaint themselves with the regulations and orders governing all branches of the service, issued from the War Department, or the headquarters of the army with which they are serving. This knowledge is indispensable, as it is the duty of the inspector to see that all orders are understood and obeyed by the command with which he is serving, or which he is inspecting. Army Regulations, and Tactics of different arms of the service, and General Orders from Adjutant and Inspector General's Office up to the close of each year, can be purchased at the book-stores. Within the year the orders are so distributed throughout all the armies as to be accessible to all. The regulations of the different departments are usually to be found in the hands of their officers in each brigade.

Inspections are intended to secure greater efficiency throughout the service, in procuring the strict observance of orders, the correction of abuses, and in bringing to the notice of the authorities the merits and demerits of all military officers and organizations; and such other information as will acquaint them with the condition of the different commands, and enable them to act advisedly in making any changes necessary for the advancement of the public interests.

Inspectors, while critically inspecting each command with a view to full information respecting its condition, should be exceedingly cautious in forming their opinions, which should be based upon reliable facts and personal observation. They will look only to the public interest in making their reports. Patience, courtesy, and firmness should characterize their performance of duty in every position, with a strict avoidance of all action approaching a "detective" character. While their reports are to be strictly confidential, except in so far as the authorities to whom they are made may deem it expedient to disclose them, all inspections and the relations between the inspector and the inspected must be perfectly ingenuous, impartial, and soldierly.

Hon. C. G. MEMMINGER,
Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 2d instant. Without further legislation allowing the tender of certificates of indebtedness on impressment, it is vain to expect their use to any considerable extent, as they will not, in despite all explanations and efforts on the part of officers, be voluntarily received. Besides, considerable amounts in currency are absolutely necessary to pay employes of the Government, of the railroads, and of contractors. I trust every effort will be made at once to raise money by the sale on hypothecation of bonds or by the negotiation of a loan. Otherwise I fear the machinery of Government will stop.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Your letter of April 27 addressed to the President was referred to me with the indorsement that "in this case as stated it would seem proper to receive the companies as organized either in the reserve or active force." In accordance with this instruction I directed the Adjutant-General to order the organization to be retained and considered part of the reserved forces. A letter was by him addressed to General Withers to that effect and a copy of it sent to you. I have received no letter from you addressed to me on this subject.

THE SENATE OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

I regret that a sense of duty compels me to return to the Senate without my signature a joint resolution which originated in your honorable body entitled "Joint resolution in regard to the exemption of editors and employes of newspapers."

The terms of this resolution extend to editors of magazines and periodicals other than newspapers, together with their employes, the same exemption from military service as is now accorded in favor of newspapers

I see no reason for exempting these citizens from the duty of defending their country which would not apply to all authors, publishers, booksellers, printers, and other persons connected with the publication of books, pamphlets, religious tracts, and other reading-matter. At a moment when our lives, our liberty, and our independence are threatened by the utmost power of our enemies, when every citizen capable of bearing arms ought to be found in the ranks, I cannot but deem it impolitic to add to the list of exemptions without the most urgent necessity. Seeing no such necessity, and believing the precedent set by this resolution, if passed, to be productive of evil effect, I am constrained to return it without my approval.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA RESERVES,
Macon, Ga., June 6, 1864.

General S. COOPER,

Adjutant and Inspector General, Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: Your telegram of the 5th instant and your letter of the 27th ultimo, inclosing General Bragg's letter of the 26th ultimo, just received, and I reply to both in this letter as the subject is the same. I fear that the Department will feel a disappointment when the strength of the Georgia Reserve is made known to it, though I have endeavored to prepare you for it in my previous communications. Governor Brown by his false certificate "that all the military and civil officers of Georgia are necessary for the proper administration of the State government," as well as by his mustering into State service men afterward detailed as operatives in factories, &c., has made such inroads upon the material out of which the reserve force was to be organized, that its strength will fall far below what was anticipated at the time the law was passed for its organization. Some idea may be formed of the effect of Governor Brown's exemption certificate when I inform you that he claims now to have over 5,000 men in his militia force at Atlanta, most of whom would belong to the Reserves if they had not been withheld by the certificate to which I have referred. The fact that they are now brought into the service is satisfactory evidence that they are not necessary for the administration of the State government, as claimed by Governor Brown. Another difficulty I have had to encounter is the number of men exempted by the local boards for agricultural and other necessary purposes. I have no reason to believe that improper exemptions have been made, still it has greatly diminished the material left after Governor Brown's sweeping exemption.

I have organized four regiments who are now at Andersonville. The fifth will be organized here this week, and is required here to guard the prison camp and the public works at this place. A battalion of six companies (Girardey's from Augusta) is here, except two companies temporarily doing duty at Augusta, and I am making arrangements to increase it to a regiment, which I hope to accomplish in a few weeks.

There are at Savannah six organized companies, and arrangements in progress for four other companies to complete the regiment. At Augusta the organization of Reserves has been somewhat delayed by the existence of local companies, which I am now converting into regular reserves, and from the best information I can obtain I should say that a battalion, perhaps a regiment, may be formed there. At Atlanta and other points reserves are still reporting, and other companies and regiments will be organized as rapidly as possible. My present calculation is that there will be at least eight full regiments of reserves for the State. In addition to these I have taken steps for the more perfect organization into companies and battalions, for strictly local defense, of all men who are detailed or otherwise employed in the public workshops and factories, &c., at Savannah, Augusta, Atlanta, Columbus, Macon, and Athens. These organizations I propose to keep separate and distinct from the State Reserves, but I shall have at each of the points a pretty effective force for strictly local defense. As soon as the muster-rolls are sent to me I will have them forwarded, that you may be informed of the extent of the organizations.

I have not forwarded to you the muster-rolls of the regiments which have been formed, because they have not yet been properly prepared. I have had to deal with men who were wholly uninformed, and it has been difficult to get them to comply with the regulations. A more serious difficulty has occurred from the fact that the pressure upon me for troops to relieve the old regiments at Andersonville made it necessary for me to organize with less than the minimum number into some of the companies. These I have been filling up preparatory to sending forward the muster-rolls.

I have endeavored to state as clearly as possible the facts connected with the reserve force, that you may have a tolerably correct idea of its strength, and will place before you as soon as possible a more full report, accompanied by the muster-rolls.

The letter of General Bragg seems to indicate the points at which the different regiments are to be stationed. If this is to be regarded as a direction you will observe it changes the whole disposition of the force, except that it leaves three regiments at Andersonville, whereas there are now four, and that number is not considered too many. He also requires five regiments at Atlanta. These are not required there now, as Governor Brown's whole force of 5,000 men is at that place; besides, I have not as many regiments as he assigns to different places. I await your instructions in these matters.

Allow me to say that since Colonel Browne has taken charge of the conscript office here he has extended to me not only cordial but efficient aid, and by the system which he has adopted I have no doubt our united efforts will bring into the service all who are liable to this duty, and that in a very short time.

I should have stated in the proper place that the companies below the minimum number were in Gartrell's regiments and did not pass through the conscript office, but were put on duty by me in the emergency mentioned.

I am, general, very respectfully, yours,

HOWELL COBB,
Major-General, &c.

RICHMOND, June 7, 1864.

THE SENATE OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

A bill which originated in the Senate entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of additional officers of artillery for ordnance duties" has been presented for my signature, but it contains a provision founded on an error of fact which compels me to return it without approval, that the error may be corrected.

The bill contains the following proviso: "Provided, That acting ordnance officers having been found duly qualified for appointment according to the regulations of the War Department, and being already on duty in the field under the orders of the Secretary of War, shall have preference of appointment under this act." There are no acting ordnance officers on duty in the field, and I learn on inquiry that the persons so designated are in reality merely employés of the Ordnance Bureau for the performance of ordnance duties in the field in the absence of legislation authorizing the appointment of officers. This proviso, therefore, has the effect, under an error of fact apparent in its terms, of restricting the Executive in the choice of persons to fill the offices created by the bill to a list of employés selected by a chief of bureau, which is plainly not in accordance with the expressed intention of Congress, nor with the terms of the Constitution.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

[Inclosure.]

AN ACT to authorize the appointment of additional officers of artillery for ordnance duties.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint fifty officers of artillery in the Provisional Army for the performance of ordnance duties in addition to those authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of officers of artillery in the Provisional Army," approved April 21, 1862, and "An act to authorize the appointment of additional officers of artillery for ordnance duties," approved September 16, 1862, and that the rank of said officers shall be as provided in said last-named act: Provided, That acting ordnance officers having been found duly qualified for appointment according to the regulations of the War Department, and being already on duty in the field under the orders of the Secretary of War, shall have preference of appointment under this act.

General S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General, Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: On the 28th of April last I indorsed to you a copy of a letter I had addressed to Governor Brown on the subject of his sweeping exemption of State officers, both civil and military. I now forward to you copies of his reply and the subsequent correspondence.*

There is but one fact in this correspondence worthy of your consideration. You will observe that Governor Brown regards the act of Congress on the subject of exempting State officers "necessary for the proper administration of the State government" as a nullity; and his certificate given in response to the requirements of that act was a mere pretense, which he does not and will not deny was wholly untrue.

His excuse for this false certificate you will find to be a resolution of the Legislature of Georgia, which, it seems, he thinks justifies him in making a certificate which was manifestly untrue.

I am, general, very respectfully, yours, &c.,

HOWELL COBB,
Major-General, Commanding, &c.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
 Montgomery, Ala., June 7, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

The enrolling officer, Colonel Browne, of Macon, Ga., has enrolled several of the hands of the Shakanoosa Arms Manufacturing Company, at Dawson, Ga., and threatens to take many more, thus in effect destroying an establishment with which Alabama has a contract for a supply of arms. This establishment is of common and great utility to the Confederate States and the States of Georgia and Alabama. Arms are a necessity, and Alabama has a very inadequate supply. I request, therefore, that no further conscription from that factory be made, or that of those making [arms?] such may be returned or detailed as may under oath by the superintendent be deemed necessary to the successful working of the establishment.

Governor.

RICHMOND, VA., June 7, 1864.

Hon. CLIFFORD ANDERSON,
Member of Congress from Georgia:

MY DEAR SIR: I have just received the report in the case of Maj. C. J. Harris, for which I have informed you I had called on the War Department. It is as follows:

Charles J. Harris was appointed by the Secretary of War a major for conscript duty in Georgia, but as he was not appointed to the actual command of a camp or instruction the President declined to nominate, and accordingly at the end of the session (February 17 last) he was notified that he was dropped because not confirmed. He has been notified of the cause and facts of the case.

ED. A. PALFREY,
Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

By reference to the law you will perceive that the appointment was unauthorized, and therefore, when the case came before me, I decided against it and declined to nominate. There is, and has long been, a necessity for other officers than those allowed by the law. The commandant of a camp cannot perform all the duties required by the act for a general enrollment, but in the absence of legislation for other officers the course pursued in this case was the only one which I could adopt.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

OFFICE OF MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY,
Grenada, June 9, 1864.

Maj. Gen. S. D. LEE, C. S. Army:

DEAR SIR: I find it almost impossible to keep this road in safe running order for want of shovels, axes, and some framing tools. The recent heavy rains north of this place has covered the track with sand in some places to the depth of two feet, and I can with difficulty obtain shovels to supply the few hands I have in removing it. I am compelled, therefore, to ask again for permission to send out a few bales of cotton to obtain railroad supplies. Twenty-five bales would purchase all I could hope to get out. Cotton is sent toward Memphis almost daily, and for every purpose you can imagine, yet I will not move a bale except by authority. I need labor on the road north of this place, and am willing to pay for it. I want twenty hands for two or three months. After the press of the farmers is over would you impress them for me, we paying them? I cannot hire them. This I have tried in vain to do. This road may or may not be of any benefit to the Government. This you must determine. If it is or is to be, I must have labor to repair it and tools for them to work with.

Yours, respectfully,

W. GOODMAN,
President.

AN ACT to amend the laws relating to the tax in kind.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the act approved seventeenth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to lay taxes for the common defense and carry on the Government of the Confederate States,' approved April twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: After the word "wool" in the first proviso of the fourth paragraph of section ten, the words "in the aggregate," shall be inserted; and in the same article and section, the word "eight" shall be substituted for the word "five," so as to read: Provided, That post quartermasters shall direct such delivery to be made at any time within eight months after the date of said estimates, &c.

SEC. 2. In all cases where crops, subject to a tax in kind, have been, or may be destroyed, in whole or in part, by fire or any other accidental cause, or by the enemy, if before assessment, the assessor shall regard the part of the crop not destroyed as all that was produced by the owner; if after assessment, and the destruction be satisfactorily proven, the post quartermaster shall also regard the portion of the crop not destroyed as all that was produced, and the proof relieving the producer shall entitle the quartermaster to a credit on his return for the property thus lost.

SEC. 3. In cases where the quantity of corn reserved from the tax in kind is not sufficient to supply the actual wants of the producer, without any default on his part, upon satisfactory evidence of the fact, the Secretary of War is authorized to allow the money value to be paid for the tithe to the extent thus required.

SEC. 4. The law imposing a tax upon the assessed value of property shall not be so construed as to impose a tax upon the products of gardens intended for the use of the family of the owner, nor upon fruit raised for domestic use and not for sale.

SEC. 5. That the account of slaughtered hogs required by the first section of said act shall be rendered on or about the first day of March, eighteen hundred and sixty-five and eighteen hundred and sixty-six, for each year preceding said date.

Approved June 10, 1864.

AN ACT to raise money to increase the pay of soldiers.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That upon all subjects of taxation under existing tax laws, there shall be assessed and levied a tax equal to one-fifth of the amount of the present tax on the same subjects for the year eighteen hundred and sixty-four, which tax shall be payable only in Confederate Treasury notes of the new issue, and shall be collected at the same times with the other taxes on the same subjects, under the laws now in force.

SEC. 2. The money arising from the tax hereby imposed shall be appropriated, first, to the payment of the increased compensation of the soldiers under the act passed at the present session.

Approved June 10, 1864.

AN ACT making appropriations for the support of the Government of the Confederate States of America, from July 1 to December 31, 1864, and to supply a deficiency.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Government, from July first to December thirty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-four:

* * * * *

WAR DEPARTMENT.—For compensation of the Secretary of War, Assistant Secretary, chief of bureau, clerks, messengers, and others employed in the War Department, two hundred and five thousand dollars.

For incidental and contingent expenses of the War Department, one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

For salary of Commissioner, chief clerk, and incidental expenses of Indian Bureau, nine thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

For contingent expenses of the Adjutant and Inspector General's Department, twenty-five thousand dollars.

For incidental and contingent expenses of the Army, one hundred thousand dollars.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.—For pay of the Army, seventy-four million two hundred and forty-nine thousand nine hundred and fifty-one dollars.

For disbursements for the public service of the Quartermaster's Department, one hundred and twenty-five million seven hundred and fifty thousand and forty-nine dollars.

COMMISSARY DEPARTMENT.—For the purchase of subsistence stores and commissary property, in addition to the unexpended balance of the last appropriation, one hundred million dollars.

So much of the appropriation for the Quartermaster and the Commissary Departments as may be necessary may be transferred from one to the other by order of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of paying for supplies impressed or purchased according to the exigencies of the service.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.—For the ordnance service in all its branches, twenty-five million dollars.

For the niter and mining service, four million three hundred thousand dollars.

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.—For the engineer service, ten million dollars.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.—For pay of physicians employed by contract, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For pay of nurses and cooks, not enlisted as volunteers, three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For pay of hospital laundresses, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, fourteen million eight hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

For the establishment and support of military hospitals, one hundred thousand dollars.

For pay of hospital stewards, one hundred thousand dollars.

For pay of matrons, assistant matrons, and ward matrons, three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

For pay of ward-masters, two hundred thousand dollars.

* * * * *

SEC. 2. That no appropriation made under this act shall be drawn from the Treasury until all unexpended balances standing to the credit of the Department for which the appropriation herein made shall have been exhausted.

Approved June 13, 1864.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
 No. 52. } Richmond, June 13, 1864.

I. The following acts of Congress are published for the information of the Army:

AN ACT to amend the act approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, entitled "An act to allow commissioned officers of the Army rations, and the privilege of purchasing clothing from the Quartermaster's Department."

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That all commissioned officers in the Army and Navy shall be entitled to one ration, and all commissioned officers in the field and afloat, in addition thereto, shall be allowed to purchase from any commissary or other officer required to issue subsistence to soldiers, marines, or seamen, at the prime cost thereof, including transportation, as follows: One ration each for officers of and below the rank of colonel, two rations each for officers of the rank of brigadier-general, major-general, and lieutenant-general; and three rations each for a general; one ration each for commissioned officers of the Navy of and below the rank of commander, and two rations each for officers above that rank.

SEC. 2. That an officer shall not draw or purchase, at any time, more of the component part of a ration than is issued to the private soldier at the same time.

SEC. 3. That nothing contained in this act or the act to which this is an amendment, shall be construed as allowing commutation for rations or as authorizing an officer to receive or purchase rations, except when he requires them for his own use.

SEC. 4. That this act shall continue in force only during the war.

Approved June 7, 1864.

II. AN ACT to provide transportation in kind in certain cases to Members and Delegates in Congress.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That whenever the usually traveled routes between the homes of members of Congress and the Capital are interfered with by the enemy, it shall be the duty of military commanders to facilitate the passage of Members and Delegates going to or returning from Congress, by furnishing transportation in kind for any distances over which they may state in writing they cannot provide themselves with transportation; and such written application, indorsed "furnished," by the party receiving the transportation, shall be accepted as a sufficient voucher for the expenditure of the officer in furnishing the same.

Approved June 8, 1864.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

AN ACT to authorize the manufacture of spirituous liquors for the use of the Army and hospitals.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That it shall be lawful for the Surgeon-General or the Commissary-General to make all necessary contracts for the manufacture and distillation of whisky, brandy, and other alcoholic and spirituous liquors for the supply of the Army and hospitals upon such terms as may be conducive to the public interest; and that the said contracts and any heretofore made shall operate as a license to the contractor to manufacture the same for the purpose aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the Surgeon-General and the Commissary-General shall be authorized to establish manufactories or distilleries for the purpose of obtaining the supplies aforesaid, and to employ laborers in the same, instead of resorting to contracts, if they shall deem it more prudent to do so.

SEC. 3. That no contractor or party shall, under the license granted by this act, distill or make more alcohol, whisky, brandy or other alcoholic or spirituous liquors than he shall deliver to the Government or its agents in fulfillment of his contract or contracts; nor shall it be lawful for any such contractor to sell, or in any way dispose of, otherwise than as said contract or contracts may require, any alcohol, whisky, brandy, or other alcoholic or spirituous liquors manufactured by him under the license aforesaid; nor shall this act operate as a license to any contractor for any violation of the prohibitions herein contained, when such violation shall be a crime or misdemeanor under the laws of the State in which the same may occur.

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce the currency and to authorize a new issue of notes and bonds," approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That instead of six per cent. bonds, authorized to be issued to the States, under the twelfth section of the said act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to issue to any State which may desire the same, one-half of such amount as the said State is entitled to claim in Treasury notes of the new issue, and the other half in said six per cent. bonds; or, at the option of the State in coupon bonds, payable in twenty years, with interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, payable half yearly; the said four per cent. bonds not to be taxable either upon principal or interest; and this provision shall extend to any portion of the amount which such State may be entitled to claim.

Approved June 14, 1864.

---

AN ACT further to amend "An act to reduce the currency and to authorize a new issue of bonds and notes," approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the above-recited act be further amended, so as to allow States which have funded the Treasury notes of the old issue held by them under the provisions of the "Act to reduce the currency and to authorize a new issue of notes and bonds," approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, to exchange the certificates or bonds so received for the new issue of Treasury notes, in the same proportion, and on the same conditions as provided in said act, and the act amendatory thereof, authorizing the exchange of old notes held by the States for notes of the new issue.

Approved June 14, 1864.

---

AN ACT to amend the tax laws.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the first, second and third sections of the "Act to levy additional taxes for the common defense and support of the Government," approved seventeenth of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be amended and re-enacted, so as to read as follows, to wit:

SECTION 1. That, in addition to the taxes levied by the "Act to lay taxes for the common defense and to carry on the Government of the Confederate States," approved April twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, there shall be levied from the seventeenth day of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, on the subjects of taxation hereinafter mentioned, and collected from every person, copartnership, association or corporation liable therefor, taxes as follows, to wit:

I. Upon the value of all property, real, personal and mixed, of every kind and description, not hereinafter exempted or taxed at a different rate, five per cent.: Provided, That from the tax on the value of property employed in agriculture shall be deducted the value of the tax in kind derived therefrom during the same year, as assessed under the law imposing it, and delivered to the Government, whether delivered during the year or afterward, including the bacon, deliverable after, and not prior to, the assessment of the tax on property employed in agriculture as aforesaid; and the collection of the tax on such property shall be suspended after assessment, under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, until the value of the tithe to be deducted can be ascertained, and when so ascertained, it shall be the duty of the post quartermaster to certify, and of the district collector to deduct, the value of such tithe, and any balance found due may be paid in bonds and certificates therefor, authorized by the "Act to reduce the currency and to authorize a new issue of notes and bonds," in like manner as other taxes payable during the year: Provided, That no credit shall be allowed beyond five per cent.

II. On the value of gold and silver ware and plate, jewels, jewelry, and watches, ten per cent.

III. The value of property taxed under this section shall be assessed on the basis of the market value of the same, or similar property in the neighborhood where assessed, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty, except in cases where lands, slaves, cotton and tobacco have been purchased since the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, in which case the said land, slaves, cotton and tobacco so purchased shall be assessed at the price actually paid for the same by the owner: Provided, That land purchased by refugees and held and occupied by them for their own use and residence, shall be assessed according to its market value in the year eighteen hundred and sixty.

SEC. 2. That section second of an act entitled "An act to levy additional taxes for the common defense and support of the Government," approved seventeenth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and it is hereby declared, that all the property and assets of corporations, associations and joint stock companies of every description, whether incorporated or not, shall be assessed and taxed in the same manner, and to the same extent, as the property and assets of individuals; the tax on such property and assets to be assessed against, and paid by, such corporations, associations and joint stock companies: Provided, That no bank or banking company shall be liable to pay a tax upon deposits of money to the credit of, and subject to the checks of, others: Provided further, That the stock, shares or interests representing property or assets in corporations or joint stock companies, or associations, shall not be assessed or taxed: And provided further, That all property within the enemy's lines be, and the same is hereby, exempted from all taxation so long as it remains in the enemy's lines.

SEC. 3. That paragraph one of section three of an act entitled "An act to levy additional taxes for the common defense and support of the Government," approved seventeenth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be, and the same is, hereby amended and re-enacted, so as to read as follows: Upon the amount of all gold and silver coin, gold dust, gold or silver bullion, moneys held abroad, or bills of exchange, drawn therefor, promissory notes, rights, credits and securities, payable in foreign countries, five per cent. to be paid in specie, or Confederate Treasury notes at their value, as compared with specie at the time the tax is payable; the relative value of specie and Confederate Treasury notes, for the purpose of payment under this act, to be fixed by regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Taxes, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 4. That section sixteen of the "Act to amend an act entitled 'An act to lay taxes for the common defense and carry on the Government of the Confederate States,'" approved seventeenth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be, and the same is hereby, amended, so as to read as follows:

I. The income, property and money, other than Confederate Treasury notes, of hospitals, asylums, churches, schools, colleges and other charitable institutions, shall be exempted from taxation under the provisions of this act, or any other law. The property of companies formed under the act entitled "An act to establish a volunteer navy," shall be exempt from taxation, except on the income.

II. That paragraph six, section seven, of the same act, be, and the same is, hereby amended by adding thereto, as follows:

"If any person shall fail to make due return, as required by said section, of the income or profits taxed under any law of Congress, or in case of disagreement with the assessor, to submit the same to referees, as provided by law, or shall fail or refuse to pay the tax thereon, within such time as shall be prescribed by public notice, by the district collector, under the direction of the Commissioner of Taxes, such person shall be deemed and held to be in default: Provided, That such person shall not be deemed and held to be in default, who may fail, or has failed to make payment, or due returns, in consequence of the presence or interference of the enemy, or the absence or neglect of the officers charged with the assessment and collection of taxes."

SEC. 5. That this act shall not be so construed as to subject to taxation corn, bacon and other agricultural products, which were produced in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and in the possession of the producer on the seventeenth of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and necessary for the support of himself and family during the present year, and from or on which taxes in kind have been deducted and delivered or paid.

SEC. 6. That section four, paragraphs one and two, of the act approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, entitled "An act to levy additional taxes for the common defense and support of the Government," be so amended as to levy an additional tax of thirty per cent. upon the amount of all profits made by selling the articles mentioned in the said paragraphs, between the seventeenth day of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, and the first day of July next, which additional tax shall be collected under said act.

SEC. 7. That on all Treasury notes of the old issue, of the denomination of five dollars, not exchanged for new issue prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, and which may remain outstanding on that day, a tax of one hundred per cent. is hereby imposed.

SEC. 8. That section seven of an act entitled "An act to levy additional taxes for the common defense and support of the Government," approved seventeenth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

I. That the first section of the "Act to lay taxes for the common defense and to carry on the Government of the Confederate States," approved twenty-fourth April, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, is suspended for the year eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

II. In all cases where a tax is levied on income derived from property, real, personal and mixed of every description, on the amount or value of which an ad valorem tax is laid, the ad valorem tax shall be deducted from the income tax: Provided, That in no case shall less be paid than the ad valorem tax.

III. In the assessment of income derived from manufacturing or mining, there shall be deducted from the gross income or profits, the necessary annual repairs, not exceeding ten per cent. on the amount of the income derived therefrom. And, in addition to the deductions now allowed by law in the assessment of incomes derived from any source, the following shall be made, namely: The Confederate taxes actually paid by the owner on sales made by him, and the commissions actually paid by the consignor or shipper for selling, and in the production or manufacture of pig metal or other iron, the cost of fuel.

SEC. 9. That all citizens of any one of the Confederate States, temporarily residing in another State, shall be liable to be assessed and taxed in the State or district in which he may temporarily reside; and it shall be the duty of all such who have not heretofore made return of their taxable property to the district assessor where they may temporarily reside, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to make such return; and any one liable to be assessed and taxed as aforesaid who shall fail or refuse, within the said period of thirty days to make such return, shall be liable to all the pains and penalties imposed by the laws of the Confederate States in such case.

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT to increase the compensation of the heads of the several Executive Departments, and the Assistant Secretary of War and the Treasury and of the Assistant Attorney-General and the Comptroller of the Treasury and other officers therein named.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the compensation of the heads of the several Executive Departments of the Government shall, for one year from the passage of this act, be increased to nine thousand dollars; and of the Assistant Secretary of War and of the Treasury and of the Assistant Attorney-General and the Comptroller of the Treasury be increased to six thousand dollars; and that the salaries of all clerks and employés in the various departments, located in the city of Richmond, be increased thirty-three and one-third per cent., and at all other points throughout the Confederate States twenty-five per cent. for one year from the passage of this act: Provided, That the clerks detailed from the Army or Navy shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act.

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT making additional appropriations for the support of the Government.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Government, in addition to appropriations heretofore made, for the period ending the thirty-first of December, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

* * * * *

WAR DEPARTMENT.—For compensation of the Secretary of War, Assistant Secretary, chief of bureau, clerks, messenger and other employés, for the period ending thirty-first December, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, two hundred and fifty-eight thousand dollars.

* * * * *

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled “An act to prohibit the importation of luxuries or of articles not necessities or of common use,” approved February sixth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That so much of the act entitled “An act to prohibit the importation of luxuries or of articles not necessities or of common use,” approved sixth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, as forbids the importation of prepared “vegetables, fruits, meats, poultry and game, sealed or inclosed in cans or otherwise, and brooms and brushes of all kinds,” is hereby repealed.

Approved June 14, 1864.

JOINT RESOLUTION declaring the dispositions, principles and purposes of the Confederate States in relation to the existing war with the United States.

Whereas, it is due to the great cause of humanity and civilization, and especially to the heroic sacrifices of their gallant army in the field, that no means consistent with a proper self-respect, and the approved usages of nations, should be omitted by the Confederate States to enlighten the public opinion of the world with regard to the true character of the struggle in which they are engaged, and the dispositions, principles and purposes by which they are actuated: Therefore,

Resolved by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That the following manifesto be issued in their name and by their authority, and that the President be requested to cause copies thereof to be transmitted to our commissioners abroad, to the end that the same may be laid before foreign governments:

MANIFESTO OF THE CONGRESS OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA RELATIVE TO THE EXISTING WAR WITH THE UNITED STATES.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America, acknowledging their responsibility to the opinion of the civilized world, to the great law of Christian philanthropy, and to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, for the part they have been compelled to bear in the sad spectacle of war and carnage which this continent has, for the last three years, exhibited to the eyes of afflicted humanity, deem the present a fitting occasion to declare the principles, the sentiments, and the purposes by which they have been, and are still, actuated. They have ever deeply deplored the necessity which constrained them to take up arms in defense of their rights and of the free institutions derived from their ancestors; and there is nothing they more ardently desire than peace, whensoever their enemy, by ceasing from the unhallowed war waged upon them, shall permit them to enjoy in peace the sheltering protection of those hereditary rights and of those cherished institutions.

The series of successes with which it has pleased Almighty God, in so signal a manner, to bless our arms on almost every point of our invaded borders since the opening of the present campaign, enables us to profess this desire of peace in the interests of civilization and humanity without danger of having our motives misinterpreted, or of the declaration being ascribed to any unmanly sentiment, or any distrust of our ability fully to maintain our cause. The repeated and disastrous checks foreshadowing ultimate discomfiture, which their gigantic Army, directed against the Capital of the Confederacy, has already met with, are but a continuation of the same providential successes for us. We do not refer to these successes in any spirit of vain boasting, but in humble acknowledgment of that Almighty protection which has vouchsafed and granted them.

The world must now see that eight millions of people, inhabiting so extensive a territory, with such varied resources, and such numerous facilities for defense as the benignant bounty of nature has bestowed upon us, and animated with one spirit to encounter every privation and sacrifice of ease, of health, of property, of life itself, rather than be degraded from the condition of free and independent States into which they were born, can never be conquered. Will not our adversaries themselves begin to feel that humanity has bled long enough, that tears and blood and treasure enough have been expended in a bootless undertaking, covering their own land, no less than ours, with a pall of mourning, and exposing them far more than ourselves to the catastrophe of financial exhaustion and bankruptcy, not to speak of the loss of their liberties by the despotism engendered in an aggressive warfare upon the liberties of another and kindred people? Will they be willing, by a longer perseverance in a wanton and hopeless contest, to make this continent, which they so long boasted to be the chosen abode of liberty and self-government, of peace and a higher civilization, the theater of the most causeless and prodigal effusion of blood which the world has ever seen, of a virtual relapse into the barbarism of the ruder ages, and of the destruction of constitutional freedom by the lawlessness of usurped power? These are questions which our adversaries will decide for themselves. We desire to stand acquitted, before the tribunal of the world, as well as in the eyes of Omniscient justice, of any responsibility for the origin or prolongation of a war as contrary to the spirit of the age as to the traditions and acknowledged maxims of the political system of America. On this continent, whatever opinions may have prevailed elsewhere, it has ever been held and acknowledged by all parties, that government, to be lawful, must be founded on the consent of the governed. We were forced to dissolve our federal connection with our former associates by their aggressions on the fundamental principles of our compact of union with them, and, in doing so, we exercised a right consecrated in the great charter of American liberty—the right of a free people, when a government proves destructive of the ends for which it was established, to recur to original principles and to institute new guards for their security.

The separate independence of the States, as sovereign and coequal members of the Federal Union, had never been surrendered, and the pretension of applying to independent communities, so constituted and organized, the ordinary rules for coercing and reducing rebellious subjects to obedience, was a solecism in terms as well as an outrage on the principles of public law. The war made upon the Confederate States was, therefore, wholly one of aggression; on our side it has been strictly defensive. Born freemen, and the descendants of a gallant ancestry, we had no option but to stand up in defense of our invaded firesides, of our desecrated altars, of our violated liberties and birthright, and of the prescriptive institutions which guard and protect them. We have not interfered, nor do we wish in any manner whatever to interfere, with the internal peace and prosperity of the States arrayed in hostility against us, or with the freest development of their destinies in any form of action or line of policy they may think proper to adopt for themselves. All we ask is a like immunity for ourselves, and to be left in the undisturbed enjoyment of those inalienable rights of “life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness” which our common ancestors declared to be the equal heritage of all parties to the social compact. Let them forbear aggressions upon us, and the war is at an end. If there be questions which require adjustment by negotiation, we have ever been willing, and are still willing, to enter into communication with our adversaries in a spirit of peace, of equity, and manly frankness. Strong in the persuasion of the justice of our cause, in the gallant devotion of our citizen-soldiers and the whole body of our people, and above all, in the gracious protection of Heaven, we are not afraid to avow a sincere desire for peace on terms consistent with our honor and the permanent security of our rights, and an earnest aspiration to see the world once more restored to the beneficent pursuits of industry and of neutral [mutual] intercourse and exchanges so essential to its well-being, and which have been so gravely interrupted by the existence of this unnatural war in America. But if our adversaries, or those whom they have placed in authority, deaf to the voice of reason and justice, steeled against the dictates of both prudence and humanity, by a presumptuous and delusive confidence in their own numbers or those of their black and foreign mercenaries, shall determine upon an indefinite prolongation of the contest, upon them be the responsibility of a decision so ruinous to themselves and so injurious to the interests and repose of mankind. For ourselves, we have no fear of the result. The wildest picture ever drawn of a disordered imagination comes short of the extravagance which could dream of the conquest of eight millions of people resolved with one mind “to die freemen rather than live slaves,” and forewarned by the savage and exterminating spirit in which this war has been waged upon them, and by the mad avowals of its patrons and supporters of the worse than Egyptian bondage that awaits them in the event of their subjugation.

With these declarations of our dispositions, our principles, and our purposes, we commit our cause to the enlightened judgment of the world, to the sober reflections of our adversaries themselves, and to the solemn and righteous arbitrament of Heaven.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., June 15, 1864.

I. The active campaigns now in progress must cause increased straggling and desertion, as well as the necessity for new material for the armies. The superintendent urgently calls on commandants for increased activity and vigilance in every branch of the service. They will issue special instructions to their enrolling officers to be active and energetic in obtaining every man fitted for the field, and in sending back all who are improperly absent. The superintendent learns there is some relaxation in the service. From every State reports are received of men not called into the Army, and vast numbers are unduly absent from their posts. There has been no moment during the war when such a state of things was more to be deprecated. It must be corrected. Enrolling officers must be rigid, active, and vigilant, or be held to strict accountability for negligence.

II. The delays which have occurred in forwarding applications for exemptions and details have been productive of serious inconvenience to the parties interested and of injury to the Army and country. Every consideration of duty and patriotism demands that the officers of the Government should exhibit a devotion and energy commensurate with the urgent necessities of the Army and the country. Indolence in such an emergency is highly criminal. Every application should receive immediate attention. The ranks of the Army must be filled up. The places of the gallant men who have been stricken down in the noble discharge of duty must be supplied as promptly as practicable. This cannot be done unless the officers of conscription shall give themselves with entire devotion to the discharge of the duties required of them. Appeals taken by parties must be forwarded forthwith, and no excuse will be received for withholding such papers. In cases where there is any show of merit, and the parties are in pursuit of the occupation for which exemption or detail is asked, they should not be disturbed till final action is taken. The reports of the enrolling officers are frequently too meager and unsatisfactory to enable the Bureau to decide the cases submitted. It is hoped that this defect, to which the Bureau has had frequent occasion to call attention, will in the future be corrected. In all agricultural cases it is desired that the reports should state the probable amount of the surplus produced by the applicant, and in all cases where assigning the party to the Army will cast his family upon the community for support the report should state what provision has been made by the State or county authorities for their maintenance and protection.

Enrolling officers should be carefully instructed upon these points.

By order of Brigadier-General Preston, superintendent:

C. B. DUFFIELD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

(To Commandants of Conscripts.)

JUNE 16, 1864.

Report of inspection of Camp Holmes, a camp of instruction near Raleigh, commanded by Major Hahr, with the following staff: One first lieutenant, adjutant; one first lieutenant, receiving officer; one assistant quartermaster; one assistant commissary of subsistence; one surgeon and one assistant surgeon; one chaplain; one first lieutenant, commanding guard; four second lieutenants, drill-masters.

As the conscripts come in their names are recorded with a statement of their age, county, the officer by whom enrolled, and other facts entering into a descriptive list. When they leave the camp the assignment made of them is recorded in the same book, which thus presents a complete history of the connection of each conscript passing through this camp with the conscription authorities. Nine thousand and fifty-seven are shown to have been enrolled at Camp Holmes during the year ending June 13, but this figure does not indicate the whole number enrolled in the State in that period, as many are detailed for various duties without passing through the camp of instruction. The names thus recorded are classified in three other books as follows: 1. The principals of substitutes—430 so far. 2. Persons exempt prior to act of February 17 otherwise than by substitution. 3. Those not previously exempt. All conscripts fit for the field are examined by the Medical Board and classified according to their special fitness for artillery, cavalry, or infantry service. Besides the above the following books are kept:

1. A record of the absentees, deserters, &c., arrested and sent to their commands. Three hundred odd of these arrests were made in May; over 6,000 have been returned through this camp.

2. Morning report book showing all present in camp.

3. Order book. These books preserve a record of all the facts which would seem to be essential.

There are 136 enlisted men in camp. Of these, sixty-four disabled conscripts and soldiers constitute the camp guard. The remainder are conscripts whose permanent assignment is delayed for obvious causes. Colonel Mallett, commandant of conscripts, thinks the guard which has been limited by the Bureau to the above number too small to prevent the escape of conscripts, and entirely insufficient to furnish traveling guards for the conscripts, deserters, and others sent to the various armies. Sixty men are needed for this duty alone, he says. The average time this year which conscripts have remained at Camp Holmes is less than a week. They are not drilled during that time, it is stated, because better employment has been found for the drill-masters. This I should think a mistake. Even a week's drilling would do something to set the conscript up as a soldier, and would at least keep him in good health and spirits. With the present organization I see no reason why the few conscripts in camp should not be industriously drilled three times a day.

Staff departments.—The assistant quartermaster, besides discharging the appropriate duties of the camp, pays all the enrolling officers of the State and provides them with stationery. Every conscript is clothed by him before he leaves the camp. Employés: One clerk, one forage-master, one overseer of wood-choppers—all disabled soldiers or conscripts.

The medical officers are the physicians of the camp, and constitute a board for the duties before mentioned. The senior officer has the supervision of all the district medical boards, and is charged with the duty of keeping them filled with proper officers. Every conscript is vaccinated here. A neat hospital with eighteen beds is attached. Employés: One hospital steward, regularly appointed; one clerk, a disabled conscript.

The assistant commissary of subsistence draws his supplies from the district commissary at Raleigh. Ration: One and one-eighth pounds flour, one-third pound bacon or one pound salt fish, the latter two days out of three, one-tenth pound rice, and salt as usual. During the past month two quarts of molasses to the hundred rations have been issued. Employés: Two clerks and one teamster, each a disabled soldier or conscript. A fine garden of twenty acres filled with vegetables will materially improve the fare and contribute to the health of the conscripts this summer. It is cultivated by six conscripts unfit for field service. The men are quartered in log huts. There is abundance of room, but the police of the quarters might be improved. The guard-house is dirty and too confined. It appears that of some 250 conscripts who had been doing duty for two years in Mallett's battalion as a camp guard and supporting force, 100 men without any experience on the water selected the naval service when their temporary organization was disbanded a few weeks since. Thus 100 trained soldiers are lost to the Army when every man is needed. I mention the incident, as it may be thought proper to take measures for their transfer to the Army, or for the alteration of the law at the next session of Congress. With the instructions on this subject under which commandants are now acting (issued by General Rains) it is matter of surprise that a single conscript goes to the Army.

Respectfully submitted.

ARCHER ANDERSON,

Lieutenant-Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,

Richmond, Va., June 16, 1864.

Lieut. Bennett H. Young is hereby authorized to organize for special service a company, not to exceed twenty in number, from those who, belonging to the service, are at this time beyond the Confederate States. They will be entitled to their pay, rations, clothing, and transportation, but no other compensation for any service which they may be called upon to render. The organization will be under the control of this Department, and liable to be disbanded at its pleasure and the members returned to their respective companies.

JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War.

GENERAL ORDERS, {
No. 53. }

ADJUT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Richmond, June 17, 1864.

I. The following acts of Congress are published for the information of the Army:

(1.)

AN ACT to authorize the appointment of commissaries for regiments of cavalry.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That from and after the passage of this act, there shall be allowed to each regiment of cavalry in the Army of the Confederate States, one commissary, with the same rank, pay and allowances as are now allowed by law to the quartermaster of such regiment.

Approved May 23, 1864.

(2.)

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act creating the office of ensign in the Army of the Confederate States."

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the above-cited act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to allow the appointment of an ensign to each battalion of infantry.

SEC. 2. That the said act, and this amendment thereto, shall be understood and construed to apply only to the Provisional Army of the Confederate States.

Approved May 31, 1864.

(3.)

AN ACT to furnish transportation to officers of the Army and Navy while traveling under orders.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That officers of the Army and Navy while traveling under orders of the War or Navy Department shall be allowed transportation in kind for themselves and their personal baggage, and ten dollars per day for expenses while necessarily traveling in the execution of their orders.

Approved June 4, 1864.

(4.)

AN ACT to provide for the appointment of additional military store-keepers in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President be authorized to appoint ten military store-keepers of ordnance in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States, in addition to those authorized by act of May first, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of military store-keepers in the Provisional Army of the Confederate States," five with the pay and allowances of a captain of infantry, and five with the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of infantry.

SEC. 2. That military store-keepers of the first class, so appointed, shall be required to give the usual bonds in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, and those in the second class, in the sum of ten thousand dollars. This act shall be in force from and after its passage: Provided, That no one shall be appointed under its provisions except persons who were performing the duties of acting military store-keepers prior to January first, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, or have become incapacitated by wounds or sickness for active service.

Approved June 4, 1864.

(5.)

AN ACT to increase the compensation of the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of the Confederate States.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That from and after the passage of this act, the pay of the non-commissioned officers, privates and musicians of the Army of the Confederate States be, and the same is hereby, increased seven dollars per month for the period of one year from the passage of this act.

Approved June 9, 1864.

(6.)

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Niter and Mining Bureau," approved April twenty-second, eighteen hundred and sixty-three.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the act approved April twenty-second, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, constituting the Niter and Mining Bureau an independent bureau of the War Department, be amended as follows: That the Niter and Mining Bureau shall consist of one colonel as chief of Bureau, two lieutenant-colonels, six majors, twelve captains, who shall have the same pay and allowances prescribed for officers of cavalry of the same grade.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That chemists and professional assistants, absolutely essential for the operations of the Bureau, not to exceed six of each class, shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, with pay in no case to be above that of lieutenant-colonel of the commissioned corps.

SEC. 3. That this act shall continue in force only during the present war.

Approved June 9, 1864.

(7.)

AN ACT for the payment of commissioners appointed under the act entitled "An act to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in certain cases," and to confer certain powers upon said commissioners.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the commissioners appointed under the said act shall be entitled to receive the compensation of two hundred and fifty dollars each per month, from the date of their respective appointments, until the expiration of their service; and that their assistants shall be allowed one hundred and fifty dollars per month, from the date of their appointments, respectively, until the expiration of their service.

SEC. 2. That the said commissioners shall have the powers conferred upon commissioners appointed by the district courts by the act of the Provisional Congress, approved thirtieth of August, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, and numbered two hundred and seventy-three, in the acts of the said Congress.

Approved June 9, 1864.

(8.)

AN ACT to provide for the compensation of non-commissioned officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines on detailed service.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That all persons detailed from the Army or after enrollment for military service, or from the Navy or Marine Corps, for special duty or extra duty, shall be allowed to receive their regular pay, rations and allowances, as if they were performing service in the field.

SEC. 2. That all such detached or detailed men shall be allowed, in addition, not exceeding two dollars per day, and compensation for all extra work, or for any uncommon skill or industry displayed in the performance of duties to which they may be assigned, in proportion to the value of such extra labor or uncommon skill or industry, whether it be in performing an unusual amount of work within the usual hours of labor, or work performed beyond the usual hours, or extraordinary skill and superior workmanship displayed in the execution of such duties, the value of said extra labor or uncommon skill or industry, to be determined by the officer or superintendent under whose immediate direction said detached or detailed service may be performed, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War or Navy. The additional compensation provided in this section shall be the same for both the War and Navy Departments, under certain rules to be prescribed by the President.

SEC. 3. That all non-commissioned officers, musicians, privates, sailors or marines, detailed to Government contractors, shall be so detailed without pay and allowances, but shall be compensated for their services by wages received from said contractors, under rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of War or of the Navy.

Approved June 9, 1864.

(9.)

AN ACT to organize a corps of scouts and guards to facilitate communication with the Trans-Mississippi Department.

The Congress of the Confederate States do enact, That the President of the Confederate States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one major and four captains to do service as scouts in the Valley of the Mississippi River, or to assign any proper officers for that purpose.

SEC. 2. That the officers thus commissioned shall have authority to raise four companies, to be officered by the President, to be composed of such members and such persons as he may approve, for scout and guard duty for Government transportation across the Mississippi River, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the War Department.

SEC. 3. That the President may detail such officers and men from the Army as he may deem peculiarly qualified for such service.

SEC. 4. That such scouts and guards shall be composed either of infantry or cavalry, or in part of both, at the discretion of the President, and equipped in such manner as will make them most effective, and shall be entitled to the same pay and allowances and be subject to the same regulations as other soldiers.

Approved June 10, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to organize military courts to attend the army of the Confederate States in the field, and to define the powers of said courts."

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the above-entitled act be so amended that in all instances in which the particular division, corps, district or other subordinate organization, to which a military court is or may be hereafter appointed or assigned, the commander of the army or department may by order, when in his discretion it shall be proper and safe to do so, direct and empower the commander of the subordinate division, corps, district, &c., to pass upon and refer for trial all charges and specifications to come before said court, review and confirm or disapprove the records thereof, transmit the same direct to the War Department, remit or suspend sentences (where lawful) and take all action and exercise all jurisdiction in that behalf which pertains under existing laws to the commander of the army or department.

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act, when any person shall have been tried by any military court or court-martial, and acquitted of the charge or charges preferred, the finding of the court shall be announced immediately, and the person so tried and acquitted, if a soldier, shall be released from arrest and returned to duty; and if other than a soldier, discharged from custody without awaiting the examination or report of the reviewing officer of such court.

Approved June 14, 1864.

(11.)

AN ACT to authorize the formation of new commands, to be composed of supernumerary officers, who may resign to join such commands, and to limit and restrict the appointment of officers in certain cases.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President is hereby authorized to grant authority for the organization of companies, battalions or regiments, to be composed of supernumerary officers of the Provisional Army.

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful for any supernumerary officer to join said organization, or any other company in the Confederate service, which does not exceed the maximum prescribed by law, upon tender to the proper authorities of his resignation for that purpose.

SEC. 3. That the offices left vacant by such resignations shall not be filled, and that hereafter the lowest grade of commissioned officer shall not be filled unless there are upon the rolls of the company for service at least forty-six non-commissioned officers and privates; nor shall the position of senior second lieutenant be filled, in case of a vacancy therein, unless there are upon the rolls of the company for service at least thirty non-commissioned officers and privates; nor shall the position of first lieutenant be filled, unless in case of a vacancy there are at least twenty non-commissioned officers and privates on the rolls of the company for service, which fact shall in each case be certified to by the captain of the company and approved by the colonel of the regiment, before such promotion can be made.

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT to amend so much of an act entitled "An act to organize forces to serve during the war," approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, as relates to the exemption of certain religious denominations.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to grant exemptions to the members of the various denominations of Christians mentioned in the exemption act of the eleventh of October, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, who, at that time, belonged to the same, and who were in regular association therewith, upon the terms and conditions specified in that act, or upon such other terms and conditions as he is authorized to allow exemptions or grant details under any of the clauses of the act approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, to which this is an amendment.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to revoke any such exemptions under the act aforesaid, when the same have been obtained by any fraud, misrepresentation or error.

Approved June 7, 1864.

(14.)

AN ACT to authorize the appointment of quartermasters and assistant quartermasters and commissaries and assistant commissaries in the Provisional Army in certain cases.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint, for the Provisional Army, additional quartermasters and commissaries, with the rank of colonel, lieutenant-colonel and major: Provided, That such additional quartermasters and commissaries, with the rank of colonel, shall not exceed the number of military departments and separate armies existing at the time of their appointment; and that the additional quartermasters and commissaries, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, shall not exceed the number of army corps existing at the time of their appointment; and that the additional quartermasters and commissaries, with the rank of major, shall not exceed the number of divisions of the army existing at the time of the appointment, and for the collection, control and distribution of railroad and field transportation and army supplies, the President may appoint such additional quartermasters and assistant quartermasters and commissaries as may be necessary for the efficient execution of the duties of the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments; and such purchasing agents or transportation agents may be employed as the service may require, who shall not have military rank, and whose compensation shall not exceed the pay of a captain of infantry, and who may be required to give bond for the faithful performance of those duties; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the assignment of quartermasters and commissaries, or assistant quartermasters or commissaries to any of the foregoing duties, or to the duty of paying troops: Provided, That all said appointments shall be made from persons who are over forty-five years of age, or who are incapacitated physically for service in the field, or who have been in the service over twelve months, or have been heretofore discharging any of the aforesaid duties: Provided, further, That additional assistant quartermasters and commissaries shall not be appointed, if there are officers already in service who can be assigned to such duties without detriment to the service.

SEC. 2. That it shall be no longer incumbent on the President to appoint or to keep in service an assistant quartermaster, with the rank of captain for each regiment or battalion in the field, but he may assign the quartermaster of any army corps, division, brigade, regiment or battalion, or the commissary of any army, army corps, division or brigade, to duty as quartermaster or commissary elsewhere, and to assign quartermasters, assistant quartermasters, and commissaries and assistant commissaries appointed to posts or depots, or for other duties, to serve with armies, army corps, divisions or brigades in the field, whenever, in his opinion, the public interest will be promoted thereby.

SEC. 3. That in case the services of any regimental quartermaster, or any other quartermaster or assistant quartermaster, or commissary or assistant commissary, appointed under this act, can, in the opinion of the President, be dispensed with, and such officer cannot be otherwise appropriately employed to the public interest, his name shall be dropped from the rolls, and he shall cease to be an officer of the Provisional Army.

SEC. 4. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint one quartermaster, with the rank of major, for each State, and one assistant quartermaster, with the rank of captain, for each Congressional district in the several States, to execute the duties of the act in reference to the tax in kind: Provided, That the appointments to be made in pursuance of this section, shall be made with the same restrictions and limitations as are set forth in the first proviso to the first section of this act.

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to aid any State in communicating with and perfecting records concerning its troops," approved sixteenth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the above named act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to allow to the State officer therein named, the right to purchase forage for one horse in addition to the right granted thereby to purchase one ration, said purchases to be made upon the same terms and conditions, and under the same circumstances under which officers of the Provisional Army may be allowed to purchase rations or forage.

Approved May 31, 1864.

AN ACT to amend the several acts in regard to chaplains.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint, when in his judgment it may be proper to do so, chaplains to battalions and to general hospitals, who shall receive the same pay and allowances now authorized by law to chaplains appointed to regiments and posts.

Approved May 31, 1864.

AN ACT to provide for the appointment of officers with temporary rank and command.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President be, and he is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint temporary officers of the rank of brigadier-general, major-general, lieutenant-general or general for the Provisional Army, and assign them to any appropriate command.

SEC. 2. That the said officers, so appointed, shall only hold their said rank and their said command, for such time as the temporary exigency may require, at the expiration of which time they shall resume their previous permanent rank and command.

Approved May 31, 1864.

JOINT RESOLUTION to allow sick and wounded officers of the Army transportation to their homes and hospital accommodations.

Resolved by the Congress of the Confederate States of America, That sick and wounded officers on leave, upon certificates of a board of surgeons, be allowed transportation to their homes and back to their commands, as in the case of enlisted men on furlough; the indulgence hereby accorded to continue in force for ninety days after the next meeting of Congress.

Resolved, further, That all sick and wounded officers in the naval and military service shall be entitled to enter any hospital and receive such treatment and rations as now provided by law, free of charge.

Approved June 10, 1864.

(19.)

AN ACT to amend "An act to organize forces to serve during the war," approved February seventeenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the act entitled "An act to organize forces to serve during the war," approved seventeenth February, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to allow all white male residents between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty, who were prevented from enrolling themselves within the time prescribed by the said act, by the occupation of their localities or country by the public enemy, and whose homes are, and have been since the passage of said act, beyond the lines of the Confederate armies, to organize themselves in pursuance of the sixth section of said act, after their homes or localities are brought within the lines of the Confederate armies; and this privilege shall continue for the space of thirty days after the reoccupation is announced by an order issued by the general commanding the department, and published in the military department in which such reoccupation may occur.

Approved June 10, 1864.

AN ACT to graduate the pay of general officers.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the pay of a general shall be five hundred dollars per month; that of a lieutenant-general, four hundred and fifty dollars per month, and that of a major-general, three hundred and fifty [dollars] per month; that a general commanding an army in the field shall receive in addition to the said sum of five hundred dollars per month, one hundred dollars; and a lieutenant-general, a major-general and a brigadier-general shall, whilst serving in the field, each receive fifty dollars per month, in addition to the sum herein allowed, whilst so serving; and all laws allowing additional compensation for commanding a separate army in the field be, and they are hereby, repealed, except as herein provided; and that this act will be in force for one year and no longer.

Approved June 10, 1864.

AN ACT to authorize the appointment of additional officers of artillery for ordnance duties.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint fifty officers of artillery in the Provisional Army for the performance of ordnance duties, in addition to those authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of officers of artillery in the Provisional Army," approved April twenty-first, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and "An act to authorize the appointment of additional officers of artillery for ordnance duties," approved September sixteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and that the rank of said officers shall be as provided in said last-named act.

Approved June 10, 1864.

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to organize military courts to attend the Army of the Confederate States in the field, and to define the powers of said courts," approved October ninth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That so much of the said act as empowers the said military courts to appoint their clerks and marshals, and provides for the payment of the salaries of the said officers, is hereby repealed; and hereafter it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to detail and assign persons to fill said offices from military officers and non-commissioned officers and privates unable to perform duty in the field, and the compensation of such persons shall only be the pay to which they may be respectively entitled by virtue of their military commissions.

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT to provide and organize a general staff for armies in the field to serve during the war.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That hereafter the general staff of the Army shall constitute a corps, and staff officers shall no longer, except by assignment, be attached to any particular military organization, or be held to duty at any post; that promotions in said corps shall be by selection, based upon capacity, merit and service, and no one shall be appointed in said corps, unless he has been two years, at least, in the military service during the war, or is over forty-five years of age, or is unfit for military service in the field.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to assign all officers of the staff to such appropriate duties as he may think proper, except that he shall not assign them to commands in the line, unless in cases of emergency, and then only for a short time; and no officer shall be allowed to hold, at the same time, a commission or appointment in the staff and in the line.

SEC. 3. That the President is hereby authorized, upon the application of any general commanding an army in the field, to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or assign for duty with such general whilst so commanding, a general officer, who shall be charged, under the direction of the general, with the administration of his army; there shall also be allowed to a general, so commanding, two assistant adjutants-general, one chief quartermaster, one chief of ordnance, and one chief commissary, each with the rank, pay and allowances of a colonel of cavalry; a surgeon as medical director, with the pay and allowances of a colonel of cavalry; one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a colonel of cavalry; and one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry.

SEC. 4. That to a lieutenant-general commanding a corps d'armée shall be allowed, to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, two assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay and allowances each of a colonel of cavalry; a chief of ordnance, a chief quartermaster, and a chief commissary, each with the rank, pay and allowances of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry; he shall also be allowed one surgeon, as medical director, to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the pay and allowances of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry; and to be appointed as above, one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry, and one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a major of cavalry.

SEC. 5. That to a major-general commanding a division shall be allowed, to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, two assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay and allowances each of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry; one chief of ordnance, one chief quartermaster, and a chief commissary, each with the rank, pay and allowances of a major of cavalry; also a surgeon, with the pay and allowances of a major of cavalry; one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a major of cavalry; and one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a captain of cavalry.

SEC. 6. That to a brigadier-general commanding a brigade shall be allowed, to be appointed as hereinbefore directed, two assistant adjutants-general and one assistant inspector-general, with the rank, pay and allowances each of a major of cavalry; one surgeon, with the pay and allowances of a major of cavalry; one ordnance officer, with the rank, pay and allowances of a captain of cavalry; one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a captain of cavalry; and one aide-de-camp, with the rank, pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry.

SEC. 7. That the President is hereby authorized to reduce the number of officers allowed by this act to the staff of any general officer, or to increase the same when, in his opinion, the service will be benefited thereby.

SEC. 8. That all appointments under this act shall be made from those already in service.

Approved June 14, 1864.

(24.)

AN ACT to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to organize military courts to attend the Army of the Confederate States in the field, and to define the powers of said courts,'" approved February thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-four.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the proviso to said act, and also so much thereof as requires that the judge of the military court in North Alabama shall give ten days' notice of the times and places of holding said courts before the same are held, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Approved June 14, 1864.

AN ACT to amend the laws relating to the commutation value of hospital rations.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the commutation value of rations of the sick and wounded officers and soldiers in hospitals or other places, used in camp or the field as hospitals, be fixed at the Government cost of said rations, and one hundred per centum thereon: Provided, That said one hundred per centum on the Government cost of each ration commuted shall constitute a hospital fund, and be drawn and appropriated as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary, to purchase supplies for the use of the sick and disabled of the Army in hospitals.

Approved June 14, 1864.

(26.)

AN ACT to promote the efficiency of the cavalry of the Provisional Army, and to punish lawlessness and irregularities of any portions thereof.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the commanding general of any army in the field shall have the power to direct the dismounting of any non-commissioned officer or officers, soldier or soldiers, in the cavalry service in his command, and to place him or them in the infantry, who shall misbehave before the enemy, or shall be guilty of illegally wasting, spoliating or appropriating to his own use any private property, or of doing any violence to any citizen.

SEC. 2. That the horses belonging to persons so dismounted, and which they may have had in the service, may be taken for the use of the Army, and the appraised value thereof shall be paid to the owner.

Approved June 7, 1864.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Tallahassee, June 17, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I desire respectfully to invite your attention to the copy of a letter* addressed by me to Major Cunningham, and one addressed by General William Bailey to myself. General Bailey is perhaps not only the wealthiest man in this State, but one of the most wealthy and patriotic and generous gentlemen in the Confederate States. In desiring his factory to be permitted to be under his exclusive control, I desire to accomplish important objects—to procure clothing for the families of soldiers and indigent persons; to afford the means of employment and support to many industrious but poor women in making up clothing for the troops, who will otherwise be unemployed and dependent on charity for a support, and to save the Confederate and State governments from paying unnecessarily high prices for the making of clothes for the troops. Clothing and shoes I can have furnished at least 50 per cent. cheaper than the C. S. agents are now procuring them. If these reasons are not sufficient I will rescind the contract with General Bailey, that there shall be no impediment to the agent of the Confederate States Government controlling this factory.

I have the honor to be, respectfully,

JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida.

[First indorsement.]

JULY 17, 1864.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL:

Cannot this factory be left to the execution of the contracts of the State, as well as to work for the Confederate Government, without serious prejudice to your arrangements? The spirit of the Governor's letter commends his wishes to favorable consideration.

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

[Second indorsement.]

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, July 25, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

The understanding of this department, received recently through Mr. Herring, is that this factory will be left by Major Cunningham to work as heretofore on account of the Commissary Bureau and the State of Florida.

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

[Inclosure.]

TALLAHASSEE, June 15, 1864.

His Excellency JOHN MILTON,
Tallahassee, Fla.:

MY DEAR SIR: You were kind enough to write Major Cunningham a few days ago on the subject of my little factory, and I also request that you write to the Secretary of War on the same subject, for I do not think the Government ought to interfere with the factory. If the factories throughout the Confederacy had done what mine has there would have been no need of complaint; and as Your Excellency is not aware of all its benefits to the State and the Confederacy, I will here give you a little history of the factory from the time it was built by a company of men some ten or twelve years ago. After it had got to work it was managed rather badly, and there was little or no encouragement by the people of the country. In the course of five or six years' working it was known to be in debt about $20,000. The stockholders met and were about to close the concern. I disliked to see it stop, and made an offer to give a certain amount and pay the debts, which was readily acceded to by the balance of the company. I then carried it on myself by an agent, but at a loss, for two years before the war commenced, there being no sale for yarns or osnaburgs of consequence, as the merchants could buy yarns and osnaburgs cheaper in New York than I could make them for, and while buying other goods would lay in a supply of those goods, buy cotton, send it on and pay there. After the war commenced there has been a demand for more than the factory could do, but I was not disposed to take advantage, and have kept my prices down to a very low figure, barely enough, as the saying is, to make two ends meet. I have used the factory almost entirely for soldiers' families and for the poorer class of persons in the State, having sent by the bale to the most interior counties to be distributed by the county commissioners to the most needy of each county. There being no cotton cards in the country, it has been of great service to keep them in clothing, and have at all times supplied the Government officers with osnaburgs and thread at less than half what they would have had to pay elsewhere, and have also supplied Your Excellency with all the woolen goods the factory has made at very low rates for our soldiers in the field. The difference I think between prices I have sold at and the prices I might [have] sold for since the commencement of the war, I think, would amount to over $300,000; and besides this, I have always contributed liberally in money and other means, for from the act of secession I have felt it my duty to do all in my power to aid every branch of the Government, which I hope my course will show. I dislike to trouble any one so much, but hope you will pardon in this instance.

Very respectfully, Your Excellency's obedient servant,
 WM. BAILEY.

RICHMOND, VA., June 18, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: Your application for leave of absence is granted, and I sincerely hope the cause which induces you to ask it will be temporary.
 Very truly, your friend,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
 No. 54. } Richmond, June 18, 1864.

I. The act of Congress providing for the establishment and payment of claims for a certain description of property, taken or informally impressed for the use of the Army, approved June 14, 1864, with accompanying instructions, are published for the information and instruction of all concerned.

AN ACT providing for the establishment and payment of claims for a certain description of property taken or informally impressed for the use of the Army.

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to appoint and assign, in each Congressional district and for each Territory, an agent, not liable to military duty in the field, who shall, at stated times, in each county or parish, under the direction of the post quartermaster nearest to him, receive and take proof, under oath, in relation to all claims in said district for forage, provisions, cattle, sheep, hogs, horses, mules, teams and wagons heretofore furnished to the Army by the owner, or heretofore taken or informally impressed for the use of the Army and not yet paid for, by any officer in the military service, or by his order or direction, express or implied, from the use of the property, whether said officer be a line or staff officer, and whether he be a bonded officer or otherwise, and report the facts and transmit the evidence in each case to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, together with his opinion as to the justice and validity of the claim; and the said accounting officers are hereby authorized to audit and control and order payment of such claims as appear to them to be equitable and just: Provided, That all such claims originating west of the Mississippi River shall be reported to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department established for the Trans-Mississippi Department, who are hereby authorized to audit, control and direct payment of the same in the same manner as the accounting officers of the Treasury east of the Mississippi River. And the said agent is hereby authorized, in taking testimony in regard to said claims, to administer oaths to witnesses, and, if he think proper, to the claimants themselves. The compensation allowed to said agent shall be ten dollars per day while actually engaged in the performance of the duties imposed on him by this act, and thirty cents per mile for every mile actually traveled by him, to be paid under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War may assign to the duty herein mentioned any quartermaster or disabled officer of the Army; and, in that event, said officer or quartermaster shall, in addition to the compensation now allowed him by law, be entitled to mileage at the rate of forty cents per mile: Provided, further, That the Secretary of War may appoint and assign any non-commissioned officer or private to perform the duties under this act who may be unfit for active service in the field because of wounds received or disease contracted in said service, and the pay and allowances of such non-commissioned officer or private, when so appointed and assigned, shall be the same as are allowed to persons so appointed who may not be liable to military service.

SEC. 2. This act shall cease and determine on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, east of the Mississippi River, and on the first day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, west of the Mississippi River; and all claims of the description aforesaid, not presented to the agent aforesaid prior to said dates at the respective places mentioned, shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act.

Approved June 14, 1864.

II. In every Congressional district there will be appointed an agent to perform the duties described in the preceding act of Congress, whose names will be announced in orders, and who, immediately after notice thereof, will proceed to the fulfillment of the duties imposed in the same. He will hold one or more sessions in each county in his district, and give notice of the time and place of holding the same, and of the order of proceeding at, and the probable duration of the session. The operation of the act is limited to a specific time, and each agent is required to take measures for the full performance of its requirements, and for securing to every claimant an opportunity of presenting and proving his just claim.

III. Every claim under this act shall be presented in writing to the agent for the district in which the claimant resides, supported by his oath as to the justice of the same, and by the affidavit of one or more witnesses; and the claimant shall also state by whom his property was impressed or taken, and at what time, and for what purpose, and at what price, and shall produce any written evidence in his possession relative to the same; provided, if the claimant be dead, or be prevented by any cause from appearing before the agent, proof shall be submitted as to the fact, and the occasion therefor; and other proof of the claim may be taken. The exact value of the property must be proved, and no speculative or contingent damages or values are to be assessed.

IV. The agent shall, whenever it may be deemed expedient, examine the claimant and the witnesses orally upon the subject of the claim, and record their testimony.

V. The agents appointed under this act will take the testimony of the various officers of the Army who may have been concerned in the impressment or appropriation of any of the property in reference to which claims shall be made, and will ascertain by what authority the same was taken, for what purpose, and at what time; and moreover will make special inquiry as to the use which was made of the same, and inquire of all facts pertinent to the subject.

VI. Great care should be taken in the investigations to be made under this act to ascertain the justice and accuracy of any claim that may be preferred, and to prevent fraudulent or exaggerated claims from being allowed; and for that purpose all the circumstances connected with the impressment or appropriation or employment of property should be examined. The name, rank, and authority of the officer should be reported, and whatever else that may throw light upon the transaction.

VII. All the powers conferred by this act, and all the duties prescribed by the same, are devolved upon the agents appointed under it; and within the time limited in the act they will make their report to the Second Auditor of the Treasury.

 No. 55. } Richmond, June 20, 1864.

I. Under the act of Congress entitled an act to organize military courts, &c., approved June 14, 1864 (General Orders, No. 53—No. 22), military courts will, as soon as practicable, select and report to this office, for assignment as clerks and marshals of those courts, commissioned and non-commissioned officers and privates unable to perform duty in the field. With the report will be forwarded the evidence of the disability of the persons recommended.

II. Company, regimental, brigade, and division commanders will report to the general commanding the army or department any commissioned, non-commissioned officer or private in the cavalry service who misbehaves before the enemy, or who wastes or appropriates to his own use private property or who does violence to any citizen.

The general commanding will take action (under General Orders, No. 53—No. 26) upon the report, and forward his order in each case, with a statement of the facts, for the information of the Department.

CIRCULAR } CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
 No. 22. } WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., June 21, 1864.

I. The status and functions of the "temporary boards" seem to be generally misapprehended by the officers of conscription and the public. The persons composing these boards are selected after their enrollment from the most reliable and intelligent citizens of each county between the ages of forty-five and fifty years. Their status is that of private soldiers who are detailed for the performance of the duties devolved upon them. These duties are simply to obtain the information for the enrolling officer that may be needed in the discharge of his duties, and, when required, to give him their written opinion. Their reports are made to him. They are not invested with any independent powers, but are merely charged with aiding the local enrolling officer in the mode prescribed in Circular No. 8, Bureau of Conscription, current series. The local and Congressional district enrolling officers are expressly required to supervise the action of these "boards," and will be vigilant to see that they faithfully perform their duties and to prevent their exercising any independent power or authority. The enrolling officer is charged by the circular aforesaid with the careful and thorough investigation of every case, and required to report the facts developed in the investigation. The organization of the "temporary boards" was not designed to relieve him of any part of this duty, but simply to aid him in its proper discharge. The Bureau will hold him strictly responsible for the action taken in every case.

II. The certificate to be furnished by the head of the department where details for contractors are applied for will be procured when the case is forwarded to this Bureau for final action, and need not be required by the enrolling officers as precedent to their action.

By command of Brig. Gen. J. S. Preston, superintendent:

C. B. DUFFIELD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

SALISBURY, N. C., *June 22, 1864.*General BRAXTON BRAGG,
Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: I have the honor to report that I reached Raleigh on the 16th instant, and at once entered upon the duty assigned me—the inspection of the conscription service in this State. My attention in that city was particularly directed to the organization of the office of the commandant of conscripts, the amount and dispatch of business passing through it, the organization of the reserve forces recently called out, and the camp of instruction near the town. Col. Peter Mallett is the commandant for the State. He is immediately assisted, as appears by the accompanying list, by four officers and nine clerks. Two of the latter are able-bodied conscripts. Lieutenant Parish has charge of the department of applications for detail and the orders consequent thereon. The act of Congress of February 17, by making the Government the custodian and director, to a large extent, of the agricultural and industrial interests of the country, has given immense expansion to this class of business. The applications for detail are almost as numerous as the persons enrolled. For many of these the office at Raleigh is only the channel of communication with the Bureau at Richmond, but it must always be ready to account for any petition. Hence an elaborate system of registration is rendered necessary. There are over 100 applications for detail or renewal of detail daily. They consist generally of a recital of the claim and circumstances of the party, a report upon the case by a board of citizens, and the indorsements of the county and district enrolling officers. It is the duty of Lieutenant Parish to examine each petition carefully and to make such indorsements for Colonel Mallett's signature as may be prescribed in cases covered by general rules. In cases of doubt the indorsement is dictated by the commandant. The papers are then to be recorded. Three clerks find constant employment in this work. One book contains the applications for agricultural details, another those based upon the ground of public necessity, and a third those of contractors, Government officers, &c. Three hundred and nine applications of the first class were made in the week ending June 18; 431 of the second class have been made since April 25; thirty of the third class since June 5. I do not think one officer can make these investigations with the patient care which is essential, and yet with the dispatch so necessary to a proper conduct of the office, and I am therefore inclined to agree with Colonel Mallett in the opinion that another should be assigned to have exclusive charge of agricultural details.

Besides investigating such applications going forward, Lieutenant Parish issues all orders, making the details when approved, and supervises the reports of detailed men required by law of railroad companies, and all other business specially relating to this class of persons. This officer seems well fitted for his work. Lieutenant Hardin distributes the mail matter as it arrives to the proper officers, issues all general instructions to enrolling officers and miscellaneous special orders, and performs the duties of adjutant of the post of Raleigh, of which Colonel Mallett is commandant. He seems to be kept busy all the time. Lieutenant Jones writes letters for the commandant, has his desk in the reception office, and disposes of all the verbal applications not requiring the attention of Colonel Mallett. He is also charged with the preparation of the regular returns and reports. There seemed to be sufficient work of this sort to keep him constantly employed. Captain Cowper has charge of everything relating to the apprehension and return of deserters and other absentees without leave. Each application for the return of an absentee is recorded and then referred to the proper officer. When the paper comes back the final disposition of the man is noted in the record book. Some 7,000 such applications have been returned to commanding officers with the information required. I shall have occasion to call attention to the practical working of this system in my reports upon the district and county offices. A clerk has charge of all business relating to the detail or exemption of free negroes. Colonel Mallett's time is occupied with the supervision of these officers, the decision of the more difficult cases, the reception of numerous applicants in person, and the general direction of the conscription service in the State. I passed three days in his office in studying its organization and familiarizing myself with the kind and amount of business transacted. The various duties are judiciously distributed, the necessary records are kept, and the work appears to be faithfully and well done, though without much claim to clerical elegance. I have never seen bureau officers or clerks more steadily engaged, and yet in one department at least the business appeared to be largely behindhand. The improvements to be effected in this part of the service would appear to be these:

First. Such an increase of the staff in the commandant's office as will make it possible each day to dispose of all business accumulating the day before.

Second. The enforcement of a more rigid accountability upon district and county officers for the prompt return of all papers referred to them for investigation and opinion.

These beneficial changes, however, would be but little felt without corresponding dispatch in the Bureau of Conscription. My reports upon the district and county offices will show that a great length of time usually elapses between the forwarding of a petition for detail in the country and the reception of the final decision from Richmond. Part of this delay, but not all, is due to our imperfect means of communication. The generality of papers, I am inclined to think, in this branch of the service can be acted upon immediately by each successive officer, after passing through the county office, because they contain within themselves the data for a decision. This, then, is the point to be reached, and in my opinion the present system of conscription, with its vast and necessary complication of paper work, will never be in satisfactory operation till some tolerable approximation to it is gained.

The act of Congress creating the reserves was approved February 17, 1864. General Orders, No. 33, directing their enrollment, bears date March 15. Circular No. 8, of the Bureau, enforcing this order, is dated March 18. This circular was received in Raleigh on the 26th of March, and on the 28th Colonel Mallett issued orders thereupon to district officers. The notices issued by the latter, prescribing the days for enrollment in some of the districts, were as follows: Fifth (Raleigh) District: The notice is dated April 6 (a delay of more than a week), and fixes the first day of enrollment in one of the counties on April 18 and the last in another on June 30. Sixth (Greensborough) District: Notice dated April 6. First day of enrollment, May 2; last, June 20. Third (Goldsborough) District: Notice dated April 3. First day of enrollment, April 12; last, May 31. Tenth (Asheville) District: Notice dated May 12. First day of enrollment, June 5; last, July 26. On April 11 Colonel Mallett directed that the reserves should be at once assembled at the county seats, enrolled, and organized. Subsequently it was determined to organize the two classes separately, and on May 10 district officers were ordered to assemble the Junior Reserves at district headquarters for immediate organization. On May 23, before this order could be executed, the commandant directed that this class should be sent immediately to the following rendezvous for organization: Second and Third Districts to Goldsborough; Fourth District to Wilmington; Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth to Camp Holmes, Raleigh; Ninth District to Camp Vance, Morganton; Tenth District to Asheville. This was done, and the organization is now nearly complete. About 2,700 have been collected and formed into companies and battalions, and it is supposed the force will be increased to 3,000.

This brief sketch will perhaps illustrate some of the delays inseparable from the system of conscription and others which might have been avoided by greater diligence. The organization of the Senior Reserves is now going forward, and its progress will be indicated in my reports upon the district offices. A report of the inspection of Camp Holmes accompanies this communication.*

CIRCULAR } CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
 No. 23. } WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
 Richmond, Va., June 24, 1864.

All white men from the State of Maryland between the ages of seventeen and fifty years, who are now "residents of the Confederate States," are, by virtue of the act of Congress "to organize forces to serve during the war," in the military service of the Confederate States for the war.

Commandants of conscripts will proceed to the immediate enrollment and examination of these persons in conformity with the provisions of Circular No. 8, Bureau of Conscription, current series.

Those between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, determined by the Board of Examination to be capable of performing active service in the field, will be forwarded to Camp Lee, near Richmond, for assignment to the Maryland Line, but those between the said ages found unfit for field duty, but capable of performing some of the duties named in the eighth section of the aforesaid act of Congress, will be assigned to those duties by the commandants of conscripts of the State in which they respectively reside.

Those between the ages of seventeen and eighteen and forty-five and fifty years will be disposed of by assignment or detail by the commandants of conscripts of the States in which they respectively reside, under sections five and eight of the aforesaid act of Congress and under Circular No. 20, Bureau of Conscription, current series.

An active and vigorous execution of this order is required.

By order of Brigadier-General Preston, superintendent:

C. B. DUFFIELD,
 Assistant Adjutant-General.

SOUTHERN DIVISION, MISSISSIPPI CENTRAL RAILROAD,
Grenada, June 24, 1864.

Maj. Gen. S. D. LEE, C. S. Army,
Meridian:

DEAR SIR: I did not receive your letter* of the 16th of this month until after I had written and forwarded another asking permission to send cotton to Marshall and De Soto Counties to exchange for bacon to feed the hands at work on this road, otherwise I should not have made the second request. It is certain that unless the Government is willing to grant me some facilities in obtaining necessary supplies for the repairs and operating the road, it is worse than useless for me to continue my efforts to keep the road in operation, and it would be far better to let the Government take it and do as it may seem best. The entire road is in an unsafe condition. I have not the means adequate for the necessary repairs, nor can I procure without Government aid, nor have I the necessary supplies to feed my hands but a few weeks more. When these are exhausted I must discontinue my trains and discharge my hands. There is no other alternative. Fifteen miles of the road has been materially damaged between this and Canton, twelve miles seriously. I cannot hire hands to repair it. I would cheerfully do so if I could. To the company the working of the road is rather an injury than a benefit, as the expenses and taxes will absorb all of its income. It remains for the Government to determine if the road is or will be useful to them or not. The difficulties in procuring the army supplies contracted for by me have been greatly increased since I entered into the engagement. I have spent no small amount of money and no little time in my efforts to comply with my contract. I have been disappointed in every way, and in no small degree by the price I was to pay for cotton when others were receiving it at one-third the price that I was to pay, thus enabling them to offer greater profits to those who would deliver the articles required, besides being permitted to send out cotton as they pleased, and always keeping themselves in funds, which I have found it always impossible to do. I have delivered some teams, wagons, &c., and could have delivered many more. To-day Major Paxton refused to take 100 mules on terms that I think he should have accepted, and of course I declined the purchase. I shall continue my efforts, but with faint hopes of success.

I wrote you some days since by Mr. Wang, whom I sent to New Orleans.

With respect, I remain your friend,

W. GOODMAN,
President.

Maj. Gen. STEPHEN D. LEE,
Enterprise:

MY DEAR SIR: You will pardon the liberty I am about to take with you. I am a stranger to you, but I plead the interest which we both have in our great cause as my excuse for addressing you. The trade between this section and Baton Rouge has been to a considerable extent revived. The usual effects have begun to follow. Our currency has again greatly depreciated and our people become demoralized. There was no necessity, and there never was any, for this trade. The necessity urged in its behalf is that of food and clothing. It never existed. In the fall of 1862 the people in the county were making almost enough cloth to supply the demand. It was cloth of the best quality, such as any gentleman could wear. A large number of looms had been started and more were being put up. Everyone seemed willing to wear homespun, and nearly everyone did wear it. From the quantity of cloth in market I doubt not that in a short time the wants of the people would have been fully met. As soon as the trade was permitted with Baton Rouge the looms stopped and homespun went out of fashion. The cloth made in the county sold in our own currency at $5 per yard. People preferred going to Baton Rouge and giving $15. The disposition to traffic became a mania until a large portion of our people were entirely corrupted. Our currency fell as low as fifteen for one in Federal paper. On the arrival in this department of Col. J. S. Scott this trade was stopped. Our currency at once went up, and sold at five to one in Louisiana bills, which were then at a premium. Confidence was being re-established and the prices of everything came down. I have stated there was no necessity for the trade, so far as clothing was concerned, and I give you the above facts in proof of it, together with the certificate of J. M. Bell, postmaster at this place. There never was any necessity for the trade arising from a scarcity of provisions. The county could have supported itself. To my own knowledge there has been more meat in it than there ever had been during any two years of peace. The supply of corn and potatoes was most ample. To be sure, there was no flour, or coffee, or canvased hams, or sardines, all of which were bought out of Baton Rouge when the trade revived. In 1863, when the trade was fairly opened, the cry was a want of provisions. Since then we have had an addition to our army here of about 1,500 men, and I refer you to the statement of Captain Cammack, commissary, as to the manner in which the whole army is now supported. They live on the provisions raised in the county. The necessity for trading with the enemy has been in every instance fictitious and false. The consequences have been desertions, and if it is allowed to continue it will work the ruin of our people. It should be stopped at once, and I appeal to you, in the name of God and our country, to stop it at once. The order should be imperative and peremptory. No discretion should be allowed any officer here, because such are now the falsehood and fraud among the people that the best of officers, if allowed any discretion, will be deceived by their representations.

The State [Legislature] of Louisiana at its last session passed an act to purchase cotton cards for the people. Under this act an agent has been appointed, and a permit has been given to him to take into the enemy's lines 1,000 bales of cotton. I beg leave to call your attention to the working of this policy. Cotton is now selling in New Orleans at $1 per pound. Cotton cards, as they are now brought out, in sheets, sell at $1 per pair. Suppose we double the price and put them at $2 per pair. At the last general election in Louisiana there were polled about 43,000 votes. At present, New Orleans and the adjacent parishes being in the hands of the enemy, the actual voters in the State do not exceed 20,000. There are, therefore, about 20,000 families in the State needing cotton cards. These cards, at the prices above stated, would cost at an outside figure $40,000, and 1,000 bales of cotton, worth $400,000, are to go into the hands of the enemy, ostensibly to pay for these cards. The case needs only to be stated. But this is not the worst of it. This cotton, as soon as it reaches New Orleans, is sold at public auction, and the Federal Government is always the highest bidder. The reason of this is that the Federal Government must have sterling in Europe to pay the interest upon its debts there.

From the statement above given you will perceive that the amount of cotton shipped under permit will immensely exceed the value of the articles needed by our people, and thus while attempting to relieve the wants of the Confederacy we are relieving the wants of our enemies in a tenfold greater degree. The remedy for this great evil is simple:

First. Let the goods needed be brought in and delivered to a military officer of our Government at prices agreed upon.

Second. Let an order then issue to one of our cotton agents for a sufficient number of bales of cotton to pay for these goods.

Third. Let the party who receives the cotton produce a receipt from the collector of customs that the export duty upon this cotton has been paid, and upon this showing let the military officer here grant a safe-conduct to the cotton. In this way no more cotton will go out than is needed for the articles received.

Permit me to say, in conclusion, that Col. J. S. Scott has given entire satisfaction to all loyal citizens in this section. He has done more in the short time he has been here to restore order and loyalty than all officers who had preceded him.

As I have not the honor of your personal acquaintance, you will pardon me for saying that I have been acting as receiver for Confederate States for the whole of Eastern and Southern Louisiana from the beginning of the war, and was lately district judge of this district. What I have written I believe to be true, and it is written with the purest of motives.

Believe me, very truly, your obedient servant,

JNO. McVEA.

RICHMOND, June 24, 1864.

Col. H. L. CLAY,

Assistant Adjutant-General, Richmond:

SIR: In reply to a letter I wrote to the Adjutant-General asking if Marylanders were entitled to their discharge at the expiration of their term of enlistment, you inclosed me the Secretary's decision as follows:

The privilege of being transferred to the Maryland Line will be cheerfully given to these Marylanders. Thus an opportunity will be given them to voluntarily enlist with companies for the redemption of their State. In other respects they surely ought not to complain that they are not on a footing with all other citizens or residents. The law is plain as to residents, and it must be admitted that they are residents of the Confederacy for an indefinite period; that is, for the war, at least.

On the 16th instant I called at the office of the Adjutant-General and told you of the object of my visit; that I was in receipt of communications by mail and telegram from the very class of Marylanders referred to in the decision of the Honorable Secretary quoted—men who had left Baltimore to defend Charleston in the spring of 1861, whose terms of service had expired, and who had applied to be transferred to the Maryland Line in conformity to General Orders, No. 38, from the War Department, and who complained in the communication referred to that their transfers, though sent on more than two months before, had not been granted. At your suggestion I addressed a note to the Honorable Secretary on the subject, respectfully asking to be informed if the order referred to (No. 38) had been suspended as far as Charleston was concerned. I was prompted to this inquiry by the fact of General Lee's having requested me to suspend my efforts to withdraw Marylanders from his army to the Maryland camps till the present campaign was ended, which request I of course promptly complied with, fully acquiescing in its wisdom. This will, I presume, account for a fact to which you adverted in our brief interview—the limited number of men at General Elzey's camp.

It is fair to assume that had General Lee not have thought that Marylanders in his army were in sufficient force to constitute a power, he would scarcely have considered it a matter of consequence if they did or did not continue in the Virginia and other State organizations in which they were serving, and to which their members were credited as citizens of those States. Supposing that a corresponding exigency might exist making it a matter of importance to detain the Marylanders, entitled to transfer as stated, temporarily at Charleston, I had purposed, if my inference proved by the Secretary's reply to be correct, to appeal to the men who were complaining to me, asking them to continue their devotion to their flag in spite of their disappointment till the exigency had expired. My letter referred to was sent to the Department on the 16th instant, and when I tell you that it was under no less a prompting than the expressed wishes of General Lee, and with the cordial approval and indorsement of His Excellency the President, that I embarked in the effort to rally my countrymen, and that I have expended some thousands of dollars, private means, in the effort to accomplish that object, I think that you will admit that my request to be furnished with the information asked, for the use stated, was neither improper nor unreasonable; yet to this day my communication remains unnoticed. Self-respect would have impelled me to drop the matter here, for I don't choose to be considered as troublesome to any of your bureaus, but for another letter received from Charleston yesterday, making representations which, if true (and I see no reason to discredit them), are of so extraordinary a character, and so at variance with what I know to have been the purposes of His Excellency the President, that I am utterly at a loss to account for them.

When I visited Charleston in April last (which I did by request of the Maryland officers and other gentlemen of that State, and at the urgent entreaty of the men there who wrote to me to visit them) I had a frank and full conversation and understanding on the subject with General Beauregard, who acknowledged the justice of the President's purpose in authorizing the organization of the Marylanders into one body, and also conferred with General Ripley on the subject, both of whom bore testimony to the bravery and devotion of these men to the South, and General Ripley informed me, if I am right in my recollection, that a board of officers convened for the purpose had decided that these men were entitled to their discharge, they having served out their full term of enlistment and had sent their decision to the War Department. General Beauregard told me frankly that under the Order No. 38 he considered all the Marylanders in his department entitled to transfer to the Maryland Line, and an officer was selected of his command, and with his consent, to make that decision known to them, and with the knowledge and full consent of General Beauregard I visited the Marylanders who were under arrest for demanding their discharge, and at my instance they resumed their duty with the promise that they should be transferred to the Maryland Line. What makes this case more remarkable and seemingly harder is the fact that at the beginning of our troubles, when the Charleston people first apprehended conflict in February, 1861, an appeal was made to Maryland in her behalf, and her officers visited Baltimore to get volunteers for the defense of that city. These were the men who with others to the number of some 500 or 600, as I learned—many of whose remains now lie buried in the defenses about that city—first responded to that appeal, and history will tell how bravely they did their duty, and they don't ask (decimated though their numbers be) to quit the service, but to be dealt with fairly in accordance with the wishes and purposes of the President, to be allowed to fight side by side with the men of their own State—a privilege secured to citizens of all the States having a Congressional representation and intended by law to be accorded to Marylanders.

In writing thus plainly I desire you to understand that it is in no spirit of captiousness, still less with purpose of disrespect to the Honorable Secretary or any of the agents of the Department, and I may safely say from no selfish purpose of any kind. I know that I am above any imputation of that sort in the estimation of all high-minded men of Maryland who hold the honor of their State in due estimation, and hence feel that I can afford to speak with frankness on the affairs of that State.

In appointing General Elzey to command the Maryland Line, I think I know that it was done to put at rest a point that has been a constant bone of contention among aspiring emigrants from that State, and interfered very considerably with the organization and usefulness of the Maryland people. Notwithstanding the appointment of General Elzey, the name of another officer has appeared almost daily in the Richmond press signed officially as the "Commanding officer of the Maryland Line," which has served to create a feeling of distrust as to the future of that organization.

And I deem it proper also to advert to a fact that may or may not be within your knowledge—that an enlisted man has been detailed from Colonel Johnson's command to the Department and placed in charge of applications for transfer to Camp Howard, and that applications made at the same time and from the same regiments for transfer to the camps (Howard and Maryland) have in the cases of those for Camp Howard been promptly granted, whilst those wishing to go to Camp Maryland are unnoticed. Such I am sure you will agree with me was no part of the purpose of the President, and hence I conclude that there is some influence actively at work to defeat the proper organization of the Maryland Line.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. P. KANE.

P. S.—I inclose for your information a copy of my last letter from Charleston referred to.

G. P. K.

[Inclosure.]

SULLIVAN'S ISLAND, S. C., June 18, 1864.

Col. GEORGE P. KANE:

SIR: We received your very kind letter, through Lieutenant Reveley, and were satisfied we would get our transfer to Virginia in a few days, but our hopes now are all vanquished. We have been transferred from the city to this island, and here our adjutant presented a writing to us to sign to the effect that we did not desire a transfer, but wished to remain here. Not one in our regiment signed it, but he told some of us that we need not expect a transfer, and he would do all that was in his power to stop us from going. General Jones sent his assistant adjutant-general to see us about it. He did not see one of us in this regiment, but went to two Dutchmen in the infantry band, and another man belonging to the infantry, formerly from Washington City, who agreed to remain here. General Ripley now says that there are no more Marylanders to be sent on, and there are only a few Irish and Dutch who are dissatisfied and want to leave here. Captain Feilden, General Jones' assistant adjutant-general, did not consult one of us, and we are satisfied now that it is the officers in command here who are determined to do all in their power to keep us from going and defeat the orders of the Government. We are very much dissatisfied here, and since making the application for transfer we are treated very indifferently by the officers in command. We appeal to you, sir, to use your influence to the utmost, as we are afraid they will defeat us from getting off. There are between twenty and thirty of us on this island who are very anxious to get among our friends and relations in the old Maryland Line, and all the bounty which they are offering, and persuasion they are offering, cannot induce us to stay here with them. Our best wishes for your welfare and happiness.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., June 25, 1864.

Maj. Gen. S. D. LEE,
Meridian, Miss.:

GENERAL: I am much interested that the cotton held by the Treasury Department, in small lots, contiguous to the railroads, or navigable streams in Mississippi and Alabama, or in exposed positions, should be transported to Mobile, from whence it may be shipped for Government account, or to some place where it may be put in order with new bagging and rope. You will therefore please direct all officers within your command to afford to the Treasury agents all possible facilities of transportation. Now that the crops are laid by, there will be less difficulty in procuring necessary labor and teams. The preservation of all the Government cotton scattered through these States is of the utmost importance, and I desire you to render to the Treasury agents all the facilities and assistance you can.

Very respectfully,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

GRENADA, June 26, 1864.

Maj. Gen. S. D. LEE, C. S. Army,
Meridian:

MY DEAR SIR: Recently I have had occasion to trouble you about many things. I regret that it was my seeming duty to do so. I do not know if it is the wish of the Government authorities to have the Central road kept in repair or not. If it has such a desire they must aid now in obtaining tools, materials, provisions, and labor. I dislike asking for aid, and do not do so except from necessity. I have asked permission to send cotton into the northern counties to exchange for bacon, believing it to be better than to ask the Government to sell it to me. I have also asked to exchange cotton for tools and materials. It is not probable that more than fifty or sixty bales would be required to be sent forward to supply our present necessities. If these are denied me, then I shall have to request you to direct the commissaries to sell me provisions (bacon) for our hands. But why deny the road what is done by individuals almost daily, and, as is generally believed, by army officers located at this place and north of here? There is probably no proof that army officers here are interested in contracts and shipment of cotton, yet there is not an intelligent person in the community who does not believe it from circumstances of almost daily occurrence. If they labor to supply the Army it is well, but if for their own profit it is more to be condemned than if done by a private person.

I wrote to you some days since by Mr. Wang in reference to a proposition from New Orleans, and took occasion then to refer to some of the causes that had prevented my compliance with the agreement I made with you. Those causes are as prominent and as evident to-day as when I then wrote. I have spared no exertions or expense to comply with my contract, and shall not relax my exertions until you request me to do so. I made the contract in good faith, and more to serve our cause than profit. I will endeavor to comply with it.

I see others sending cotton into the Federal lines almost daily. What they bring back I do not know. Doubtless you do. Orders from Federal military commanders have for several weeks prevented me from doing anything. These orders, as I now understand, have been changed. Perhaps some supplies may now be obtained. I confess I have been less successful than I thought I should be. A few days since I offered to supply Major Paxton from 100 to 200 mules at from $150 to $200 each, and receive pay in cotton at 12½ cents, the price, as I was informed, that he sold to others for the same articles; 100 mules were ready for delivery. He declined my offer, doubtless for good reasons, and seemed to expect [me] to deliver mules and take pay in cotton at 35 cents, my contract price. This I shall not attempt to do when he pays others in cotton at a much less price. I am no blockade-runner, and will not knowingly violate civil law or military orders for gain. Others may and are doing so. I have thought you were entitled to some explanation as to the cause of my failure. I could give many others than those referred [to], but they would be founded on belief only.

With respect, your obedient servant,

W. GOODMAN.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
WAR DEPT., BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., June 27, 1864.

The following communication has been received from the War Department relative to the act of Congress, No. 13, approved June 7, 1864, and published in General Orders, No. 53, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, and entitled "An act to amend so much of an act entitled 'An act to organize forces to serve during the war,' approved February 17, 1864, as relates to the exemption of certain religious denominations:

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION:

The attention of the Bureau is called to the act of Congress, approved June 7, 1864, and entitled an act to amend so much of an act to organize forces to serve during the war, approved February 17, 1864, as relates to the exemption of certain religious denominations. This act is published in Orders, No. 53 (No. 13).

The privilege conferred by the act extends to all persons who belonged to the religious denominations mentioned in the act of October, 1862, at the date of that act, and who are now liable to conscription under the act of February, 1862.

The testimony required by the General Orders, No. 82, will be sufficient to ascertain the claim of the applicant for exemption, and the same course of proceeding as to the payment of the tax can be adopted under this act as was used under the act of October referred to. It is understood that a large addition has been made to these denominations since the enactment of October, 1862, from families not previously connected with them. This has been a cause for distrust and probably led to the adoption of the precise language of the act.

The Department has exercised a liberal indulgence in favor of those who held or were supposed to hold conscientious scruples upon the subject of bearing arms, but there is no reason for affording any countenance to efforts to avoid the performance of public duty by hypocritical pretenses of a religious belief, which has no root in the conscience or influence upon the conduct.

By order:

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Secretary of War.

The attention of the officers of conscription is specially directed to the foregoing communication from the Department as furnishing the rules and principles by which they will be guided in dealing with persons within military age who are members of the religious denominations referred to in the said act.

II. The sale to the Government or to the families of soldiers at prices fixed by the commissioners of the State under the impressment act of the marketable surplus remaining after furnishing the Government with the stipulated quantity of provisions and which he may raise from year to year, while his exemption continues, is made by the act of Congress approved February 17, 1864, one of the conditions of exemption allowed to an overseer or agriculturist. A claim is asserted by some of those exempted as agriculturists to exchange such part of the aforesaid surplus as they may please for supplies of provisions, clothing, and the like, to be consumed in family use, and to sell to the Government or the families of soldiers only what may remain of such surplus after making said exchanges.

This claim is in violation of law and of their contract with the Government and cannot be allowed.

Upon satisfactory evidence being furnished that persons exempted as overseers or agriculturists have or are thus disposing of their surplus productions by exchange as aforesaid, enrolling officers will arrest all such persons, forward them to their nearest camps of instruction, to be retained there until final action shall be taken and announced in their cases, and forward through the proper channels of communication to this Bureau a report of all the facts and circumstances of each case.

Every agriculturist or overseer upon receiving his certificate of exemption should be informed that the action indicated above will be taken in the event of his not disposing of his marketable surplus in accordance with the requirements of law.

By command of Brig. Gen. John S. Preston, superintendent:

C. B. DUFFIELD,

Macon, Ga.:

GENERAL: At the late session of Congress a law was passed requiring the appointment of a commissioner for each Congressional district to receive and take proof in relation to claims for property informally impressed for the use of the Army and not yet paid for. These positions should be filled by persons of well established character for loyalty and justice. In the adjustment of such claims all the feelings would be enlisted against the Government and in favor of the claimants, and the appointees should possess sufficient firmness to resist their sympathies and deal equitably with both the individual and the Government. I am desirous of making these appointments as early as possible and shall be pleased to receive from you any suggestions which will aid me in selecting suitable persons in Georgia.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

Surg. S. E. CHAILLÉ,
Ocmulgee Hospital, Macon, Ga.:

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication of the 11th instant, and in reply have to state for your information that the Secretary of War authorizes payment for negroes at the rate of $400 per annum, considering that sum not more than equal to $300 with clothing. You cannot allow owners of negroes to draw the commutation for their rations, they agreeing to feed them. Such policy would result in the negroes stealing supplies from the hospitals; and besides, General Orders, No. 25, require surgeons in charge to draw this commutation and expend it. If, with the additional $100 allowed, negroes cannot be retained with their owners' consent, they must be impressed into service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 57. } Richmond, June 30, 1864.

I. Persons between eighteen and forty-five years of age will not be permitted to hold office in the reserve forces unless they are physically unfit for active duty or permanently exempt from field duty.

II. Staff officers for the reserve forces will be appointed from that class, or assigned from the lists of retired or supernumerary officers.

III. Men detailed from the Army will constitute a portion of the reserve forces at the posts where they are serving, and will do duty with them when the reserves are called into active service.

IV. The appropriation made by the act of Congress approved February 17, 1864, for the pay of officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, and clerks, including current and extraordinary expenses, in the conscription service, will be drawn from the Treasury upon requisitions in the usual form, made by the superintendent of the Bureau of Conscription in favor of such bonded officers as may be designated by him.

V. Funds will be placed in the hands of such quartermasters attached to the conscript service in each State as may be deemed expedient by the superintendent of the Bureau of Conscription, and will be disbursed upon similar vouchers, and, as near as may be, according to the forms and regulations prescribed for the Quartermaster's Department. All returns, vouchers, reports, accounts current, abstracts, and summary statements connected with the disbursement of these funds will be forwarded to the Bureau of Conscription at the stated periods and in the manner and form prescribed by the general regulations of the Quartermaster's Department.

VI. All accounts for pay of officers, clerks, and employes, and for current and extraordinary expenses of the conscription service, will be paid only upon the order or approval of the commandant of conscripts for the State wherein such accounts and expenses may be incurred, or upon the order or approval of the superintendent of the Bureau of Conscription.

VII. The compensation and commutation or other allowances of officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the Army who may be detailed for service under the orders of the Bureau of Conscription will be paid, as heretofore, by quartermasters, out of the appropriation for pay of the Army and the service of the Quartermaster's Department.

VIII. The superintendent of the Bureau of Conscription will establish such additional special regulations as he may deem necessary for the instruction and control of disbursing and other officers of the conscript service in the disbursement of the appropriation for that service.

IX. When a command is ordered away or separated from the commissary of subsistence under whom a hospital fund has accrued, he will turn over the fund to the commissary or acting commissary of such command.

X. Paragraph VIII, General Orders, No. 125, 1863, is hereby revoked. Commanding officers of regiments, battalions, &c., will cause to be made out on the 1st and 15th of each month a roll of all deserters and absentees from their commands and forward the same, through the proper channels, to Brig. Gen. John S. Preston, superintendent of the Bureau of Conscription. The roll will embrace the company and regiment to which the deserter or absentee belongs, the county in which he resides, where it is supposed he may be found, and such other information as may lead to his prompt arrest. This order will not apply to commands in the Trans-Mississippi Department.

XI. The reserve forces of the several States are under the permanent direction and control of the general officers respectively assigned to their command by the President. Department, district, and other commanders of the active forces may have, for the time being, the direction of the military movements of such reserve forces as may be turned over to their command for service, but are forbidden to disband those forces, or otherwise interfere with any matters pertaining to their permanent organization, except with the concurrence of the general commanding the reserves of a State.

XII. When no longer required for service with the active forces the reserve troops will be immediately turned over to the commander of reserves for the State.

XIII. General officers commanding reserves for the several States will be held responsible in all matters relating to the efficiency and permanent organization of their commands.

XIV. Leaves of absence and furloughs will not be granted to reserve troops, except by the general commanding the reserves for the States to which they belong, or in accordance with regulations prescribed in his orders; but leaves of absence and furloughs will not be granted to reserve forces serving in the field if, in the judgment of department commanders, it be incompatible with the public safety to grant them.

CIRCULAR } CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
No. 25. } WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., June 30, 1864.

Commandants of conscripts will forthwith communicate to enrolling officers these instructions, made by order of the Secretary of War:

In the class of reserves enrolling officers will under no circumstances receive applications for or grant details until after the organization of the companies and the transmission of the rolls to the general commanding the reserves, and then only under instructions from said generals commanding.

By a decision of the Secretary of War the jurisdiction of the conscript authorities over the classes of reserves extends simply and exclusively to granting exemptions prescribed by the act of Congress entitled "An act to organize forces to serve during the war."

These exemptions are provided for in the tenth section of said act, but there shall be excluded from these exemptions thus authorized to be granted in the reserve classes all contained in the last clause of the fourth paragraph of said section from the words "in addition to the foregoing exemptions" to the conclusion of said fourth paragraph.

Except as herein specified, in all matters pertaining to the reserve classes enrolling officers, by order of the Secretary of War, are to obey the orders of generals commanding reserves, but no enrolling officer, under any plea, will be held to be excused from the full performance of his regular duties prescribed by and under the orders of this Bureau, and no assertion that duties under orders of the general commanding reserves have prevented the due performance of other duties will be accepted by this Bureau. The Secretary of War has directed all details heretofore granted inconsistent with these instructions will be promptly revoked and the men placed on the company rolls.

Paragraph XIV of Circular No. 8, Bureau of Conscription, current series, is hereby revoked.

By command of Brig. Gen. J. S. Preston:

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, NAVY DEPARTMENT,

The PRESIDENT:

SIR: I deem it proper to bring to your notice the inclosed statements of the several officers in charge of naval ordnance works, disclosing as they do an evil from which serious embarrassments to the public interests are suffered.

The letters inclosed show that much of the machinery and power of these valuable establishments are lost to the Government for the want of a few mechanics who are in the field and who, from time to time, have been asked for. The Selma works cannot make more than one gun in a week, whereas with a proper number of mechanics it could manufacture, with carriages and equipments complete, three in a week, and in a few months one every day; and not only our vessels at Mobile, but all the land works for its defense, could be supplied with heavy banded and rifled ordnance. It has sufficient tools and power to furnish all the shot and shell for the Navy, whereas it has not been able to supply them for the few guns it has made.

Lieutenant McCorkle, at Atlanta, reports that he cannot fill even the limited orders sent him for munitions of war for the want of mechanics.

Chief Engineer Ramsay, at Charlotte, says that "a number of the most important tools of the shops are idle a large portion of the time for the want of mechanics to work them." He refers also to his inability, without mechanics, to do the work required of him on loco-tive engines for railroads, and says that though working at night and on Sunday he cannot fill the orders sent him for munitions of war.

These reports possess special interest at this time, when we are informed by the proprietors of the Tredegar Works that they cannot furnish us with gun-iron, the Grace furnace having been destroyed by the enemy.

The weight of the guns now employed in our land works renders their removal upon the withdrawal of troops impracticable; and should we be compelled to retire from Richmond the largest portion of such guns in the Confederacy would necessarily be lost. These considerations suggest the importance of having a supply of such guns distributed at many points. There is not a spare one in the Confederacy.

The reports of the enemy's naval officers commanding iron-clad ships concur with the results of our own experiments in showing that the heavy navy rifles are the most effective ordnance yet used against those vessels. Their range and accuracy are very satisfactory; and, while some of them have been fired without visible strain from 500 to 1,500 times in conflict, none of them have burst when properly handled. In establishing the battery at Howlett's recently we were compelled to remove one VII-inch rifle from Drewry's Bluff—the only one at that point—and one from the gun-boat Drewry; and the gun which was dismounted in this battery by the enemy still remains unbanded for the want of mechanics to do the work.

Under these circumstances I have the honor to suggest that a board of army and navy officers be directed to ascertain and report the number and class of mechanics required to develop the full power of the public shops employed upon munitions of war, and that details to meet these demands be made from conscript camps or the Army.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

S. R. MALLORY,

Secretary of the Navy.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

COMMANDANT'S OFFICE, NAVAL STATION,
Charlotte, N. C., May 5, 1864.

Commander JOHN M. BROOKE,

Chief Bureau Ordnance and Hydrography, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 2d instant, directing me to inform you more clearly of the necessity of detailing additional mechanics to be employed in these works, I have to state that a number of our most important tools are idle a large portion of the time for the want of mechanics to work them, and some of these tools, the steam hammer for instance, are the only tools of their class in the Confederacy, and many of the large forgings required in the building and arming of war vessels can only be made with the assistance of these tools.

In addition to this there are now six locomotives on the railroads between Wilmington and Richmond thrown out of use owing to their crank axles having been broken, and new axles can only be forged at this establishment. The Secretary of the Navy has ordered this work to be done here, as the locomotives are greatly needed to transport supplies to the Army and Navy, but it is impossible to make any considerable headway on them, as our present force is inadequate to manufacture projectiles, gun carriages, &c., for arming vessels as fast as they are required. At this time we are working at night and on Sundays and still are not able to fill orders for munitions of war as is desired.

I understand from you that the iron-clad Virginia at Richmond is now in readiness for action except her gun carriages and wrought-iron projectiles, which are being made at these works. If we had a full force of mechanics this work would have been finished in one-half the time.

The following is a list of the additional mechanics required to give employment to the tools, forges, and furnaces now in operation:

Seven machinists, eight blacksmiths, eight gun-carriage makers, two blockmakers, one pattern maker, one coppersmith, two molders.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. ASHTON RAMSAY,
Chief Engineer, C. S. Navy, in Charge.

NAVAL ORDNANCE WORKS,
Atlanta, May 7, 1864.

Capt. J. M. BROOKE, C. S. Navy,
*Chief of Ordnance and Hydrography,
Navy Department, Richmond, Va.:*

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 2d instant I would state that there are employed at these works at present three molders, four machinists, and one blacksmith, exclusive of the foreman. I require, to perform ordinary work, nine molders, five blacksmiths, and eleven machinists. I have been prevented from manufacturing munitions of war (enough to supply orders) by the want of mechanics. At one time last year I had no lumber for shell boxes, and the commander of the camp of instruction in this district refused to detail a sawyer who owned a mill on the ground that the man wished to get out of the Army by obtaining a contract.

I have been for four months unable to have forged the wrought-iron bolts for the Brooke gun for the want of blacksmiths. Major-General Maury detailed a second-rate blacksmith to me, but revoked the order two weeks ago, remanding him to his regiment, although wrought-iron bolts will be an important item in the defense of Mobile. Nearly all the lathes are idle for want of hands. The officers do not seem to be aware that each rifle shell has to be turned in a lathe.

I have asked for details until I am tired; and even those conscripts who are unwillingly detailed to the works are accompanied by so many orders and so many papers (the orders are changed once a week) that a clerk is constantly employed to try and keep their papers correct.

It would appear that officers employed in manufacturing ordnance are not deemed patriotic by the Conscript Bureau, as they seem to think that an officer who asks for the detail of a man to do Government work is doing something wrong. They require so many descriptive lists of him, so many certificates, that it is absolutely appalling. I think with the additional number of mechanics mentioned above, detailed for the war, I could prepare six times (or more) as much ammunition and ordnance stores as I do now.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. P. McCORKLE,
Lieutenant, Commanding Naval Ordnance Works.

SELMA CANNON FOUNDRY,
May 8, 1864.Commander JOHN M. BROOKE, C. S. Navy,
In Charge, &c., Richmond, Va.:

SIR: Our facilities for completing guns have been lately much increased by improvements in the machinery for boring and turning the guns and bands. But these improvements will not benefit us if our blacksmith force is not increased. We want more good blacksmiths for heavy forging. We now do not average more bands than for one gun a week. If the bands could be forged elsewhere it would assist.

Very respectfully,

CATESBY AP R. JONES,
Commandant.

NAVAL GUN FOUNDRY AND ORDNANCE WORKS,
*Selma, May 14, 1864.*Commander J. M. BROOKE,
Office of Ordnance and Hydrography, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: Yours of the 2d instant in relation to the number of mechanics needed for these works has been received. I have repeatedly called the attention of the Department to this subject. Had my applications for mechanics been granted the rolling-mill would have been in operation last fall and it would have rolled iron enough for all our vessels, and we would also have cast guns for all their batteries and furnished them to the fortifications. The rolling-mill is not yet in operation. We now cannot turn out more than one gun a week, but with a proper number of mechanics could turn out three a week, and in a few months one a day. We have not been able to furnish shot and shell for the guns we have made. We ought to supply the whole Navy.

In addition to our present force we could employ with great advantage to the Government twenty-five molders, twenty-five machinists, and twenty blacksmiths, and if the works are to be increased, forty carpenters and masons.

Very respectfully,

CATESBY AP R. JONES,
*Commandant.*CIRCULAR.] ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, Va., July 1, 1864.

The act of Congress approved February 17, 1864, and incorporated in General Orders, No. 26, current series, declares that the duties of provost and hospital guards and clerks, of clerks, guards, agents, employes, or laborers in the Commissary, Quartermaster's, and Ordnance Departments shall be performed by persons within eighteen and forty-five years of age who are reported, by a board of army surgeons, unable to perform active duty in the field; and when that class shall have been exhausted, by those between forty-five and fifty years. General orders enjoin upon officers the observance of this law, and allow details of able-bodied men to continue until the 10th of April, 1864, when the head of any department or the chief of any bureau, or the principal officer of the same in any State, shall certify them to be necessary for that time to carry on the business in which they are employed.

Subsequently the Secretary of War issued the following instructions:

That the chief of the department should certify:

First. That the detail is indispensably necessary for the business for which it is asked.

Second. That diligent effort has been made to obtain the services of a person not liable to military service in the field, and that such effort will be continued.

Third. And furnish a descriptive list of the detailed persons. No details will be granted by the Bureau of Conscription for any department of the Government except on such certificate signed by the chief. The certificate of any inferior officer will not be admissible. The details will be made for six months, subject to revocation by the Secretary of War, and their renewal will be dependent on the terms of the certificate presented. Application for these details will be made to the Bureau of Conscription.

It is represented that, notwithstanding these orders and the severe penalty attached to the violation of the law, few persons fit for field duty and detailed in the Department and Bureau have been returned to their commands or turned over to the officers of the Conscription Bureau; and that the certificates required by the orders of the Secretary of War have been rarely furnished. In consideration of these facts, the President directs me to call your special attention to the law and orders under it, and to require that you cause a prompt investigation to be made throughout your department to the end that it may be shown that officers have violated and are now disregarding the law. The reports of subordinate officers should be consolidated in your office, and show the name of the officer and the number of clerks, &c., their age and physical condition, and by whose authority he employs them. You will state from the evidence exhibited by the officer whether the law in the case of each clerk, &c., has been conformed to. The consolidated reports will be forwarded from time to time to this office.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., July 1, 1864.

Mrs. SARAH E. HOWENTON and OTHER LADIES,
Halifax Court-House, N. C.:

LADIES: The President has referred to this Department your petition in behalf of the deserters from the Army. The feelings of sympathy and consideration which induced your appeal are fully appreciated, and felt to be honorable and natural to the sensibilities of the gentler sex. You do not, however, fully realize the absolute necessity of maintaining the discipline of the Army and retaining the soldiers to their standards, and that the rigid enforcement of the death penalty, painful and distressing as it naturally is to the feelings, is in reality the course of humanity, and by preventing offenses in the end saves lives. The course of the authorities has been marked perhaps with too great leniency to deserters, who have frequently been granted amnesties, and it has become, in the judgment of all our generals, who deplore the fact, a necessity to enforce the law rigidly. It must be recollected that in time of war, and especially such a war, desertion is the betrayal of one's country and among the greatest of crimes. These considerations, it is hoped, will vindicate the action of the Government, and reconcile the most humane to the sad necessity existing for enforcing the penalties of the law.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

---

No. 7A.] 17 SAVILE ROW, LONDON WEST, July 4, 1864.
Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: The Hon. James E. Ward reached Paris on the 21st of March, and delivered me your letter of 6th of January. After negotiating with him and those he represented for five weeks the negotiations terminated on the 26th of April in the inclosed proposition from Mr. E. P. Stringer, managing director of the Mercantile Trading Company (alias C. H. Reid & Co.), with whom the Ordnance Bureau has a large partnership contract.* This proposition I of course declined. I have since made arrangements with Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm & Co. to furnish the Government with eight first-class steamers, to be purchased by or built under the directions of Captain Bulloch. Two of these steamers, the Bat and the Owl, have already been purchased, and will leave for Bermuda on the 1st of August. The six others are contracted for, to be ready for sea as follows—say two in November, two in December, and two in April, 1865.

I have also made an arrangement with the highly respectable firm of J. K. Gilliat & Co. to advance £150,000 for the purpose of purchasing or building other steamers to run on Government account, produce to be consigned to them. For this advance I pay 5 per cent. commission and 7 per cent. interest, and the usual mercantile commission of 2½ per cent. for selling the produce, I lodging with them bonds of the £3,000,000 cotton loan, at the market value, to net the £150,000, with a margin of 25 percent. As Messrs. Gilliat & Co. have the money ready, this entire line might be started at once, if the proper steamers could be found, but the difficulty is in getting steamers ready built that are suited to the trade. Captain Bulloch, with whom I am directed by the Secretary of the Treasury to consult as to the character and fitness of the steamers, is now negotiating for two on the Clyde, which will be ready for sea during the month of August. Thus we expect to get off four first-class paddle-wheel steamers during the month of August. On their first outward trips they all will be sent to Bermuda, where I understand there is a large accumulation of Government freight; thence they will be consigned to Lieutenant-Colonel Bayne. The other steamers to be supplied under the Gilliat contract will be built as speedily as possible. The plans and specifications are ready, and negotiations are going on with the builders. The whole will be ready for sea during the month of December. Thus you will see that I have made provision for fourteen steamers, four of which will leave here during the month of August, eight in December, and two (the last of the Fraser, Trenholm & Co. Line) in April, 1865. The two bought by Messrs. F., T. & Co.—the Bat and the Owl—and the two we expect to purchase on the Clyde are the four best steamers now being built in the kingdom, and are greatly superior to most of the steamers heretofore engaged in the blockade business. They are built of steel, and will carry 1,000 bales of cotton each on a draft of seven feet water and with an average speed of thirteen knots per hour. Those to be built will be superior to these, and will, I think, have such sea-going qualities, combined with speed, as will greatly reduce the danger of running the blockade. A certain part of the proceeds of the produce brought out by these steamers will be set aside to keep up the lines, and by the end of the year the Government will have the means in its own hands to obtain all the supplies required abroad without incurring any further foreign debt.

That there may be no want of supplies for the Army until we begin to reap the result of these enterprises, I have made a contract with Alex. Collie & Co. for £150,000 clothing and quartermaster's supplies to be purchased by Maj. J. B. Ferguson, and for £50,000 ordnance and medical supplies to be purchased by Maj. C. Huse. A copy of the contract you will find inclosed. Already one of Mr. Collie's steamers, the Falcon, to be employed in carrying out this contract, has sailed for Bermuda, and the second steamer, the Flamingo, which takes this, will sail to-morrow. Major Huse has purchased about £30,000 on his credit under this contract, a part of which (medical stores) went on the Falcon, and he hopes to get off some other light goods by the Flamingo. Major Ferguson has placed orders for the whole amount of his credit, and the entire contract will go forward to the islands within five months.

As above stated, two of the steamers of the line to be employed in this business may be said already to have commenced work. The other two will sail, one in the middle of July, the other the 1st of August, and the goods will be speedily arriving at Wilmington. Therefore, no time should be lost by the Quartermaster's Department and Ordnance Bureau in getting cotton ready at the ports, to be exchanged for the goods on delivery as per the contract. May I respectfully ask that you will give instructions to this effect?

In a letter to the Quartermaster-General of 7th of May I advised him that I should make a contract with Mr. Collie for his department for carrying out that made with Mr. Tait, at Richmond, and sent to me for confirmation. Mr. Tait has arranged with Mr. Collie and Major Ferguson to furnish £50,000 of ready-made clothing at prices somewhat lower than those named in the contract drawn up at Richmond, and he waives the 5 per cent., as Mr. Collie pays him cash for the goods on delivery. He also pays cash for the purchases of Majors Huse and Ferguson, for which, you will perceive by reference to the contract, he is allowed  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. The balance (£100,000) will be invested in such general quartermaster's supplies as Major Ferguson has the most pressing orders for.

The first trips of these steamers in may not take goods enough to pay for full outward cargoes, as per contract, but very soon they will take in more in value than they can bring out. I therefore request that you will direct Colonel Bayne to give the steamers of this line full outward cargoes of cotton. It is understood with Mr. Collie that if any of the inward cargoes are lost or captured, and he should have received cotton in excess of goods delivered, that he will pay for such excess at the rate of 8d. per pound in sterling, or he will duplicate the goods, at the option of the Government. In addition to this contract I have opened a credit with Messrs. J. K. Gilliat & Co. for the Ordnance Bureau, which has enabled Major Huse to complete the contracts for all the machinery required for the works of Colonel Rains, Major Mallet, and Superintendent Burton, and the machinery is now in process of construction. To obtain this credit I deposited with Messrs. Gilliat & Co. \$1,000,000 8 per cent. Confederate bonds belonging to the Ordnance Bureau, and pay them  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. commission for the credit and 7 per cent. interest. The credit extends over a period of twelve months, though Major Huse expects to get all the machinery off much sooner. I have also authorized Major Huse to purchase, at six months' credit, rifles, carbines, pistols, cavalry equipments, leather, harness, &c., to the extent of £40,000. Under this credit he informs me that he can purchase from certain parties almost as cheap as he could for cash, interest off. Major Ferguson also informs me that he can purchase from the Lancastershire and Yorkshire manufacturers, at four and six months, on the credit of the Government, but I have not thought it advisable to go beyond the £40,000 at six months, as I do not wish to create any debts that I cannot see the way clear to pay. Our credit begins to grow stronger, and by proper management will soon be available for all our wants.

The legislation of the last Congress, with the regulations since adopted in reference to the foreign commerce of the country, has greatly strengthened it, and I hope the Government will not allow the outside pressure to cause any future modification of these regulations, and, above all, that for a momentary necessity you will not allow the agents at the islands to make contracts with steamers granting privileges not in accordance with these regulations.

Since I wrote you last (19th February, No. 6A) I have paid W. G. Crenshaw £40,000 and Major Ferguson £35,000, Maj. R. P. Waller's drafts (£20,000), and an additional draft of Major Waller in favor of Thomas Sharp, for £3,000 to purchase machinery for a shoe manufactory. To make these payments I had to sell the stock of the loan—some as low as 42. I hope, however, that matters are now in such a train as will prevent any such sacrifices in future. The £40,000 paid W. G. Crenshaw has enabled him to re-establish his line of steamers. He has three now running, and has made arrangements with Messrs. Gilliat & Co. to furnish him with the means to purchase two more. You are aware that he has dissolved his connection with Mr. Collie. He informs me that at present he has no contract with you, but that his operations are three-fourths for the Government and one-fourth for himself. Having myself made pretty ample provision for quartermaster's, ordnance, and medical supplies, I have advised him to confine his operations to getting in commissary supplies, and I believe he is energetically working at it. Would it not be well to have a new contract made, defining accurately the interest of the Government in his operations? The Collie & Crenshaw contract was by no means favorable to the Government, and from a general statement presented me by Mr. Crenshaw when I paid him the £40,000 it appears that the Government had not received from it the money invested. You are aware from my previous letters that I do not favor any partnership connections between the Government and individuals. If there be profits the individuals will get them; if losses, they will fall on the Government. Besides, there will always be difficulty in getting settlements. The contract with C. H. Reid & Co. illustrates this. More than a month ago, after receiving a letter from Colonel Bayne authorizing me to do so, I called in person on them and asked for a statement of their accounts with the Government, which they promised to furnish. After waiting three weeks without hearing from them, ten days ago I made the request in writing, and as yet have only received a note saying that they were getting the accounts ready. I have, however, learned from Major Huse that he has received from the company £35,000 on account of the Government interest in the adventure. As the arrangements made with Fraser, Trenholm & Co. and J. K. Gilliat & Co. will furnish the Government with the means of obtaining ample supplies, I respectfully suggest that these partnership contracts be annulled; or, rather, that the Government buy out the interest of the other parties in the steamers and run them on its own account.

But little progress has been made in the settlement of the accounts of Messrs. S. Isaac, Campbell & Co. since the letter of Mr. Bloodgood and myself of the 17th March. All your conjectures in reference to this firm have proven but too true. The investigation of their accounts shows that they have in many instances made charges that can be characterized by no other term than that of fraudulent. In that portion of their accounts which they originally professed to have furnished on commission, we find that they have in many instances charged, in addition to the commission, from 5 to 20 per cent. more than they paid. They now seek to turn this commission account into a purchasing account, and claim that under the circumstances (i. e., the precarious credit of the Government) the profit they have charged is not unreasonable or excessive. Not being able to come to a settlement in any other way on the proposition of Messrs. S. I., C. & Co., we have agreed to leave the matter to arbitration, provided there should be but one arbitrator, and he a barrister or attorney of eminence. The papers are now in the hands of our solicitors, Messrs. Thomas & Hollams, who, with the solicitor of Messrs. S. I., C. & Co., are to select the barrister.

I have received, under cover of a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel Bayne, of 21st of April, copy of the regulations established by the Secretary of the Treasury, yourself, and the Secretary of the Navy on the 14th of April, and approved by the President on the 18th, for the purchase and transportation abroad of tobacco, cotton, and naval stores. The arrangement I have made for steamers seems to have anticipated your action, and will supply the means of rendering it immediately efficacious. The distribution of the work among the various departments appears to me the simplest and most effective mode of carrying out the objects in view. The only thing necessary, in my opinion, to give the public service the full benefit of these regulations is, that all persons abroad acting under them should be formally instructed of the nature and limits of their respective duties. On a former occasion, i. e., the agreement of the 15th of September and your letter of the 26th idem, the failure to do this defeated the principal objects you had in view, namely, to give me control in cases of emergency of the funds of your Department in the hands of Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm & Co., since that firm declined to transfer funds in their hands from one bureau of your Department to another, as advised in my letter to you of the 18th of December, No. 4A, to which I hoped ere this to have received a reply, inclosing such directions to Messrs. Fraser, Trenholm & Co. as would enable me to carry out the views expressed in your letter of September 26. I still think it desirable that all the funds of your Department abroad should be under my direction. As I am now issuing large credits to the purchasing officers and paying any drafts that may be drawn on me from the islands, I may make sacrifices to meet these engagements which might not be necessary if I were fully advised of the exact state of the finances of your Department.

With much respect, your obedient servant,

C. J. McRAE,
Agent, &c.

[Inclosure.]

LONDON, June 13, 1864.

Memorandum of agreement between Alexander Collie, of London, on the one part, and Colin J. McRae, as representing the Government of the Confederate States of America, on the other part.

1. Alexander Collie agrees to provide four large and powerful new steamers to carry out the following arrangement with the least possible delay:

2. Alexander Collie will at once cause to be purchased, under Colin J. McRae's direction, quartermaster's stores to the value of 150,000 pounds sterling, and ordnance or medical stores to the value of 50,000 pounds sterling—the one subject to the inspection of Maj. J. B. Ferguson, the other to that of Maj. C. Huse.

3. The delivery of such purchases to extend over a period of about six months, in proportionate quantities, and shipment to be made to the Confederate States with as little delay thereafter as practicable.

4. Inland carriage and packing expense to be charged in the invoice, and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. commission to be charged also.

5. Colin J. McRae, on behalf of his Government, agrees that on arrival in the Confederacy of any goods purchased and shipped by Alexander Collie under this agreement, such goods will be immediately claimed and taken over by the Government. Fifty per cent. advance will be added to the English invoice, and Alexander Collie, through his agent, will immediately receive in exchange cotton at the rate of 6 pence sterling per pound.

6. Such cotton to class middling and to be delivered alongside the steamers as required, compressed, packed, and in good merchantable condition.

7. Full cargoes of cotton received in exchange for goods delivered under this agreement may be shipped by Alexander Collie, through his agent, free from any other charge or restriction whatsoever beyond the now existing tare of one-eighth of a cent per pound.

8. No steamers to have priority in any way over those employed by Alexander Collie in this service, and more than the four above mentioned may be used if Alexander Collie can arrange to put them on.

9. Colin J. McRae further agrees that to cover the expense of Alexander Collie's agencies abroad, he, Alexander Collie, is to have the privilege of providing and bringing out other cotton than that received under this agreement to the extent of one-tenth part of the cargo space of the respective steamers, and such cotton (or tobacco) may be shipped on same terms as indicated per Government cotton, viz, free from all other charges or restrictions whatsoever excepting the before-named export duty now existing.

10. This agreement is to be construed by both parties in a spirit of confidence and liberality. The one will purchase and send forward the supplies indicated with the least possible delay; the other will deliver cotton as required in the same way, and neither party will withhold necessary supplies on account of any temporary shortcoming on the part of the other.

11. Alexander Collie's agents, with the necessary staff for attending to this business, are to be allowed the privilege of residing in the Confederacy free from liability to conscription, and every reasonable facility is to be allowed them for effectually carrying out the terms of this agreement.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War:

SIR: I have waited anxiously for a reply to my letter of the —* in regard to the exemption of Daniel L. Russell, jr., as an officer of this State. None has been received, but I am told that General Whiting has orders to conscribe him immediately.

I simply wish to inform you that I cannot and will not submit to this being done without resisting it by every means at my command.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Z. B. VANCE.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,

Richmond, Va., July 5, 1864.

Col. W. M. BROWNE,

Commandant Conscripts of Georgia:

COLONEL: My attention has been lately called by various communications to the obstructions which have been interposed by Governor Brown to the execution of the conscript law, especially in regard to the reserve classes. I have frequently given instructions relative to the subject to the superintendent of conscription, and they have doubtless been made known to you by that officer, and you have thus been advised of the views of the Department. Still, I deem it advisable to express more particularly to yourself my conviction that the spirit and temper of the Governor, especially in the late correspondence with General Cobb, preclude all hope of a change in his policy and render further attempts at conciliation, harmony, and co-operation useless. I am weary of vain attempts to obtain his good will or assistance in the work of conscription, and am, moreover, inclined to believe that a course of firmness and decided action in dealing with him will be both wiser and more effective. I recommend, therefore, that you proceed in the execution of the law strictly, without respect to any claims or pretensions which may be asserted by him or his agents that do not come within the fair intent and just construction of the Confederate law. He is entitled to give certificates of exemption for all officers of the State whom he may deem necessary to the State Government, and to those only. He has no right to secure militiamen within the ages prescribed by the Confederate law, nor to make details for manufacturing or industrial purposes. No more county or municipal officers can be covered by his exemption. There is no occasion to have any direct conflict with the Governor or the officers of the State. The action of yourself and the enrolling officers should be not toward them, but on persons individually liable to conscription, and they should be proceeded against in the mode prescribed by the law.

* Probably May 19, p. 425.

A few judicious examples made by sending into active service in the field those of the reserve corps who have failed to report within the time prescribed would probably strike wholesome terror, and induce prompt compliance with the call for enrollment by all the rest. If Governor Brown interposes with his official authority it will be necessary temperately but firmly to insist on the enforcement of the law, and let him know, if need be, that the issue will be distinctly made and met before the people of his State between the authority of himself and the Confederate Government. It is not believed that, with the imminent danger threatening their liberties, lives, and homes, the people will hesitate to sustain the action of the Confederate Executive in strengthening the Army of their defenders and providing reserve forces to guard vital points from marauding raiders. At least it has become a grave duty on the part of the Confederate Government to do its work thoroughly, and if arrested by the action of the Governor or State authorities let the responsibility rest upon and be met by the true delinquents. I hear that a great many of the men who put in substitutes, and others who are applying for agricultural and other details, have been granted from time to time temporary furloughs until their cases can be decided, and have thus far escaped active service. I do not consider it advisable longer to pursue such a course, but, on the contrary, deem it important that those whose cases have not been decided, and until they are, should be placed in active service. Whenever a clear right of exemption exists or a case of detail has been settled and the bond taken, the exemption or detail may be made permanent. Otherwise, the party should be in service during the present crisis. This is important, especially with regard to those who put in substitutes, because otherwise on the expiration of the law suspending the writ of habeas corpus we shall have innumerable cases of litigation. We should give to all such an opportunity of acquiring the spirit of a soldier, and of feeling the shame of deserting their standard in the presence of the enemy, before the expiration of the suspension.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE SINKING FUND,
Richmond, Va., July 5, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War of the Confederate States:

SIR: Some time ago the commissioners of the sinking fund of the State of Virginia, of which board we are the members, entered into a contract with L. R. Smoot and others, by which they agreed to pay the interest on the debt of Virginia, due in London, upon condition that the commissioners of the sinking fund would obtain permission from the Secretary of War of the Confederate States to ship full cargoes of cotton in three vessels or in a vessel making three trips. Upon representing the matter to you you granted the permission by indorsing upon the application that your authority was given, provided no law should be passed by Congress contravening that authority. Since then a law has been passed by Congress authorizing the President to prescribe regulations for vessels running the blockade, and under the regulations prescribed it is understood that the permission granted by the Secretary of War cannot now be rendered available. The parties who made the agreement with the commissioners of the sinking fund have since purchased cotton bonds to enable them to carry out their agreement, intending with the cotton to be paid under these bonds to run the blockade and pay the State interest. When they applied to obtain the cotton due them they were informed that the Government has no cotton on hand at any Southern port and that the bonds cannot now be paid. If this cotton was delivered to them upon the terms of the bond they would have a right to ship the cotton without being bound by the regulations prescribed by the President. These parties, however, have purchased other cotton and have it ready for shipment, and ask that they may be permitted to carry this out according to the original understanding. May we not ask, under these circumstances, that the restriction may be removed, and that the facility may be afforded these parties to provide the means of paying the interest of the State? We cannot but hope, with this laudable object in view, that you will grant the permission asked, or, if not in your power, that you will recommend it favorably to the department to whom the authority properly belongs.

Very respectfully,

J. M. BENNETT.

I regret to inform that under the late law of Congress and the regulations adopted by the President this request cannot be complied with, as it would invade the uniformity on which the constitutionality of the regulations rest. Besides, motives of very strong policy require that one-half of the outward cargo of each ship sailing should be exacted for the Government, and the President has no power to depart from it for other States.

COLONEL: I beg leave to call your attention to the fact that the competition which has heretofore been occasioned by several bureaus of the Government being at one time in the market for supplies has again arisen in efforts of the Navy Department, Niter and Mining Bureau, &c., to secure the incoming wheat crop. Agents of the former have already purchased some of the best crops in the vicinity of Richmond, and those of the latter are now in the market for crops in Powhatan, and doubtless other counties in this State; and it is scarcely necessary for me to say that this competition not only adds to the difficulty of collection by creating an exaggerated estimate of the wants of the Government, but increases prices and stimulates farmers to hoard and secrete their produce. I would therefore respectfully recommend that these departments be requested to withdraw their agents for the purchase of such supplies as are obtainable in the Confederacy, and that they be furnished by this Bureau and with the same ration as the Army is now receiving.

SIR: The invoice of medical supplies forwarded by you to this office as samples of the product of your laboratory have been received. The articles appear to be of good quality and well prepared, and I am pleased to see that much progress has been made in this branch of the establishment under your control. It is hoped that you will continue to manufacture these articles in as large quantities as possible, so as to avoid as far as practicable the necessity of importing from abroad. For the same reason it is deemed advisable that the preparations of indigenous plants should be manufactured in large quantities, that they may be substituted as far as practicable for imported medicines.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 59. } Richmond, July 8, 1864.

I. In accordance with the act of Congress approved June 14, 1864, and published in General Orders, No. 53, current series, the commutation value of rations of sick and wounded officers and soldiers in hospitals or other places, in camp or the field, used as hospitals, will be the cost of the ration at the post or place, and 100 per centum thereon, which amount will constitute the hospital fund.

II. The ration named in the preceding paragraph, when actually issued, will correspond with that allowed to soldiers in the field; but in reckoning the hospital fund the whole number of rations due, whether drawn or commuted, will be estimated in quantity and components (excluding sugar and coffee) according to the ration as prescribed in paragraph 1107, Army Regulations.

III. Rations in kind (such as are issued to soldiers in the field) may be issued to all attendants in regimental, field, or other hospitals.

IV. Medical directors will report through the Surgeon-General to this office soldiers in hospital who are mechanics, and who are permanently disabled, or it is believed will be unfit for many months for field service. When reported their trade will be stated, that they may be detailed in appropriate bureaus to relieve able-bodied men therein employed.

V. Officers traveling under orders will be allowed transportation in kind and $10 per diem. All general or special orders which give other or different allowances are hereby revoked. Generals or other officers commanding a district, department, or army in the field, and chiefs of the several military bureaus, are alone authorized to give orders that will carry transportation.

Enrolling officers will, with the aid of the temporary boards, proceed diligently to investigate all such applications, in accordance with the instructions heretofore given, and forward them to the Bureau with their reports and opinions for such action as the War Department may take in reference to said applicants.

Upon transmitting the applications to the Bureau, commandants will state the commands to which the applicants were assigned.

COLONEL: The inclosed circular from the Niter and Mining Bureau is respectfully submitted for your consideration, and has already operated most injuriously upon our prospects of speedily collecting the tithe wheat by giving farmers the option of retaining it until called for by agents of that Bureau, besides creating alarm and confusion among the planters as to the wants of the Government and the proper parties to whom they should deliver the tithe. Information has also reached me that agents of the Niter and Mining Bureau are now engaged in purchasing wheat with the view to an immediate accumulation of a six-months' supply for its employés, while our best exertions are now employed to meet the daily wants of the Army. This course seriously conflicts with the best interests of the Government, and I am constrained to repeat the suggestion contained in my letter of the 6th instant that the several bureaus of the Government be furnished by this department with subsistence and thus remove effectually the competition that threatens to destroy the credit of the Government and its ability to buy to any extent.

HARRISONBURG, July 16, 1864.

Major CALVERT:

What on earth do the commissioners mean by their late schedule of prices? Wheat, $30 per bushel! A rise of $150 from $25 a barrel for flour! The whole community—farmers among others—stand aghast. They regard the Government as giving up their currency. Gold and silver is now being demanded for produce, and persons bringing supplies to town are in many instances returning with them unsold, being unwilling to take Confederate money at any price. The idea is among the people that the Government in paying such prices will necessarily flood the country again with promises to pay, and at such prices as offered can never meet its engagements. The very worst results are about to occur unless some immediate steps are taken to prevent it. It is the opinion of the more intelligent farmers that more grain would have been sent forward by reducing the price on the plea of scarcity of money than by enhancing it. The truth is, our whole community is shocked at the proceedings of the Board, and consider that a more terrible blow has been leveled at our currency than any it has as yet received. In addition to all, there is a strong current of feeling among the non-producers and poorer classes, who, in view of their limited means and the heavy taxation on all sources of obtaining money, conceive that they see for themselves and families nothing but starvation. I write you this letter hoping that you will at once bring the subject to the attention of the Secretary of War or other proper authority for investigation, with the full assurance that the people know that in proportion as the Government enhances the prices of provisions the less likely will it be able to pay; that it is not that the prices heretofore paid were not amply sufficient, but that the hesitation in bringing forward supplies consisted in a distrust of the money, which distrust is now tenfold increased.

I am, your friend,

J. W. G. SMITH.

JULY 18, 1864.

General BRAXTON BRAGG,

Richmond:

GENERAL: I beg leave to call attention to the following subjects of special interest suggested by my recent inspection of the conscription service in North Carolina.

First. Under the present system the liberty of petitioning for details is much abused. The testimony of the most judicious enrolling officers is that almost every man puts in a petition as soon as he is enrolled, for the sake of delay; and the instructions they are acting under require them to send forward the application, approved or disapproved, and allow the party to remain unmolested until it is returned. The effect of this arrangement is that numbers of conscripts who should have fought in this campaign have spent a quiet summer at home by means of a sham petition. Officers tell me that uniformly where they have rejected a man's claim to detail as having no show of merit and sent him forward to the camp of instruction he has returned in a few days with liberty to stay at home till his appeal to Richmond was heard from. I do not see anything in the law or the orders of the War Department which necessitates this slow procedure. Practically in the large majority of cases an application disapproved by the local and district officers is disapproved all the way through. It would seem, then, to be the true policy to send immediately to the Army a conscript whose petition for indulgence is rejected by these officers. The paper going forward to the Bureau might contain a statement of the regiment to which the applicant had been assigned, and in the few cases in which it would be deemed proper to reverse the action of the county and district officers an order for detail might issue immediately from the Adjutant-General's Office. Such a practice would also tend to reduce the number of improper applications, and thus disencumber the service of a mass of useless work.

Second. Closely allied to this matter is the evidence which will be found in the reports upon the several districts as to the time required for the transaction of business in its passage from the enrolling officer through the commandant to the Bureau and back again. The indications are, if I mistake not, that the greatest improvements in the service are to be sought in this direction.

Third. I would suggest the propriety of having some uniform system of books and records prescribed by the commandant for each class of officers. Printed blanks should, by all means, be furnished. At present there is great diversity of practice, and in one point it is of some moment. There is no greater clog to business than what is known as an indorsement book. In some cases it is, of course, a necessary evil, but where it is not essential it ought to be abolished. Three or four districts and a majority of the county officers do not keep this record, and testify that they have felt no inconvenience from its absence. This would appear to be a matter for the experience of the commandant to decide and regulate. But few of the officers have the clerks authorized by the Bureau.

Fourth. The local advisory boards are working well, but one evil is to be apprehended from them and guarded against—delay of business. Whilst there was a great press of work, arising immediately out of the recent enrollment, they met every day; but I found that either no regular times for meeting had been fixed or they were to meet once a week or once in ten days. It is evident that much of the ordinary business of a county officer would thus remain in his office from a week to ten days. I suppose at least two meetings a week might be secured without hardship by a general order from the commandant. No more fortunate device for the protection of the agriculture of the country could have been adopted than the method of investigation by these boards. Though my observation was limited, I feel satisfied that if any error is committed in the exercise of the great powers intrusted to the conscription authorities it will be on the side of the producing and industrial interests, and not from blind zeal to increase the mere numbers of the Army.

Fifth. No system for the supervision of detailed men has been anywhere adopted. The duty is earnestly enjoined by the Bureau; but unless some regular method is prescribed by the commandant it will be carelessly and imperfectly performed. The local boards and militia officers afford every ready agency for a complete supervision of the daily life of every detailed man in a county, and periodical reports might be made by them to the county officer showing how each man is discharging his duty to the Government.

Sixth. The apprehension of deserters has been almost entirely suspended by the removal of the troops heretofore employed as a supporting force. It cannot be actively resumed till the companies of senior reserves authorized for this service are organized, which will be some weeks hence. In the Tenth District this force will be entirely inadequate. It will be necessary to send some regular troops there when they can be spared to effect a thorough purification of the country. The militia and home-guard officers in the greater part of the State are reported to be zealous and active, but they constitute a very inefficient and unsatisfactory machinery for the execution of the law of conscription. Their last service is as auxiliaries to a regular force entirely under the control of the enrolling officer. Such a system is contemplated by the Bureau, and I do not see why it should not be in successful operation in a month.

Seventh. The qualifications of the officers engaged in the service are as high as could reasonably be expected. The districts are superintended without exception by officers of good intelligence, apparent activity and fidelity, and sufficient experience. Many of them have seen service in the field and been disabled by wounds. The county officers impressed me for the most part favorably. Some are too young and some without sufficient education or entirely new to the business, but I have no doubt of their capacity generally to do their work. The greater part are commissioned as drill-masters and have not seen field service; others are disabled line officers. Much embarrassment has no doubt been felt heretofore from the constant changes occurring in the personnel of the service. It has been almost impossible to form a good corps of officers, because as soon as they acquired experience they were called for by their commanders in the field. But the matter is now upon a better basis; and when a few existing vacancies are filled by retired officers all that is practicable perhaps will have been done. The reports upon the districts show that charges of corruption have been preferred in but few cases against these officers, and they are apt to be heard where there is ground for them. Under the present law the amount of labor to be performed by each class of officers is very great and quite sufficient to keep them busily employed. A conscientious man will find constant work to do in one of these offices. I found a good deal of unfinished business nearly everywhere, whether by negligence or not there was no way of ascertaining, but it is just to remember that the first enrollment under the act of February 17 had been only recently completed.

Eighth. It is difficult of course to judge from a rapid journey through the State how the law has been executed, but from the information I have been able to pick up I should say that the system of enrollment described in the report of the Sixth District is as good as can be adopted; that the recent enrollment under the new law was thorough, and that claims to exemption and detail were vigorously but fairly and intelligently investigated. The weight of evidence shows that the medical boards are giving full effect to the intention of Congress relative to the enrollment of certain men for light duties, and it appears that the employes of the staff departments at the different posts have been carefully inspected. The organization of the service is judicious, the admirable regulations for the conduct of business prescribed by the Bureau seem to be generally understood, and the officers are fairly doing their duty.

I have endeavored to point out some improvements which seemed feasible, but it is only fair to say that upon the whole, taking into consideration the opposition to the law in some parts of the State and all the elements of difficulty, the conscription service in North Carolina appears to be in a healthy working condition, creditable to the commandant and his subordinates.

I have the honor to be, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Report shows that unnecessary delays are occasioned by permitting conscripts to remain at home until their applications for details can be acted upon by the Bureau of Conscription; also a want of a general system of supervision of detailed men; and suggests that the local boards and militia officers afford a ready agency for the supervision of the daily life of every detailed man in a county. The suggestions of Colonel Anderson are concurred in and are recommended for adoption. The same suggestions were made by Col. R. H. Chilton in his inspection report of the conscription in Richmond, August 21, 1864.

Overseers for whom $500 have been paid the Government are not strictly exempts, as the last law does not embrace them. Those having fifteen hands who have bonded are exempts. Those with less than fifteen, though bonded, are strictly detailed men. For the first and second class we have strictly no right to interpose. For the third, as legally they are in Confederate service, we have; but I leave the matter to your discretion.

II. The Nineteenth Mississippi Battalion (Lieut. Col. W. L. Duff) having been increased to ten companies by the addition of four companies raised within the enemy's lines, will constitute the Eighth Regiment Mississippi Cavalry.

III. The six companies of Tennessee cavalry raised by Col. John F. Newsom and the four companies of the late Colonel Forrest's regiment will constitute the Eighteenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry.

IV. The four Alabama companies heretofore attached to the organization known as McDonald's battalion, or N. B. Forrest's Third Tennessee Cavalry, are hereby transferred to Russell's Alabama regiment.

V. The seven companies now composing N. B. Forrest's Third Tennessee Cavalry will constitute the Twenty-sixth Battalion Tennessee Cavalry, to the command of which Lieut. Col. D. C. Kelley is hereby assigned.

VI. The regiment heretofore known as the First Mississippi Partisan Rangers will be known hereafter as the Seventh Regiment Mississippi Cavalry.

VII. The regimental organizations of the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Regiments Tennessee Cavalry, heretofore constituting a part of what was known as Richardson's brigade, are annulled, and the field officers of these regiments will no longer be regarded as in commission.

VIII. The following companies will constitute the Fourteenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry: Capt. S. J. Cox's, Capt. John H. Deberry's, Capt. Zilman Voss', Capt. L. A. Thomas', Capt. E. W. Jacobs', Capt. W. J. Hall's, Capt. A. C. Reid's, Capt. James Gwynn's, Capt. E. S. Elliott's, First Lieut. C. C. Conner's. The field officers will be appointed.

IX. The following companies will constitute the Fifteenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry: Capt. P. W. Moore's, Capt. J. L. Garrison's, Capt. H. T. Hanks', Capt. T. Nutt's, Capt. E. L. Hussey's, Capt. T. C. Buchanan's, Capt. R. B. Sanders', Capt. G. T. Penn's, Capt. P. M. Williams', Capt. J. A. Williamson's. The field officers will be appointed.

LIBERTY, July 19, 1864.

[Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON:]

DEAR SIR: I feel impelled by a sense of duty to apprise you of the state of public sentiment in this section of the State with reference to the schedule of prices recently adopted and published by the commissioners. It has cast a gloom over this community, and done more to destroy the Confederate currency than any circumstance which has transpired since the commencement of the war. I have conversed with many farmers on the subject, and have yet to meet with the first man who does not express the most profound regret on account of this action of the commissioners. They all say it was entirely unlooked for and has taken them completely by surprise. I am perfectly confident that the Government could have gotten just as much wheat in this county by offering $10 per bushel as by offering $30. Under a recent circular issued from your Department making an appeal for grain the people of this county will furnish liberally from their exhausted supplies, notwithstanding the enemy has recently visited us and foraged all over the county. The fears of patriotic men everywhere are aroused for the currency. They had fondly hoped that under the recent legislation of Congress the currency would soon be improved, but now they regard this action of the commissioners as a declaration on the part of the Government that the depreciation of the currency cannot and will not be remedied, and plain men cannot understand how the Government is ever to redeem its obligations and pay off a debt piled up at the rates fixed by the commissioners. In other words, they look upon repudiation as almost inevitable. It is in this view of the subject that our farmers would prefer to have their wheat taken at $10 per bushel than at $30. Again, all the counties of this Commonwealth have a large number of soldiers' families to support, and in doing so they find themselves compelled under this act of Assembly to resort to impressment. They cannot impress at a lower rate than the Government, and how can they pay the enormous debt which will be incurred by paying $30 per bushel for wheat, $24 for corn, and $25 for corn-meal? How are the non-producers of the country to live when the inevitable effect of this action must be to double the prices of the necessities of life in the markets? The seller will say at once that if the Government is giving $30 for wheat the market price will be $60, and many of them will hoard with the expectation of realizing that price. I fully appreciate the difficulties which surround you. I know that the scarcity is great, and that our noble Army must be fed at all hazards, but have not the commissioners overrated the difficulties? Cannot the Army be supplied without inflicting this serious blow upon the currency? Regarding the recent action of the commissioners as more fatal in its consequences than the defeat of our armies in the field, I have taken the liberty of calling your attention to this subject with the earnest hope that their action may be either reversed or essentially modified.

Very respectfully, &amp;c.,

JOHN GOODE, JR.

P. S.—If you deem it inadvisable to change the schedule with reference to the community generally, ought it not to be changed so far as the detailed men are concerned? They were very glad to take the details in order to avoid military service when they supposed they would be required to furnish corn at $4 and wheat at $5 per bushel. So far from rendering service to the Government, they will esteem it an inestimable privilege to be allowed to remain at home and furnish their products at those rates.

J. G., JR.

CAMP FIRST MARYLAND BATTERY,

Near Petersburg, July 20, 1864.

His Excellency JEFFERSON DAVIS,

President of the Confederate States:

SIR: I most respectfully beg leave to call your attention to the within-inclosed application for the discharge of certain members of my company, and the indorsement thereon of the Honorable Secretary of War. The facts I beg leave briefly to state are these:

On the 13th of July, 1861, the company was mustered into the service of the Confederate States for the period of three years or the war; consequently the term of service of the original members expired on the 13th instant. Not being aware of any act [of] Congress which changed the status of Marylanders, my application was made with the firm conviction that these men whom I represented as having faithfully served the term for which they were enlisted would be discharged. That they are subject to the conscription laws of the Confederate States, or that they as residents are liable under the same, I, in all due deference to the opinion of the Honorable Secretary of War, must acknowledge my inability to perceive. Believing, then, that until by representation in Congress or by its legitimate legislation otherwise exercised, the status of these men is changed, that they are entitled to an honorable discharge, I have deemed it proper to address this communication to you in the nature of an appeal, hoping that you, in your sound judgment and discretion, may see fit to reverse the decision of the Honorable Secretary of War.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. F. DEMENT,

Captain First Maryland Battery.

[Indorsement.]

SECRETARY OF WAR:

As this appeal is founded on a construction of laws applicable to the case, I suggest that the record be presented with these letters and referred to the Attorney-General for an opinion.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR:

SIR: I respectfully suggest the importance, in view of the condition of the crops in the Valley, of suspending at least for a time the recent call for the slaves and free negroes of that region to work on fortifications or for other governmental purposes. I also submit whether there is any law authorizing a draft of slaves in Virginia except according to State law and through the Governor and the county courts. The practical fact is that now all the free negroes in the Valley are kept constantly and profitably at work under an efficient police, and that none can be spared without great mischief.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. BALDWIN.

[First indorsement.]

JULY 25, 1864.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY:

This presents the question raised by Mr. Baldwin relative to the power of impressing slaves in West Virginia, on which I should be pleased to have your opinion.

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

[Second indorsement.]

JULY 26, 1864.

SECRETARY OF WAR:

The act of March 26, 1863, allowed impressments generally for the "good of the service" (fourth section). The ninth section prescribed a mode for impressing slaves to labor on fortifications and public works. The tenth section contains a limitation on the impressment of slaves engaged in work on a plantation, except in cases of urgent necessity, prior to 1st of December following.

Under this act impressments for slaves might be made for other purposes than those specified in the ninth section as in other cases, July 16. The supplementary act to the general act above cited contains nothing to affect the question except that no slave employed on a plantation exclusively devoted to the production of grain should be impressed, except in cases of urgent necessity and by the command of the general commanding.

The matter stood thus until the act of 17th of July, referred to by Mr. Baldwin. This act authorizes the Secretary of War to employ slaves for the various military departments for the necessities of the departments, "according to laws regulating impressment of slaves in other cases."

There is some reason to argue that the special regulations in reference to the impressment of slaves in the ninth section of the act of 1863 are those referred to in this section and by this language, but it is hardly a sound construction of the act, except in reference to those slaves who may be wanted for fortifications and to labor on public works, as the act clearly contemplates that impressments of slaves for other service might be made under the general provisions of the impressment act.

Respectfully,

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Secretary of War.

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, July 21, 1864.

I. Officers, contractors of the Government, and their agents are prohibited from purchasing or using wheat for feeding horses.

II. Agents, assessors, and employes on tax-in-kind service who are over forty-five years of age will not be molested by enrolling officers.

III. Paragraph 19, Medical Regulations (1163, Army Regulations), is substituted by the following:

An officer transferring medical supplies will furnish duplicate certified invoices to the officer who is to receive them, who shall furnish to the issuing officer duplicate receipts (specifying articles and quantities), accompanied by a report of the quality and condition of the supplies, and discrepancies, if any, between the articles received and invoiced, a duplicate of which report will also be sent to the Surgeon-General. With their returns of hospital property officers will forward to the Surgeon-General one of the invoices of supplies received by them and one of the receipts for supplies issued. A medical officer who turns over medical supplies to a quartermaster for storage or transportation will forward to the Surgeon-General the quartermaster's receipt for the packages. When a medical officer to whom stores are forwarded has reason to suppose them miscarried, he shall promptly inform the issuing and forwarding officers and the Surgeon-General.

IV. Paragraph 53, Medical Regulations (1197, Army Regulations), is modified as follows:

Every medical officer will report to the Surgeon-General and to the medical director the date when he arrives at a station or when he leaves it, and his orders in the case, stating the date of their reception, their nature, number, date, and source, and at the end of each month, whenever not at his station, whether on service or on leave of absence, and when on leave of absence his post-office address for the next month.

BUREAU OF SUBSISTENCE,
Richmond, July 21, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to ask your attention to the following considerations:

The railroads now have no difficulty in bringing on whatever is offered; such is the report of the Quartermaster's Department. The purchasing commissaries at the south for one or two months past have been unable to collect subsistence. Funds insufficiently furnished do not suffice to furnish outstanding engagements. The people have seen the commissioners of appraisement fixing prices in relation to their view of the depreciation of the currency, thereby aggravated, and producers look for further advance without limit, and only part with their commodities when money is needed for payment of taxes and current expenditure, preferring an appreciating article to a depreciating currency.

Commissaries, therefore, cannot buy even if supplied with funds, and without them cannot impress. The law requires payment after all the preliminary difficulties have been surmounted, but the people South do not pay much regard to notices of impressment, oppose the process, and make other dispositions of their goods, refusing information thereon, while the civil law gives no remedy to unpopular proceedings instituted by officers in these cases. In addition to these difficulties the late schedule of Virginia for July and August will have a reflex action on the other States, and the poor, as usually happens, will be victims, including soldiers' families.

It is not to be expected that the first of a new crop (after that crop has been surely made) should outsell the grain when consumption has exhausted partially the surplus secured.

The estimated fund required by this Bureau to last till the next session of Congress was based on the cost of $2 per ration; its actual cost now is over $6. The means appropriated to meet the requisitions per month are not by one-third of what was the estimated expenditure per month authorized by the last law of Congress making appropriations for this Bureau. The requisitions made and unpaid are over $20,000,000 for this Bureau. Furthermore, the law respecting hospital commutations has created an expenditure needless and enormous, and the purchase of wheat and corn at $30 and $24, respectively, by the Virginia schedule and the reflex action on the other States referred to above calls for an expenditure which astounds and defies calculation.

The producers themselves who have not become blind by avarice see bankruptcy impending and attach no value to money so recklessly spent. The poor cannot buy at all, and the Treasury will be hopelessly wrecked.

As an illustration, in one of the counties I understand the court has appointed a committee to fix the market value of wheat, and they have placed it at $50 per bushel under the stimulus of the commissioners of appraisements, whose decrees have hitherto been below market prices, though in the present schedule they have aimed at reaching them by consulting men competent to deal in such matters, and, I understand, by adding near 50 per cent. to the point concluded on.

This action should be at once revised. The amount of currency in circulation warrants no such prices. The scarcity here has been simply the measure of the difficulty of transportation hither of corn from the South. There has been always enough of breadstuff in the land to feed all the people and the Army. Furthermore, this appraisal in its consequent effects simply gives all the bonded agriculturists exemptions free.

Under present circumstances the Army cannot be subsisted, and immediate action is necessary and obvious.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

L. B. NORTHROP,
Commissary-General.

It is more easy to see the mischief here than provide the remedy. The only true corrective is in a sounder and more acceptable currency.

RICHMOND, VA., July 21, 1864.

The PRESIDENT OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES:

DEAR SIR: Permit me most respectfully to present you with a statement of facts which I deem of intense interest to the Confederacy and to my native State. The three-years' term of service of many of the gentlemen of my State who have served faithfully in the Confederate cause having expired, they have been informed, and believe, that they are entitled to an honorable discharge and are not liable to conscription.

They have come to Richmond for the purpose of obtaining what they deem their right, and have been met with indignity and insult and ordered to report to the Maryland Line. Many of these soldiers wish to recruit their health, or visit their families in Maryland, but none are willing to desert the flag they have so gallantly defended, as well you know. But I fear their sense of justice, if persistently denied, may drive them back to their homes, without your leave and to the degradation of themselves and State.

I most earnestly beg that you will apply such remedy as in your judgment may seem right and just.

And I am, most respectfully and truly, your obedient servant,

J. CALVERT,
Of Maryland.

[First indorsement.]

JULY 22, 1864.

Secretary of War for consideration and remarks.

J. D.

[Second indorsement.]

JULY 24, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the President.

I confess to little sympathy with either the position or spirit of the writer. He, in common with many other Marylanders (of Southern principles and sympathy), seems to take great merit for serving in our Confederate Army, and expects a different measure from what is exacted from our own gallant native soldiers. Now, to my conception, these Marylanders have more wrongs to avenge, more rights to assert, and more motives to service than even our own citizens, and should certainly not less cheerfully and bravely endure the sacrifices and perils of a return to the service. They are, too, in my judgment, clearly embraced in the terms of the law which exacts the service of all residents and plainly contemplates that soldiers in service should be retained.

I know no better description of a resident than one staying indefinitely—for a period which may endure for a long period—as, for instance, till the declaration of peace, and whose return then may be dependent on uncertain contingencies; and I have no hesitation in considering Marylanders here for the war as residents. Every privilege is granted them consistent with service, they being allowed to go to the Maryland Line and select their own companies therein. I know of no insult or offense offered to any, unless it may be that to one (not the writer, but a Mr. Simon, I think), who, in rather an offensive manner, desired to know if the Confederate authorities meant to deny or abuse the privilege of asylum to the refugee, and received rather sharply the answer that men were expected to unite in defending their place of refuge and not, like the feeble and helpless, to be sheltered by the bravery and manhood of others.

TREDEGAR IRON-WORKS,

His Excellency President DAVIS:

MR. PRESIDENT: I take the liberty of representing to Your Excellency that I apprehend there will be great difficulty in carrying out any enterprise for the Government involving large expenditures unless the schedule of prices recently promulgated by the commissioners for the State of Virginia can be greatly modified and very promptly. Our agents at the blast furnaces (at least one of them) write that wheat was freely sold at $10 per bushel prior to the publication of the schedule, and all seem to concur that its effect will be almost to destroy the purchasing value of the currency. As a farmer it is to my interest to get a good price for my wheat, and as a manufacturer the increase in cost of supplies must eventually come out of the Government, so far as it consumes our production, but as citizens we are all interested in sustaining the currency of the country. I am not advised whether, under the law, Your Excellency has control of this matter, but I presume under advice the commissioners, whom I know to be patriotic and intelligent men, will reconsider their action and make it conform to what seems to be the public wish. At all events, as one citizen whose labors for the Government must be very deeply affected by it, I venture to present to you my experience and apprehensions.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH R. ANDERSON.

J. A. S.,

Secretary.

RICHMOND, VA., July 22, 1864.

Hon. HERSCHEL V. JOHNSON,

Sandy Grove, New Barton Post-Office, Ga.:

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 30th ultimo has been received,* and your suggestions on the subject of blockade-running have had from me the consideration which I always give to your opinions or suggestions. My message returning, with objections, the bill passed by Congress was not published until the 8th instant. A copy is inclosed to you, and if you please, it would I think be useful to have it published in some of your papers of widest circulation, as it contains such an exposition of the policy of the Confederate Government on the subject as will correct misrepresentations. While I am unwilling even to seem disobliging to those who have a common purpose with the Confederate Government, I am compelled by its present necessities to use full authority vested in me by Congress in this matter. I am persuaded that after understanding fully the difficulties surrounding any other course, and the obstacles thrown in the way of the Confederate Government by blockade-runners to defeat the legislation of a former session of Congress, you will concur with me in the necessity of not relaxing the regulations established. As soon as Congress had empowered the Executive to control this trade, so as to use our staples with the greatest efficiency and secure our Government against the monopoly and exactions of blockade-runners, these latter attempted to interpose the State authorities between themselves and the General Government, and thus evade the regulations. Charters thus effected are certainly not entitled to more than ordinary consideration. Many persons, not aware of the objects for which it was to be used, sanctioned with their approval the bill which authorized States to charter ships, &c., which I was compelled to veto, as it would have rendered unattainable the objects of previous legislation by enabling owners to place every ship in the trade under such control as to deprive the Confederate Government of their use and of the best means of obtaining the sinews of war. An amendment was passed during the last hours of the session authorizing the exemption from the regulations of vessels already chartered by States. I could not approve this, because it was regarded as substantially liable to the objections presented in a message and sustained by the Congress. I was informed that arrangements had been made for such charters to such an extent that would have deprived the Confederate Government of the benefits it had just begun to realize from the policy of the law in regard to foreign commerce. The ships owned by the States are exempted from the regulation, and the State authorities are not prevented from chartering one-half of every vessel, one-half only being claimed for the service of the General Government. The whole of one vessel affords no greater commercial facilities to the State authorities than the half of two; but to allow them to absorb the entire tonnage of vessels under charters made with them by parties seeking to evade the law, would probably produce embarrassing results, which in the present urgent necessities of our country I cannot consent to encounter. I believe that a full consideration of the question, and of the stringent wants of the Confederate Government, charged as it is with the armament and equipment of large armies, and the solution of the financial difficulties which do not embarrass the States, will satisfy you as to the propriety of my present action. I therefore hope for and much desire to have the approval of your sound practical judgment of the course which I have felt it my duty to pursue.

* Not found.

Very truly and respectfully, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

[Inclosure.]

RICHMOND, VA., June 10, 1864.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA:

I herewith return to your honorable body, with my objections, a bill which originated in the House entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to impose regulations upon the foreign commerce of the Confederate States to provide for the public defense," approved February 6, 1864.

The principal provisions of the bill are unexceptionable, but one of its clauses requires to be guarded by some restriction or modification in order to prevent serious injury to the public service. For a proper understanding of the subject it is necessary to state certain facts, probably unknown to many members, and which have an important bearing on the policy of the Government.

Prior to the passage of the act of 6th of February, 1864, the Government was without any means of making available the cotton and tobacco in its possession for the purchase abroad and importation of supplies essential to the conduct of the war and the efficiency of the Army, other than two or three steamers belonging to the departments, and such steamers belonging to private owners as could be obtained by contract. The prices charged to the Government were too excessive to be borne, while the profits of the private owners were so great as to enable them by the payment of extravagant wages and rewards to secure (against the possibility of competition on the part of the Government) the choice of the pilots, engineers, and other officers available for the service. The large majority of those engaged in the trade were foreigners who, by the aid of the fortifications and defenses established and maintained in our harbors at the Confederate expense, were thus enabled to accumulate rapid fortunes, while depreciating our currency and exhausting our country of the productions which form its most valuable resources for needful supplies during the war. In the beginning these vessels were by consent of the owners made partially available for public purposes, and a portion of their tonnage was reserved for public use, but always at very extravagant rates. Subsequently, however, even these profits were insufficient to satisfy the demands of some of the traders, and attempts were made to enhance gains by bringing State and Confederate officials into competition for the use of the vessels. The evil effects of the system were so apparent that the act of the 6th of February last was passed by your predecessors, and under its provisions regulations were adopted which were intended to guard the public interest, while still offering to private owners adequate profits to induce a continuance of the trade. For some weeks after the adoption of these regulations strenuous efforts were made by parties interested in the business to induce a relaxation of the regulations. Many of the vessels remained unemployed on the allegation of the owners that the terms imposed by the regulations were so onerous as to render impossible the continuance of the business. The regulations remained unchanged, for I was satisfied, from an examination of the subject, that this complaint was unfounded, and that the withdrawal of the vessels was an experiment by a combination among the owners on the firmness of the Government. The result proved the correctness of the view, for, after various attempts to obtain increased advantages, the vessels resumed their voyages. Their number has been largely increased, the ability to export produce and import supplies on Government account has been developed to a greater extent than had been anticipated, and the credit of the Government has been so improved in foreign markets that the quotations for its loan have rapidly advanced.

It is proper here to observe that among the efforts made to induce a change of the regulations, was a warning given to ——— officers of the Government that the owners of vessels could make better bargains with Governors of States than with the Confederate Government, and that if the regulations were not relaxed in their favor, they would transfer their vessels to the Executives of the several States and thus withdraw them from the operations of the regulations.

Reverting to the terms of the act of 6th of February, 1864, it is to be observed that by the fifth section it was provided that nothing in the act "shall be construed to prohibit the Confederate States or any of them from exporting any of the articles herein enumerated on their own account." Holding in view this expression of the legislative will, the regulations authorized by the law were formed and are now in force, based substantially on the following policy:

First. That every vessel owned by private persons shall be considered on every voyage as chartered to the Confederate Government for one-half of her tonnage, outward and inward.

Second. That all private owners of cargo exported from the Confederacy shall bring in return supplies equal to one-half of the proceeds of their expected cargo.

Third. That the several States shall remain at liberty to charter the other half of each vessel, and shall be free to carry out or bring back cargo on that half without being subject to the regulations.

It will be perceived that the policy of these regulations places the several States on an equal footing with the Confederate Government so far as is possible, the only difference being that while the Confederacy imposes a forced charter for one-half of the tonnage in its own favor, it has no authority to do more for the States than to leave the other half subject to their use by charter obtained by consent of the owners.

When these regulations were accepted by the owners of vessels they amounted in substance to an agreement on their part to charter half of their tonnage to the Confederacy on every voyage at the rates stipulated in the regulations.

Now, the bill which I return to the House makes three provisions:

First. That cargo shipped by the States shall not be subject to the regulations, and to this there can be no objection. It merely reaffirms the law as it stands.

Second. That vessels owned by any State and employed for the exclusive use of the State shall not be subject to the regulations; and to this no objection is made, as it places vessels owned by any State on the same footing as vessels owned by the Confederacy.

Third. That vessels chartered by any State for its exclusive use shall not be subject to the regulations; and this is the provision to which objection is made, because it is liable to a construction which would authorize the States, instead of chartering from the owners of vessels in the trade, only that half which remains at their disposal under the regulations, and thus preserving equality with the Confederate Government in this matter, to charter the entire tonnage of the vessels, thus depriving the Confederacy of a resource now at its disposal, and without which very serious embarrassments to the public service would ensue. When it is remembered that the number of private vessels in the service is limited, that the profits of exporting produce are very large, that the temptation to engage in the business will be great, it is easy to perceive how grave might become the consequences of sanctioning a system under which the several States and the Confederate Government would be competitors for contracts with the owners of the vessels engaged in this commerce, and how imminent the risk that the Confederacy would be deprived of this indispensable means of carrying on the war.

I trust therefore that the House will concur in the opinion that the words "or chartered" should be stricken out of the closing sentence of the bill, or that a clause should be added providing "that nothing in this law shall be so construed as to affect the rights of the Confederate States under existing regulations to the use of one-half the tonnage of each vessel engaged in the trade, except such as are owned exclusively by a State."

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, July 23, 1864.

His Excellency Z. B. VANCE,
Governor of North Carolina:

SIR: Your letter of the 5th instant has been received, having been delayed for some time in its coming by the interruption of the postal communications. This Department stated to you in its letter of the 5th of May last the principle which regulated its conduct. That principle is that Congress by the act of the 17th of February last continued in the service all the persons who were then in service for the war who belonged to the class between eighteen and forty-five years; that Mr. Russell was of that class and was not withdrawn from it by any of the sections of the same act or of any previous act.

In your letter of the 19th of May you contested that rule with assumptions and arguments that did not carry conviction to the mind of the Department. If the Department were to admit the assumptions it would admit that the Legislature of North Carolina could withdraw from the military service the troops of that State whenever in their judgment they were necessary for State service. This would be to reverse the rule established in the Constitution of the Confederate States and paralyze the faculties of the Confederate Government for the carrying on of the war. The Department has conceded many things to the government of North Carolina with the view to secure a cordial co-operation of the government and people in the defense of the country in the great struggle in which it is now engaged; but it cannot make a concession of a principle so vital as the one contained in the question under discussion. If Mr. Russell be legally liable to military service he should render it, and the Department cannot, in justice to others similarly situated, bend the law so as to discharge him.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, July 26, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War, Richmond:

SIR: I return herewith the application made in behalf of the State of Virginia to be allowed to control the production of the Matoaca Manufacturing Company at Petersburg, now under contract with this department. The liberal spirit always manifested by the Governor of Virginia in connection with the State resources calls for all the concession that can be made. Still, this appeal is not without its difficulty, especially as the factory referred to is by large measure the most productive establishment within the State. I have aimed for some time, as you are aware, to increase the yield of the cotton and woolen factories to a point which would enable this Bureau to respond to the demands of the other branches of the service. Throughout the extreme Southern States one of the greatest difficulties encountered proceeded from the State Executives who sought to provide for the wants of the soldier and relieve also the necessities of the people. The Governor of Florida controls the only factory within that State, and the Governor of Georgia monopolizes the production of four within that State through details controlled by him.

Governor Watts, of Alabama, has just made an appeal for a similar favor, while now, as all along from North Carolina, owing to the peculiar policy pursued by that State, we draw not a single yard of any kind of material. These encroachments and concessions go far, you will see, to defeat the accomplishment of the object in view. I feel satisfied, too, that it would be better for the State authorities to allow this department to control the factory products so far as they may be needed for military purposes, and abstain, at least as far as home resources are concerned, from their auxiliary efforts to clothe the Army. The necessities of the people and objects of charity must be postponed to the wants of the Army, and as yet we have never secured from the factories as much material as was needed. I have been thus particular because of the quarter from which this call comes, and of the fact that in spite of its merit I feel compelled to suggest that one of the medium-size factories be taken for State purposes, if one must be had, rather than the one applied for.

Your obedient servant,

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

COMMERCIAL AGENCY OF VIRGINIA,
Richmond, May 25, 1864.

His Excellency the GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA:

SIR: Application has been made to every cotton factory in this State and in North and South Carolina and Georgia to which access could be had in the hope that I might be able to obtain cotton cloth and yarns. In Virginia the universal response has been that the whole working capacity of every mill is entirely absorbed by the Confederate Government. In the other States I was assured that the Confederate Government had contracts for the entire produce after their respective States were supplied. The result is that I could not obtain from a single factory a single pound of yarns or yard of cloth, nor even a promise of any in a remote future. The agents of the Matoaca Factory in Petersburg expressed a great desire to supply the State, and are willing to have Virginia substituted for the Confederate Government. The benefit of this arrangement, which needs only the assent of the Secretary of War to this agency, would be immense and enable our very poor to reap the same. Virginia alone has yielded all to the cause. She has not in this struggle thought of herself, and but for her necessities would not now interpose even a wish which might impede or in anywise interfere with the Confederate Government. The loss of this one factory cannot materially affect the Government, while the gain to Virginia would be immense. The whole dependence of this agency now for supplies is upon second hands. This increases the cost to our people. The wants of our people are too well known to you and the Honorable Secretary to say more. I trust that he will not hesitate upon your application to transfer the Matoaca factory to this agency.

Very respectfully,

S. BASSETT FRENCH,

HEADQUARTERS RESERVE FORCES OF VIRGINIA,
July 26, 1864.

General S. COOPER,

Adjutant and Inspector General:

GENERAL: I respectfully submit that the generals of reserves for the several States should be authorized to effect some organization of detailed men for military purposes. It is already settled that these detailed men constitute part of the reserve forces. Eight thousand men have already been detailed in Virginia; besides these there are at least 25,000 applications for detail pending in this State. There are 11,000 cases pending in two Congressional districts alone. Most of these are able-bodied men, and could render good service in emergencies. Now, it will not do, as a general rule, to incorporate these detailed men with the permanent companies of reserves. A reserve company is but seldom stationed for service in the county in which it was raised. Some of them are now serving at a distance of from 100 to 200 miles from their homes. A raid may be made upon a county when the reserve companies of that county are thus absent upon distant service, and there being no officers at home to call them out and embody them, no organization to which they could attach themselves, they could not be made available for local defense. It therefore becomes necessary to organize these detailed men into local companies at home. In this way only can they be armed, drilled, and made fit for service. Besides, if these local companies are formed many able-bodied men who are exempt from all military duty will join them, provided the guarantee is given that the companies will not be called out except in emergencies and for the defense of their own section. I have ascertained that in this way I can raise 300 additional men in Halifax County alone, who could be quickly moved to Staunton River bridge in case of another attack on that point. In obedience to your suggestion I inclose the rough draft of an order which would accomplish the objects indicated.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. L. KEMPER,

Brigadier-General.

[First indorsement.]

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,

July 26, 1864.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

H. L. CLAY,

Assistant Adjutant-General.

[Second indorsement.]

JULY 27, 1864.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL:

The idea is approved. Let the order be thus: All detailed men, including those between eighteen and forty-five years of age, being in the military service, should be arranged into companies and appropriate organizations by the commander of the reserve forces, to whom they will report, and who will command them. They are not expected to be called out except in emergency, occurring in or near the counties of their abode; nor will service be exacted of them beyond that county and those contiguous thereto. All exemptions will be allowed and are invited to enroll themselves with such companies, so as to be prepared to aid in defending their homes when menaced by the enemy.

J. A. S.

[Inclosure.]

All detailed men, including those between eighteen and forty-five years of age, constitute a portion of the reserve forces. Their names will be borne upon the rolls of the companies of reserves organized in the company districts in which they severally reside, and will be called out for active service with their respective companies in and during emergencies; or the said detailed men may, at the discretion of the generals of reserves, be organized into independent companies for local defense and special service. The local companies of detailed men which may be organized under this order will not be required to perform service beyond the limits of the section in which they were severally raised, and will not be called into the field except in and during emergencies for the defense of their respective sections. They will be armed, disciplined, and regularly drilled under the direction of the generals of reserves. All persons capable of bearing arms who are exempt from military service will be allowed to be mustered into the local companies authorized by this order.

NEGROFOOT POST-OFFICE,
Hanover County, Va., July 27, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

DEAR SIR: Since the publication of the last schedule the people of this section are terribly alarmed and pronounce the notes and bonds of the Confederate States of very little value, for if Government will pay five times more now than was paid by the former schedule for wheat they acknowledge a sad state of things, and people argue repudiation must be the ultimate result.

I implore and beg of you to use all your energies to remedy this great evil and likewise to aid all in your power the Secretary of the Treasury to restrict the gold hucksters to reasonable rates for specie, for our currency is certainly better than the Yankee issue, and what prevents a schedule to be fixed for them?

Since the schedule is published physicians have raised their charges from $6 a visit to $45, to keep up with the price of wheat and corn.

The wheat crop here is not larger than the last, but much superior in quality, and prospects for corn very good.

I remain, with much regard, your humble servant,

A. W. NÖLTING.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., July 28, 1864.

His Excellency JOHN MILTON,
Governor of Florida:

SIR: Your letter of the 30th ultimo, relative to the appointment of commissioners to take testimony concerning the losses sustained by the citizens of Florida by the illegal conduct of the military authorities of the Confederate States, also in reference to the controversy between the railroad company and certain officers of the Confederate States, involving a complaint on the part of a circuit court in Florida, and requesting the appointment of a suitable officer for the command of the troops in that State, has been received.

The case you describe in your letter of losses inflicted upon citizens by unauthorized or wanton acts of military authorities has not been provided for by any act of Congress. Congress has not acknowledged its responsibility to such claims, nor have they provided for their examination. They have provided for the sequestration of the property of alien enemies to indemnify those who may suffer from confiscation acts of the United States.

For the perpetuation of testimony in cases in which property has been seized, wasted, or destroyed by the enemy, and slaves captured or abducted by them; for perpetuation of testimony where property has been destroyed, either by the military authorities or by the owners, to prevent its falling into the hands of the enemy, the act of the Provisional Congress, No. 270, specifies the mode in which testimony in these cases shall be taken; and as it is analogous to the case presented in your letter, I would suggest to Your Excellency the adoption of the mode there prescribed. The act of the first session of the First Congress, chapter 5, page 2, relating to the destruction of property by military authorities to prevent its capture, adopts the same act, and directs that the mode of proceeding designated may be pursued in that case.

The persons you have recommended will be appointed commissioners under the act of Congress "for the establishment and payment for a certain description of property taken or impressed for the use of the Army." The title of the act shows that it is limited to a certain class of property (army supplies) for the use of the Army, and the object of the act is to collect testimony of the claims for the consideration of the accounting officers of the Treasury. The claims mentioned in your letter are included in the act. The commissioners can be instructed to receive testimony upon the class of claims you mention, but their report will have to receive the sanction of Congress before the accounting officer could act upon it.

No act of Congress has recognized the liability of the Government for such claims as you mention, nor made appropriation for their payment. The Department sincerely regrets the disagreement, conflict, or irritation between the authorities of Florida and the Confederate States. The patriotism and self-sacrifice of the people of Florida and the cordiality with which their government has supported the common cause are fully recognized by this Department, and it would fail in its duty if it did not avoid as far as practicable affording them any cause for complaint.

Your Excellency must remember the obstructions that have been opposed to the removal of the iron on the Florida Railroad for the completion of the necessary military connections between Florida and Georgia. You can testify to the care that the Department has exercised in obtaining the best opinion and in forming a just conclusion on the subject. You can bear witness to the urgency of the measure for the common defense. Congress has passed an act empowering the Secretary of War, "whenever he shall be of opinion that it is necessary to take private property for public use, by reason of the impracticability of procuring the same by purchase, so as to accumulate necessary supplies for the Army or the good of the service in any locality, he may, by general orders, through the proper subordinate officers, authorize such property to be taken for the public use."

The Confederacy is now in the fourth year of the war. Its ports have been blockaded, and its foreign commerce nearly destroyed. The great highways of commerce in time of peace have been used as military highways in this war. They have been greatly impaired by the use and have suffered from the raids of the enemy. The necessity of taking iron from the less valuable roads in order to repair those more necessary is an imperious necessity. The Department cannot sustain the armies in the field without a resort to this expedient. One would think that honor, patriotism, and public spirit would dictate a proffer to the country of property of the kind in such an emergency, and that shame would prevent the use of any obstructive measures against an object so necessary to the public safety.

The Department has not, for the most part, had its expectations fulfilled in this particular. Injunctions and other forms of delay have been resorted to in order to prevent its action under the act of Congress in such cases by railroad corporations and other representatives of individual interests.

The question arises, by what authority does a circuit court in one of the States issue an injunction against the officers of the Confederate Government who are performing a duty under an act of Congress? Such a power was not supposed to exist in the courts of the States under the Constitution of the United States. The officers of the United States were certainly liable to be sued in State courts for any misconduct or illegality, but their official functions, whether they were judicial or executive officers, were not supposed to be subject to the jurisdiction or control of the State authorities. The consequences of an attempt to exercise such a control would generally be injurious and might be fatal. The Department does not know to what length such an interposition might not be carried.

Are the generals on the field subject to an injunction whenever they establish a camp on private property or infringe the right of individual ownership? Must the collector of taxes submit to restraints of the same kind in their functions of assessing and collecting the revenues? Can the Department on Foreign Affairs be enjoined from negotiating treaties or conceding commercial advantages? Can the Postmaster-General be inhibited or restrained from selecting a particular route for his post road? Are the Executive Departments of the Confederate States, in exercise of their ordinary functions under Confederate laws, subject to the State writs of injunction, mandamus, &c.?

The power to take private property for public use is one of the great powers of Government. In this case its exercise has been delegated to one of the Executive Departments of the Government. Its exercise at this time is invoked by a great public exigency, in which all the Confederate States are concerned, and it is affirmed that the power to prevent or restrain this can be given to an inferior judge of one of the States, an officer in no wise responsible to this Confederacy.

The Department has in a multitude of cases yielded to the exercise of authority by State judicial authorities in cases in which it was exceedingly clear the judgment was erroneous and the power to decide did not exist. In some cases the judges have undertaken to examine a conscript in open court, and to pronounce, in opposition to the Medical Board, that he labored under a physical incapacity for field service, and discharged him; in other cases have withdrawn a soldier from the Army to detail him to manage private business, and the Department would be glad in this case to show its respect for the officers of Florida by yielding to its claims for jurisdiction without any contest; but Your Excellency must see that delays are dangerous, and may be to the last degree pernicious to the interests of the whole Confederacy.

Concession here involves the necessity for concession elsewhere. The great highway in Alabama has been seriously damaged for twenty-five miles. Those of Georgia may be reached by the enemy at any time. Those in Virginia and North Carolina are at all times in peril. The Department must employ all the power that it has to obtain the means to repair mischief and damage.

A just regard for the structure of our Government, for the grave and responsible duties that are imposed upon its members at the present time, and for the imminent danger in which we are all involved, would seem to require that the authorities of Florida should not interfere to embarrass the operations that have been commenced. Such have been the interruptions in postal communication that this Department has not had a copy of the record in the case, and does not know what the allegations of the bill are. As soon as practicable answer will be made to the mandate of the court, but it is urged and hoped that there may be no delay in the prosecution of the necessary construction of the road.

The Department will instruct the officer commanding in Florida upon the subject of the treatment due to the women and children who are referred to in your letter. There will certainly be every disposition not to aggravate to them the severities necessary to repress the crimes of deserters and disloyalists.

The commissioners recommended by you have been approved under the recent act to take evidence in case of irregular impressment, &c. The President has now under consideration the propriety of relieving Col. Caraway Smith by some other officer, who may in some larger measure command your confidence and that of the people of your State.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., July 29, 1864.

General G. T. BEAUREGARD,
Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 19th instant, transmitted through the Adjutant-General, having reference to the numerous deserters from the Federal Army. It is certainly very important to encourage such desertion; but the disposition of deserters is one of the most embarrassing subjects that has come under the consideration of the Department. Whenever they have been turned loose upon parole, exacted of fidelity or good behavior, they have soon proved themselves disaffected or turbulent and been productive in our cities of serious disorders and crimes. Efforts have been made at different points to arrange workshops on which they could be employed on wages; but if near cities, disorderly proceedings have resulted, and if at distant points, the people of the vicinity have become seriously alarmed, and have remonstrated against the effect produced upon the slaves. In some instances in which they have been sent to the owners of mining and manufacturing establishments, the owners of slaves engaged in the same works have withdrawn them or threatened to do so, and the people of the vicinity have insisted on the removal or confinement of the deserters. In several instances some of these very deserters, who, after remaining a short time, have disappeared, have been recognized in raiding parties of the enemy acting as guides. In consequence we have been for the most part obliged to consider deserters as prisoners of war until opportunity offered to allow them to pass across the borders, when that privilege has been accorded them. I cannot, therefore, think it would be judicious for the Government to come under any pledge to subsist and permit them to go anywhere they might please. The utmost that could be done would be an assurance that they would not be injured; that horses or equipments brought by them would be taken at fair valuation, and that when suitable opportunity offered they would be allowed to pass the lines. As far as practicable, the Department has tried to induce among our people living behind the enemy's armies the sentiment which their own safety likewise inculcates—that they should favor the rapid transit of deserters, and facilitate their passage of the rivers on their way to the United States. As far as may be in your power, it might be well to promote such feeling and action on the part of the people in the vicinity of General Grant's army.

Very respectfully,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,

Hon. J. B. BALDWIN,
Staunton, Va.:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 20th instant, urging the importance of restoring the slaves and free negroes of the Valley District to aid in saving the large crop of that section.

I entirely agree with you in reference to the importance of retaining all the labor which can be spared consistently with more pressing and immediate necessities. Recent triumphs of our army in the Valley will probably prevent the necessity of any immediate call on the reserves, and it is hoped they, together with the slave labor, will suffice to secure the crop.

In relation to the power of impressment of slave labor, I have examined the laws and had the benefit of Judge Campbell's counsel on the points presented by you. It seems to me clear, to prevent the operation of the Confederate law, it would be necessary the States should have provided laws of impressment coextensive with the necessity intended to be met. As such is confessedly not the legislation of Virginia, the Confederate law in regard to impressment must, on just principles of construction, be held applicable to the slaves of that State.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

CIRCULAR )	CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
No. 27. )	WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
	Richmond, Va., July —, 1864.

I. Paragraphs IV, V, VI, VII, and VIII, of General Orders, No. 57, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, are herewith made a part of this circular, and the attention of commandants of conscripts and of disbursing officers attached to the conscript service is especially called thereto.*

II. The following additional and special regulations are established in accordance with the above-recited paragraph VIII, of General Orders, No. 57, relative to the disbursement of the appropriation for the conscript service:

1. The quartermaster at the headquarters of the commandant in each State, or the quartermaster designated for that service by the commandant, will make monthly estimates for funds to cover the probable necessary current and extraordinary expenses in that State for the succeeding month. He will also every two months make an estimate of funds for "the pay of officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, and clerks" belonging specially to this service for the period of two months. These estimates will cover all the expenses of the service in the State for the period specified, and will in all cases be approved by the commandant and forwarded in time to secure prompt remittances.

2. As ordinary care and foresight will generally secure timely remittances of funds, the creation of debts by disbursing officers is expressly forbidden except upon the approval and by the order of the commandant of conscripts, who shall in such case set forth the reasons for the creation of such debt. No outstanding debt will be recognized by the Bureau unless it shall have been created in this mode.

3. All accounts or claims for personal expenses of officers or others traveling under special orders of commandants of conscripts shall be examined by the officer giving the order, who, if he approve them, shall order payment by the quartermaster. Accounts or claims for extraordinary expenses shall also be examined by the commandant of the State where they were incurred and shall only be paid on his approval and order.

*For paragraphs mentioned (here omitted), see pp. 517, 518.

4. Detachments without a quartermaster, whether commanded by a commissioned or non-commissioned officer, will be supplied with forage in the mode prescribed by General Orders, No. 135, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, series of 1863.

5. Stationery will be issued in the mode prescribed by paragraph 1014 of the Army Regulations. If, in the opinion of the commandant, a greater quantity than is therein allowed be necessary for the service, he will order the additional issue to be made. The quartermaster at the headquarters of the commandant will provide the necessary amount of stationery for the whole State by requisition on this Bureau.

6. Hereafter no estimates will be sent forward for the commutation value of rations. The Bureau of Subsistence will furnish rations in kind or pay their fixed commutation value, and, if need be, authorize their being purchased in the open market. In this matter officers of this Bureau will observe the rules and regulations of the Bureau of Subsistence.

By order of Col. Thomas P. August, acting superintendent:

His Excellency President DAVIS:

SIR: I am just in receipt of a letter from Maj. Simeon Hart, of San Antonio, Tex., in which he informs me he is ordered by his superior officer to cancel a contract entered into with me on the 16th of December, 1862. As this cancellation is reflecting dishonor upon me and withholding from me my just dues, and which alone will enable me to discharge the honorable engagements I have made for arms, &c., for the Government in this city, and as this act is inflicting upon me the greatest possible injustice, I have by this mail forwarded to Hon. J. P. Benjamin a full statement of the facts of the case, to which I have the honor to refer you. Also referring Your Excellency to Hon. Duncan F. Kenner and L. Q. C. Lamar, and praying that you will cause the cancellation rescinded at once and justice to be done me, which is all I claim; and regretting the necessity that has compelled me to call your attention to this matter, and hoping God will grant us an early peace,

Respectfully returned to the Honorable Secretary of War.

On December 16, 1862, Mr. Nelson Clements addressed a letter to Maj. S. Hart proposing to deliver, on certain terms, at Matamoras, rifles, shoes, &c. The deliveries were to commence within four months after January, 1863. The proposal was accepted by Major Hart. Copy of the correspondence is inclosed. This is the contract of which Mr. Clements speaks. I am not informed that any deliveries have ever been made. The Caroline Goodyear, schooner, freighted with arms by Messrs. Sinclair, Hamilton & Co., under some private arrangement with Mr. Clements, was captured by the French fleet off the Rio Grande, but after much delay released, conditioned not to deliver her cargo at any Mexican port. The cargo was landed at Havana, thrown on the market, and purchased by Colonel Helm. It having been represented to the State Department by its agents abroad that Mr. Clements' efforts to sell his contract were doing great damage to the credit of the Government, and no deliveries having been made within four months after January 1, 1863, the order of which Mr. Clements complains was issued.

HOUSTON, December 16, 1862.

Maj. S. HART:

DEAR SIR: I am willing to proceed to Europe at once and use my means and my best exertions to procure 20,000 stand of muskets or Enfield rifles, with all appurtenances, 5,000 revolvers complete, 5,000 sabers, French army shoes, blankets, gray cloth and trimmings, twilled flannel, twilled flannel shirts, and felt hats, the whole invoice not to exceed $1,000,000. If the 20,000 stand of muskets or Enfield rifles cannot be obtained, 10,000 I agree to furnish, and as many of the other articles as I can obtain, and commence to deliver to you at Matamoras within four months from the 1st of January, 1863, with the agreement and understanding that you pay me on delivery of said invoice 100 per cent. upon invoice cost and charges in cotton on shipboard at the port where said goods are delivered, at 30 cents per pound. It is also agreed that there shall be no delay in furnishing the cotton. The arms are subject to proper inspection.

Very respectfully, yours,

NELSON CLEMENTS.

I accept above proposition to furnish the above-enumerated public stores.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, Va., August 1, 1864.

Hon. COLIN J. MCRAE:

(Care of Fraser, Trenholm & Co., Liverpool, England.)

SIR: I have received the memorandum of agreement made by you with Mr. Alexander Collie, wherein he agrees to purchase, under your instructions, army supplies to the value of £200,000, to be delivered in the Confederate States.

Acting in the spirit of clause 10, I have directed a cargo to be furnished for the Falcon, carrying 1,000 bales, although she brought in supplies only to the value of £3,000, and came in at Wilmington, where we cannot generally supply the cotton under the contract. The price at which we are to receive the goods is low; that is prime wholesale cost, inland carriage, and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. commission, with 50 per cent. upon the prime cost. I suppose that, making due allowance for expenses of transportation, risk, &c., the above will not give Mr. Collie much profit, but his real profit will be in the price of cotton. So long as the sea transportation is adequate to carry all the cotton that can be brought to Wilmington or Charleston on the railroads, and it can be sent out under the regulations, or in our own vessels, it is clearly our interest to realize the proceeds abroad, rather than to use it in our own port. It will be cheaper for us to pay in sterling rather than in cotton. Hereafter we will endeavor to provide the purchasing officer abroad with what is requisite to meet the wants of the War Department, and will narrow and revoke all previous contracts that we can consistently with the good faith of the Government. The present contract does not indicate the port at which the goods are to be delivered, and I have suggested to Mr. Collie that the Government will elect to take delivery at Mobile or Florida ports, immediately accessible to railroad or water navigation, and can there provide the cotton.

The Honorable Secretary of the Treasury says that "it will be impossible to forward it at Atlantic ports; that there are only 14,000 bales of Government cotton east of Alabama, and this quantity is scattered about over the face of the whole country on the plantations."

Under the fifth clause the question has arisen as to whether duties were to be paid by Mr. Collie or the Government. The view taken by the Secretary of the Treasury and by me is that the goods are not the property of the Government, nor at its risk, until they are delivered to its agents in the port; this involves the unlading of the vessels and payment of the duties by Mr. Collie. The coupons of the new 6 per cent. bonds are received for duties; the duties, therefore, will not amount to any large sum.

The ninth section, I fear, conflicts with the regulations, the administration of which rests with the Secretary of the Treasury. But each free cargo of supplies will place us so far in arrears that the question will not be of great importance.

Mr. Watson, agent for Mr. Collie, states that this clause was inserted in lieu of certain commissions, and that if the clause cannot be executed under the law and regulations, then some compensation should be allowed to him. I would like to have your views on this point. Upon application of Mr. Watson I have issued certificates to carry out clause 11 of the contract.

Every effort is now being made to move to the ports cotton to be sent abroad for the Government, and I hope to see the shipments largely increased, and feel more and more impressed with the view that cotton may yet be made the means not only to provide us with all the supplies required, but to improve our currency at home.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War.

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., August 2, 1864.

General B. BRAGG,
Commanding, &c.

SIR: In the course of an explanation covering other matters, Major McCrady, commanding a camp of instruction at Madison, Fla., addressing Lieut. Col. T. A. McDonell, an inspector, under your orders, recapitulates incidentally the history of certain orders issued by the latter to the former and complied with.

Whenever the report of your inspector may be placed in your hands and your convenience may permit, your attention is respectfully invited to the apparent illegality of the particular orders referred to. The occasion suggests also a question to which your consideration is invited as to the propriety of defining to your inspectors their relations to the officers of the conscript service.

The Bureau will receive with attention and respect any suggestions or information communicated by you relative to the operations of the conscript service that may be developed in the inspections of your officers, and suppose that nothing more is desired by yourself.

It cannot, however, recognize those inspectors when not acting under special arrangement or by authority emanating from the President or Secretary of War. The position created for it in its inception by General Orders, No. 82, of 1862—paragraph 4 of section II—and 112 of same series is one which it is not authorized to waive even if it would not lose character and usefulness by so doing.

The Bureau is charged with the conduct of a system the administration of which should be uniform and governed by one head. Upon it rests the primary responsibility before the country of protecting legal rights as well as enforcing lawful obligations. None of its officers should, therefore, be held liable to obey any exceptional orders from an eccentric source and conflicting with the general tenor and system of their instructions. If they are reported and they are found to be in error or derelict, they will be corrected or removed.

The Bureau has its own system for obtaining information by reports and inspections, and also entertains all queries, complaints, or suggestions from any source, civil or military, whether those relate to the general working of its service or to particular questions at issue. All such matter is examined and reported upon to the Bureau for its action by the inspector-general of conscription.

In the particular case which has suggested this letter it would seem that the conscript officer has through deference to supposed authority allowed himself, though knowing it to be wrong, to be made the instrument of violating legal rights. The act of October 11, 1862, for the examination of enrolled men, permits them to be put in the Army through one only channel, referring the question of physical ability to be determined by one only tribunal, and there is no Executive authority in the Confederacy that can prescribe any other process or examination. Colonel McDonell, acting doubtless from zeal for the good of the service, appears to have set aside the law and ordered men into service upon the opinion of a tribunal before which they were sent by his direction and which was without lawful authority to act.

A copy of the letter of Major McCrady is inclosed herewith, and the passages referred to are marked with red ink.* The ultimate return of his letter is requested for the files of this office, as the original will doubtless be transmitted to you with the inspection report.

The third clause of paragraph II, of Circular No. 27, Bureau of Conscription, current series, is amended so as to read as follows:

No other allowances will be made to officers traveling under orders than transportation in kind for themselves and their personal baggage, and $10 per diem, as provided by the act of Congress approved June 4, 1864, published in General Orders, No. 53, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, as act No. 3. The attention of commandants of conscripts and of disbursing officers connected with the enrolling service is specially invited to paragraph V, of General Orders, No. 59, Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, current series, revoking all previous orders giving other or different allowances. All accounts or claims by officers traveling under the orders of the commandants shall be examined by them and approved before payment by the proper disbursing officer.

SIR: The originals of the inclosed I beg to state were forwarded to you on the 2d instant, care of Maj. C. J. Helm, Havana.* Allow me further to state the 4,200 Enfields I delivered to General H. P. Bee on 23d of September, 1863, cost 50 francs, or at the exchange $24.20, and that in payment in cotton at 30 cents per pound. The arms delivered and the Gladiator's cargo do not come within the range of Mr. Slidell's remarks. He supposes a case that could not exist.

In regard to my claim for indemnity from the French, it rested [with] Mr. Slidell to approve it or reject it, and in either case I ask you, sir, if as an individual I have not a right to make a claim, and if I am amenable to the Confederate Government for so doing? I claim that it has no bearing whatever upon my contract, and I only ask if I have faithfully performed my contract that my just dues under my contract shall be turned over to me without further delay, and I here state that I have never even thought, much less attempted, to obtain one mill more than I am justly entitled to, directly or indirectly.

As the letter that has caused this unpleasantness was addressed to you, I have taken the liberty of addressing you also. If [it] should have gone before a different bureau, I trust you will pardon the error; and let me most earnestly request that you will cause it to be brought before His Excellency the President and receive that prompt action which the exigencies of the case require.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NELSON CLEMENTS.

AUGUST 5, 1864.

His Excellency Z. B. VANCE,

Governor of North Carolina, Executive Dept., Raleigh, N. C.:

SIR: I have the honor to invite Your Excellency's attention to the state of things presented below, and to request your co-operation in applying the only remedy which, after much thought and deliberation, has appeared to be either practicable or adequate.

The Wilmington and Manchester Railroad forms an essential link in the great lines of southern railroads, and there is no exaggeration in informing you that the safety of our people and the possibility of maintaining the present contest with success depend, to a great degree, on the preservation of this road in an efficient condition for transportation of troops and provisions, of imported articles, and of cotton for exportation.

The condition of this road, seriously impaired and worn by the constant call upon it for heavy transportation, has long excited apprehension. It is now represented on good authority that unless thoroughly repaired the road must, in three months, become wholly incapable of furnishing the transportation which the interest of the Government requires. In order to repair it ten or fifteen miles of railroad iron are absolutely necessary, and the question whence this amount of iron could best be secured has earnestly occupied the attention of the proper authorities. Under present circumstances it is evident that the only means of keeping up the efficiency of the main track lines of the Confederacy consists in repairing them at the expense of other lines of secondary and merely local importance.

The commissioners, acting on this principle, have recommended that the iron required for repairing the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad be taken from the western terminus of the eastern section of the Wilmington, Charlotte, and Rutherford Railroad from the track, namely, beyond Lawrenceburg, where are situated the workshops of the company.

This opinion is entirely approved by this department, and is indeed recommended by paramount and obvious reasons of convenience.

I respectfully and earnestly urge upon Your Excellency's attention the importance of a cordial co-operation on these measures between the authorities of North Carolina and those of the Confederate States.

It is much to be regretted that in the execution of this measure loss and inconvenience must unavoidably be experienced by a portion of your State. The interests affected will, however, be purely local, and it will be the object of the Confederate Government to act in all such cases as liberally and leniently as is consistent with the attainment of its object.

The Government, therefore, in removing the iron will pledge itself to replace it within six months after a treaty of peace between this country and the United States; to pay interest in the meantime on the value of the iron, estimated at schedule rates, and to protect the interest of the State of North Carolina by such security as may be recommended as fair and just.

Under these circumstances I confidently and earnestly appeal to Your Excellency for assistance and co-operation. It is impossible to overestimate the importance, from a national and military point of view, of a thorough repair of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad. It will, I think, be found equally impossible to effect this by any course other than the one recommended above. The highest interests of our Army and our Government are involved in the question, and it is in my opinion only by the united action of State and Confederate States authorities that danger of a permanent and disastrous interruption of railroad communication can be effectually obviated.

I respectfully ask for a prompt expression of your views, and am,
Yours, very respectfully,

J. F. GILMER,
Major-General, &c.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 63. } Richmond, August 6, 1864.

I. All detailed men (including those between eighteen and forty-five years of age) will report to and be commanded by the generals of reserves in the States to which they respectively belong, who will organize them into companies and regiments. It is not anticipated that they will be called out except in emergencies occurring in or near the counties of their residence, nor will service be exacted of them beyond those counties and those contiguous thereto. All exemptions are allowed and are invited to enroll themselves with such companies, so as to be prepared to aid in defending their homes when menaced by the enemy.

II. Officers and soldiers into whose hands captured colors fall are prohibited from presenting them to individuals.

III. Paragraph V, General Orders, No. 59, current series, is not intended to apply to officers and bonded agents who are continuously engaged in special service by order of the chief of the bureau to which they belong and whose duties require them to travel from place to place. In such cases personal expenses are allowable in lieu of commutation of fuel, quarters, and rations. Accounts of expenses will be vouched and paid by the chief of the bureau from which the orders issue, and transportation will be furnished in kind.

IV. So much of paragraph II, General Orders, No. 55, current series, as includes commissioned officers in the operation of the "Act to promote the efficiency of the cavalry of the Provisional Army, and to punish lawlessness and irregularities of any portion thereof," is revoked.

V. General Orders, No. 93, 1863, is hereby revoked.

VI. Paragraph I, General Orders, No. 49, 1863, is amended as follows:

Surgeons in charge of hospitals will have the military clothing of deceased soldiers washed before turning it over to the quartermaster for reissue. The appraisement of such clothing will not exceed the prices established in general orders.

VII. Great irregularities in the observance of the orders regarding the collection of the tax in kind having existed, attention is called to paragraphs I, II, III, and IV, General Orders, No. 48, current series, which are repeated and enjoined upon the Army. Those orders are not intended to authorize any quartermaster or commissary to establish tax depots in organized tax districts, but to allow them, in cases where exigency requires it, to collect from producers in Government wagons. The supplies already collected at the tax depots are always transferable to them upon requisition. Attention of quartermasters and commissaries is specially called to this order. A violation of it is an outrage to the tax-payer, and the efficiency of the tax-in-kind service demands that offenders against it shall be held to strict accountability.

By order:

W. D. MILLER, Esq., or

Hon. J. H. REAGAN,

Richmond:

DEAR SIR: Our mutual friend, Mr. J. D. Shaw, has been kind enough to give me the accompanying lines to you, and you can do me a special favor and serve the Government at the same time by seeing that my matter is brought before the proper department and acted upon at once. On the 16th of December, 1862, I entered into a contract with Maj. Simeon Hart at Houston, Tex. This contract was approved by General J. B. Magruder, and by letter by General H. P. Bee, at whose urgent request I was induced to come. I came over and arrived here immediately; arrived the last day of March, 1863. On the 16th of May I sent out the Caroline Goodyear with 7,000 Enfield rifles and 2,840 Tower muskets. This vessel anchored off the Rio Grande on the 4th of July, 1863, and had no more than anchored before she was boarded by a boat's crew from the French war steamer Panama, and notwithstanding the assurance that her cargo was for the Confederate Government, she was forcibly taken possession of and taken to Vera Cruz. On the 23d of September the Love Bird, loaded with 10,000 Enfields, arrived, and after discharging 4,200 she was captured by another French war steamer and taken to Vera Cruz. On the 29th of June the steamer Gladiator arrived there—a vessel that I had loaded with blankets, flannels, flannel shirts, army shoes (over 20,000 pairs), gray army cloth, and trimmings, an invoice amounting in all to over £45,000. Subsequently, and which arrived about November, the Nancy Dawson, with 2,500,000 Enfield cartridges, pistols, guns, &c. The vessel was seized by the Mexican Government and ammunition all used and destroyed by them. Under my contract I was to deliver these articles at Matamoras, where I was to be paid in cotton at 30 cents per pound, and when I made the contract cotton could then be bought in any quantity from 15 to 20 cents, currency.

To make my matter as brief as possible I beg to state that I did in good faith execute my entire contract to the letter; and although my contract distinctly expresses that there shall be no delay in delivering the cotton, and though I did deliver 4,200 Enfield rifles on 23d of last September, and the entire amount of Gladiator's cargo has been in readiness since the end of June, one year ago, yet I have had but 260 bales of cotton turned over to my agent, Mr. A. S. Ruthven, all told. When I purchased the cargo of the Gladiator I gave my note for £9,000 for the faithful performance on my part, and the parties became so much dissatisfied that in April last I got the Hon. C. S. Morehead, of K. S., to go out to assist Mr. Ruthven in bringing it to a close, when to my utmost astonishment per last mail I received a notice from Major Hart that by order of his superior officer my contract with him for supply of arms, &c., was canceled, and that this was done upon a letter of Mr. John Slidell to Hon. J. P. Benjamin. This is doing me the greatest possible injustice. First, it is reflecting dishonor upon me, and second, it is withholding from me the just amount that is due me for arms, &c., already delivered, and without which I cannot extricate myself. I respectfully refer you to Hon. J. P. Benjamin, to whom I have fully written by this mail, and accompanied it with such vouchers as must place my matter beyond a question. Mr. Slidell supposes, first, that I had bought the cargo of [the] Caroline Goodyear for cash, which is not a supposable case, for I did not agree to purchase for cash, but distinctly told Major Hart and General Bee I could not. He then supposes the arms had been delivered, which is not even a supposable case, as they were captured, and never have been delivered, and I never have asked the Government to pay for them. I don't know what has induced Mr. Slidell to write such a letter, as my only correspondence with him was in regard to obtaining an indemnity from the French Government for their unjustifiable seizure.

Judge Reagan, if I have in any way, directly or indirectly, attempted to get from the Government one mill more than I am justly entitled to I will forfeit my whole claim, and I positively assure you I never have. Any insinuation to the contrary is the basest calumny. I have faithfully performed my contract and my duty, and I wish the Government to comply on their part, and I am ruined unless they do so at once. Please do me the favor to call upon Hon. J. P. Benjamin and see my letter* and vouchers, and if you are then satisfied that I have complied faithfully on my part, do me the special favor to have it brought before the proper department and cause an order to be issued and forwarded to Texas to rescind the canceling of my contract, and request that an order accompany it to immediately deliver me the cotton for the arms delivered and for the Gladiator's cargo. I have also written the Hon. D. F. Kenner and Col. L. Q. C. Lamar, but it must have early attention or the result will be not only most injurious and ruinous to me, but injurious to the Government. Maj. J. F. Minter is here and will write General E. Kirby Smith at once for me. If you will see justice done me in this matter you will confer a lasting favor, which it will ever afford me pleasure to reciprocate.

With esteem and regard, I am, your friend and obedient servant,
NELSON CLEMENTS.

P. S.—I beg to say that so far as the price of rifles is concerned I have sent the Hon. J. P. Benjamin the certificate of the accredited agent of the Confederate Government in London, Maj. Caleb Huse, that the price I paid was a fair and correct price, and those I delivered cost 10 per cent. less.

General orders from the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office have directed quartermasters and commissaries who receive tax in kind directly from producers to give receipts "on account of tax in kind" at the end of every month for the produce thus received during the month, to the quartermaster on tax-in-kind service in the Congressional district where the collection is made, or in his absence to the controlling quartermaster of the State, and to state in said receipts the full name and county of the tax-payer. These instructions have not generally been followed, and in many cases have been entirely neglected. Commissaries and quartermasters will be held to strict compliance with them, both for collections already made, which should be at once receipted for if not already done, and for the future. Compliance is indispensable to the settlement of the accounts of the quartermaster of the Congressional district and of the assessor and collector.

Receipts of quartermaster-sergeants and other agents given to producers are unjust impositions on them; they are worthless for the future. The receipts of quartermasters and commissaries and regular tax agents are the only good vouchers.

The opinion seems to prevail that tax-in-kind supplies may be used wastefully and without accountability. This is error. Officers are hereby notified that they will be held to the same accountability for this property as for that received from any other source.

COLUMBUS, GA., August 8, 1864.

Hon. J. A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: You will perceive by the inclosed resolution that the undersigned have been appointed a committee to correspond with you upon the subject embraced in the resolution. We have the honor to call your attention to the matter, and beg leave to submit the following explanations to your consideration:

First. The grading of the road is nearly completed, and may be put in order for the road bed with the labor of 500 hands in less than sixty days. It runs through a rich and populous county, where there are a large number of slaves whose labor could be contracted by the Government without serious loss or inconvenience to their owners at this season of the year.

Second. The iron could be readily obtained by the Government by impressing the rails of certain roads which are of little public importance and of no value to the Government at this time, viz, the road from Milledgeville to Eatonton, twenty-two miles, and the branch road from Union Point to Athens, about twenty miles. These roads belong to the richest corporations in the South, and they could well afford to give up these short roads for a great public benefit.

Third. The early completion of the road in question would be of very great importance to the Government, and is, in fact, a matter at the present of military necessity. The only channel of communication at present between Montgomery and the east embraces the Montgomery and West Point road, whose gauge is different from all the other roads connecting with it, and, of course, in times of pressing necessity could not be aided by the rolling-stock of other roads. Its capacity is too limited for the purposes of the Government, and it is at all times much more liable to be destroyed by the raiding parties of the enemy than the road from Montgomery to Union Springs and thence to Columbus. Witness the late destruction of over twenty-five miles of it by Rosecrans' [Stoneman's?] party and the serious inconvenience now experienced by the Government on account of it.

Fourth. The M[ontgomery] and Eufaula road connects at Union Springs with the Mobile and Girard road, and is of the same grade, and which can and will be connected with the Muscogee road at this place, and thus form a continuous chain from Montgomery to Macon, the distance from Montgomery to Columbus via Union Springs being less than 100 miles. The inclosed letter from the secretary of the Montgomery and Eufaula road expresses the readiness of the company to co-operate with the Government in the proposed completion of their road. We agree with the opinion of the late meeting of the stockholders of the Mobile and Girard road that this matter is one of great importance to the Government, and we invite the serious attention of the War Department to it. We would suggest that, if any doubt be entertained by the authorities at Richmond as to the policy or necessity or the practicability of the measure, that a special agent be sent out to examine into it and report to the Department the facts and merits of the proposition.

We are, respectfully, your obedient servants,

[Second indorsement.]

ENGINEER BUREAU,
September 14, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the Honorable Secretary of War.

A letter was promptly written to Hon. Alfred Iverson stating that the views expressed by himself and others in relation to the Union Springs and Montgomery Railroad connection were being duly considered, but that it was feared that the pressing need for all available railroad iron to be used on main trunk lines in repairs would prevent this Bureau from recommending favorable action.

J. F. GILMER,
Major-General and Chief of Bureau.

[Inclosure No. 1.]

Whereas, we consider the speedy completion of the road from Union Springs to Montgomery, now nearly completed, as of vital importance to the country, especially whilst the war continues, in the transportation of troops and army supplies, and which no other present channel of conveyance can furnish; and whereas, the grading of said road is now nearly completed, and with proper efforts might be finished in sixty days at the farthest; and whereas, it is now impracticable for the company to procure the iron necessary for the road, and that article can only be supplied to the Confederate States: It is therefore

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to open a correspondence both with the directors of said road and with the Confederate Government to urge such measures as may be required to accomplish the above important object.

The above was passed at a meeting of the stockholders of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company held July 6, 1864. The committee appointed above are Hon. Alfred Iverson, Col. Homer Blackman, J. L. Mustian, esq., Thomas H. Dawson, esq.

GENERAL: There being at present several of those employed on our secret service lines who have no defined position in the service, being but volunteers, receiving no pay, and over whom we possess in fact no power or right to control, I respectfully request that such authority may issue from your department as will empower me to direct that such men under the employ of the Signal Bureau who belong to no company or command shall immediately join some military organization with the understanding that they be at once detailed for assignment to the same duty on which they may be at the time employed. Many of them are excellent and efficient men and could not easily be replaced. Their services were accepted by Major Norris, who retained them simply as volunteers. Should they fall into the hands of the enemy we could not demand their exchange and they are not responsible to the chief of bureau, or any one else having the power, if they at any time deem it best to leave the corps, however necessary their services might be at the time, nor could we hold them responsible for disobedience of orders. Besides, if these men are liable to conscription, it might appear that this office was in a manner harboring them unlawfully. I would most respectfully suggest that the Bureau be furnished with the views of the department on the subject at as early a day as practicable.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. N. BARKER,

Captain and Chief of Signal Corps.

ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR GENERAL'S OFFICE,
August 12, 1864.

The law organizing the Signal Corps makes no provision for the enlistment or assignment in it of private soldiers. It has been the practice to detail these from the Army or Conscription Bureau, as the public service required. I see no objection to the plan proposed by Captain Barker.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War:

H. L. CLAY,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The assignment of such disbanded conscripts is conformable to rule and will probably promote subordination. No objection is entertained.

CIRCULAR }
No. 29. }

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., August 9, 1864.

I. Circular No. 26 is hereby revoked. Hereafter all applications for detail made to the local enrolling officer will, after investigation, be forwarded with report to the district enrolling officer. If the district enrolling officer approves the application he will grant a furlough for sixty days.

The reasons for approval will be stated in full on a separate sheet and the papers forwarded through the commandant for the State, who will also express his opinion to this office for final action.

If the district enrolling officer disapproves the application he will indorse in full the reasons for his disapproval and return the papers to the local enrolling officer, who will immediately forward the parties to the camps of instruction, to be at once assigned to commands in the field entitled under existing orders to receive conscripts.

An appeal from the decision of the district enrolling officer can be taken, which should be forwarded through the regular channels to this Bureau for its action. If an appeal is not taken the papers will be kept on file in the office of the local enrolling officer.

Upon transmitting the appeal commandants will state the company and regiment to which the appellants have been assigned. This course will be pursued in all cases whether the applications have been made previous or subsequent to the receipt of this circular.

II. Where, in the course of transmission under previous instructions, the papers have passed from the district enrolling officer to the commandant, action similar to that herein directed will be taken by the commandant—that is, a furlough for sixty days will be granted (in case of approval), when the papers will be forwarded; or the party will be immediately assigned in case of disapproval, when the papers will be kept on file unless an appeal is taken.

III. The furlough to be granted by the district enrolling officer is in the nature of an indulgence, the object being to protect the parties during the delay, and it is revoked by the action of the Bureau.

By order of Col. T. P. August, acting superintendent:

THOMAS GOLDTHWAITE,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

HEADQUARTERS CONSCRIPT SERVICE,
Augusta, August 9, 1864.

Brig. Gen. JOHN S. PRESTON,
Superintendent Bureau of Conscription, Richmond, Va.:

GENERAL: I regret the necessity that impels me again to address you upon the financial embarrassments of the enrolling service in this State. It is now five or six months since the officers and employés in the department have received a dollar of their pay. Most of them, compelled by regulation to serve in counties remote from their homes, are entirely dependent for support upon what the Government pays them. Many of them, especially those on duty in the northern portion of the State, are remote from any Government commissary, and cannot draw their rations if they would, and in the present scarcity of transportation it is perfectly impracticable to send rations to them. Their creditors have been so often disappointed by reason of the delay in receiving their pay they now refuse longer to credit them for even the commonest necessities of life.

Again, if Circular No. 28, current series, from the Bureau, is to be strictly enforced, and no discretion allowed in cases of extraordinary expenses, officers under orders cannot be sent into counties not penetrated by railroads. In many counties horses and mules cannot be had at any price, and nowhere can they be had for the per diem allowance of an officer. Thirty and forty dollars per day is the common price for a horse and conveyance of any sort. Many officers, having no means of their own, cannot pay such charges, and consequently cannot go; and I do not think it fair to require those more fortunate to expend their own means without hope of being reimbursed by the Government they go to serve. These difficulties are especially apparent in the case of the medical officers and district enrolling officers, who are required at stated intervals to visit the several counties of their respective districts where there are no quartermasters and no railroads, and where they are compelled to hire private conveyances at exorbitant prices.

I have found that constant inspection is essential to the efficiency of the service, and I have hitherto, by myself and by inspecting officer, maintained a close scrutiny of the acts of subordinates. It is of the last importance that this be kept up, but if officers are only to be allowed $10 per diem and transportation in kind this inspection must be abandoned in the counties not served by railroads.

I write you thus earnestly, general, because I see and feel the evils of which I write, and I trust you will use your influence to devise some means to overcome these difficulties.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. M. BROWNE,
Colonel and Commandant.

[Indorsement.]

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, August 19, 1864.

Respectfully referred to the Honorable Secretary of War for instructions.

The evils and inconveniences complained of by Colonel Browne are fully recognized at this Bureau. It is very certain that the per diem of $10 will not in the greater number of cases cover actual and unavoidable expenses even where Government transportation is furnished.

The paragraph (III) of General Orders, No. 63, current series, does not, it is thought, provide a remedy, for it is believed to be intended for officers on special service under orders, while members of medical boards and enrolling officers attached to this Bureau while traveling through their respective districts are engaged in their regular and legitimate duties, and as local officers are not entitled to their personal expenses on such journeys, but only to commutation for quarters and fuel at the fixed local rates. It is felt that this may be a harsh rule, but under existing orders and usages it appeared to be the only one to be adopted.

An extension of the provisions of that paragraph to medical, enrolling, and other officers of this Bureau while traveling from place to place under its orders or in the discharge of their regular duties might go far to remedy the evils complained of, but it is respectfully urged that the efficiency and convenience of the peculiar service of the Bureau of Conscription would be more completely secured by authorizing the superintendents to fix the allowances to all such officers while in the discharge of their respective duties upon consideration of all the local and other circumstances of the case.

SIR: The magnitude of the proposition of Captain Williams herewith presented induces me to yield to his request to lay it before you for consideration.

Among the many Missourians who are dedicating their energies to the destructive service he is pre-eminent for inventive power, practical skill, and indomitable energy. His design has been long matured, but he has withheld it until the conduct of the enemy has removed the only obvious objection to the mode of warfare embraced in his plan. I know him well. In Missouri he was engaged in the construction of her railroads, and here, laboring with small means and against formidable obstacles, he devised and perfected a submarine apparatus which finally received the official indorsement of the Board of Engineers.

The request that others who may have used the inventions of the writer should be required to show their title to claim the device employed as their own is reasonable and will be remembered.

In my judgment, only ships of war and transports carrying troops, munitions of war, or supplies to armed forces are legitimate objects of the attacks contemplated. Passenger ships or those in ordinary commerce should not in general be assailed in so destructive a way, as the main aim of legitimate war in such cases is to capture, not destroy.

Only in very exceptional cases, where some special cause for destruction existed and would morally justify, should such fatal agencies be employed against passenger or commercial vessels.

[Inclosure.]

His Excellency JEFFERSON DAVIS,
President of the Confederate States:

SIR: The undersigned respectfully submits a plan devised and matured by him for the destruction of the transports, supplies, and commerce of the enemy, which, it is believed, needs only the patronage and encouragement of the Government to be carried into successful execution.

This plan aims at a wider destruction of the commerce of the enemy than can ever be reached by our armed privateers, and goes beyond the scope of the act of Congress which provides compensation for the destruction of the armed vessels of the enemy. It strikes not only at the armaments of the Federal Government and their transports carrying supplies and men, at depots of supplies and munitions of war, but at all commerce of the enemy lying in the ports of the United States, in transit from one port of the United States to another, in transit from a port of the United States to any port of the Confederacy, and at all commerce of the enemy on the high seas in transit from any port in the world.

This plan was designed and perfected by the undersigned as early as 1861, and consists of shipping on board of the enemy's vessels and into depots of supplies incendiary apparatus or torpedoes, to set fire or explode at a given time, it being a modification and adaptation for such purposes of the same torpedo designed to be used with the submarine apparatus designed by him, and it was reduced to form and practicability by the undersigned by actual models, copies of which are now in the Patent Office in this city.

About four months since, being compelled of necessity to let his modes of operation be known here, parties (as the undersigned is informed and believes) are now seeking to anticipate me before the departments by asking privileges and compensation, who obtained the plans of operating from mine, to my certain knowledge. Without models or anything to show how their work is done, they have only crude ideas of the scheme, unless they have procured others to do the work for them, for they are wholly incapable of making a mechanical invention of the kind. As these parties design to anticipate me before the departments, I respectfully ask that all parties be required to produce their apparatus to be used and furnish the usual evidence of priority before the compensation is paid; otherwise there will be no protection to the inventor or the scientific or mechanical producer, who is the ground-work and soul of the service, if he can thus be forestalled by men who have the address and influence to anticipate without the brains necessary to originate.

Models of the plans of the undersigned are ready for the scrutiny of the departments, and he is prepared to give a full explanation of the modes of executing it at such time as the Government may appoint.

The act of Congress now in force, aided by regulations of the departments, giving compensation for the destruction of the armed vessels of the enemy and their transports may cover a portion of this plan. It is presumed that the Government will probably regard every vessel of the enemy plying from a Federal port to any port of the Confederacy or to the mouths of rivers of the Confederacy as a "transport" within the meaning of the construction of the departments. In the actual condition of our coast the only apparent function to be performed by such vessels would be the transportation of men, supplies, or munitions of war. Commerce as such can scarcely obtain between such ports. Would the same vessel destroyed in the harbor of New York or Boston, freighted with munitions of war or having on board soldiers or marines for transportation, be an armed vessel or transport within the meaning of the act or under any regulations of the departments? Would a vessel of the enemy in transit from a foreign port to a Federal port, freighted in whole or part with munitions of war or having on board foreign mercenaries to be organized on arrival at a Federal port into the military service of the United States, be regarded as a "transport" under the construction of any privileges or inducements which may have been granted? However these questions may be answered by the Government, it is manifest that the existing legislation of Congress cannot furnish compensation for the destruction of the vessels of the enemy engaged in peaceful commerce in port or on the high seas. Additional legislation is necessary to furnish an adequate inducement to the adventurous spirits of the Confederacy who are willing to strike the vessels and commerce of the enemy wherever found and of whatever character.

If the Executive authority of the Confederacy shall approve this mode of assailing the commerce of the enemy and determine to use its proper constitutional influence over the Legislative Department to procure the necessary legislation to obtain compensation, the individuals who are ready and anxious to do the work will set about it at once, without waiting for the action of Congress.

In so far as the plan aims at the destruction of the vessels and commerce of the enemy in transit from a foreign port, while the destruction would take place only on the high seas, the initial steps toward it would be taken while the vessel lay in port. The objection may arise that such act would be a violation of the laws of neutrality. It is not the design of the originator of this plan, nor of those who will execute it, to involve the Confederacy in any violation of the rules which regulate the conduct of neutral nations toward each other. For any act done in the port of a neutral nation the protection of this Government will not be asked or claimed. The individuals engaged on this enterprise take quod hoc all the risk of the peril. If in moving against the enemy they do any wrong to a neutral nation, they hold themselves amenable to the chances of such penalty as that nation may rightfully inflict. They do not ask this Government to be responsible for their action in such cases.

If it be objected that the execution of the plan may involve the possible life or lives of non-combatants, the answer is twofold: First, the loss of life is not an inevitable result, as the history of the sea casualties demonstrates, and the possible loss of life to non-combatants by armed privateers assailing the peaceful commerce of the enemy does not render unlawful that mode of warfare. But the second and full answer to the objection is that against an enemy who persistently repudiates the rules of civilized warfare retaliation is a moral right, having its sanction in the opinion of mankind. By the law of nations a nation who refuses to be governed by the code absolves the adversary from all obligations to its rules.

The information which is respectfully solicited is as to what classes of vessels and what description of property may be considered liable to destruction by such means, and the inducement which will be given.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. WILLIAMS,
Civil and Marine Engineer.

CLIFTON HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS, CANADA WEST,
August 11, 1864.

Hon. J. P. BENJAMIN,

Secretary of State Confederate States of America:

SIR: Since my last dispatch I have visited all the points in Canada at which it was probable any escaped prisoners could be found. I have circulated as widely as possible the information that all who desired to return to the discharge of their duty could obtain transportation to their respective commands within the Confederacy. For this purpose I have made arrangements with reliable gentlemen at Windsor, Niagara, Toronto, and Montreal to forward such as from time to time may require this assistance as far as Halifax, from which point they will be sent by Messrs. Weir & Co. to Bermuda. The system thus organized will provide for the return of any ordinary average of escaped prisoners. If, however, any contingency should lead to the accumulation of a large number in Canada, some special arrangement like that contemplated when I left Richmond would be required. As events (to which it is scarcely prudent to refer) may soon transpire which would render this contingency by no means remote or improbable, I have deemed it my duty to defer my departure for a time. I feel the more confidence in my judgment from the fact that it has the concurrence of Messrs. Clay and Thompson. I have availed myself of the interim of every opportunity to co-operate with those gentlemen, and think that I have been able to render useful service. My present expectation is to return in September. A distinct communication from Mr. Clay and myself is sent by this mail.

With the highest respect, &c.,

JAMES P. HOLCOMBE.

SAINT CATHERINES, CANADA -WEST,

August 11, 1864.

Hon. J. P. BENJAMIN,

Secretary of State Confed. States of America, Richmond, Va.:

SIR: I deem it due to Mr. Holcombe and myself to address you in explanation of the circumstances leading to and attending our correspondence with Hon. Horace Greeley,* which has been the subject of so much misrepresentation in the United States, and, if they are correctly copied, of at least two papers in the Confederate States.

We addressed a joint and informal note to the President on this subject, but as it was sent by a messenger under peculiar embarrassments it was couched in very guarded terms and was not so full or explicit as we originally intended or desired to make it. I hope he has already delivered it and has explained its purpose and supplied what was wanting to do us full justice.

Soon after the arrival of Mr. Holcombe, Mr. Thompson, and myself in Canada West it was known in the United States and was the subject of much speculation there as to the object of our visit. Some politicians of more or less fame and representing all parties in the United States came to see Mr. Holcombe and myself—Mr. Thompson being at Toronto and less accessible than we were at the Falls—either through curiosity or some better or worse motive.

They found that our conversation was mainly directed to the mutual injury we were inflicting on each other by war, the necessity for peace in order to preserve whatever was valuable to both sections, and probability of foreign intervention when we were thoroughly exhausted and unable to injure others, and the dictation of a peace less advantageous to both belligerents than they might now make if there was an armistice of sufficient duration to allow passion to subside and reason to resume its sway.

In the meantime Mr. George N. Sanders, who had preceded us to the Falls, was addressing, directly or indirectly, his ancient and intimate party friends and others in the United States supposed to be favorably inclined, assuring them that a peace mutually advantageous to the North and the South might be made, and inviting them to visit us that we might consider and discuss the subject. He informed us that Mr. Greeley would visit us if we would be pleased to see him. Believing from his antecedents that he was a sincere friend of peace, even with separation if necessary, we authorized Mr. Sanders to say that we would be glad to receive him. Mr. Greeley replied, as we were told, through Mr. Jewett, who had been an active and useful agent for communicating with citizens of the United States, that he would prefer to accompany us to Washington City to talk of peace, and would do so if we would go. We did not then believe that Mr. Greeley had authorized this proposal in his name, for neither we nor * See Series III, Vol. IV.

Mr. Sanders had seen it in any telegram or letter from Mr. Greeley, but had it only from the lips of Mr. Jewett, who is reported to be a man of fervid and fruitful imagination and very credulous of what he wishes to be true. Notwithstanding, after calm deliberation and consultation we thought that we could not in duty to the Confederate States decline the invitation, and directed Mr. Sanders to say that we would go to Washington if complete and unqualified protection was given us.

We did not feel authorized to speak for Mr. Thompson, who was absent, and we moreover deemed it necessary that he or I should remain here to promote the objects that the Secretary of War had given us and another in charge.

Mr. Sanders responded in his own peculiar style, as you have seen, or will see by the inclosed copy of the correspondence, which was published under my supervision.* We did not expect to hear from Mr. Greeley again upon the subject, and were greatly surprised by his note from the U. S. side of the Falls, addressed to us as "duly accredited from Richmond as the bearers of propositions looking to the establishment of peace."

How or by whom that character was imputed to us we do not know. We suspect, however, that we are indebted for the attribution of the high and responsible office to Mr. Jewett, or to that yet more credulous and inventive personage, Dame Rumor. Certainly we are not justly chargeable with having assumed or affected that character, or with having given any one sufficient grounds to infer that we came clothed with any such powers. We never sought or desired a safe-conduct to Washington, or an interview with Mr. Lincoln. We never proposed, suggested, or intimated any terms of peace to any person that did not embrace the independence of the Confederate States. We have been as jealous of the rights, interest, and power of our Government as any of its citizens can be, and have never wittingly compromised them by act, word, or sign. We have not felt it our duty to declare to all who have approached us upon the subject that reunion was impossible under any change of the Constitution or abridgment of the powers of the Federal Government. We have not dispelled the fond delusion of most of those with whom we have conversed—that some kind of common government might at some time hereafter be re-established. But we have not induced or encouraged this idea. On the contrary, when obliged to answer the question—"Will the Southern States consent to reunion?"—I have answered:

Not now. You have shed so much of their best blood, have desolated so many homes, inflicted so much injury, caused so much physical and mental agony, and have threatened and attempted such irreparable wrongs, without justification or excuse, as they believe, that they would now prefer extermination to your embraces as friends and fellow-citizens of the same government. You must wait till the blood of our slaughtered people has exhaled from the soil, till the homes which you have destroyed have been rebuilt, till our badges of mourning have been laid aside, and the memorials of our wrongs are no longer visible on every hand, before you propose to rebuild a joint and common government. But I think the South will agree to an armistice of six or more months and to a treaty of amity and commerce, securing peculiar and exclusive privileges to both sections, and possibly to an alliance defensive, or even, for some purposes, both defensive and offensive.

If we can credit the asseverations of both peace and war Democrats, uttered to us in person or through the presses of the United States, our correspondence with Mr. Greeley has been promotive of our wishes. It has impressed all but fanatical Abolitionists with the opinion that there can be no peace while Mr. Lincoln presides at the head of the Government of the United States. All concede that we will not accept his terms, and scarcely any Democrat and not all the Republicans will insist on them. They are not willing to pay the price his terms exact of the North. They see that he can reach peace only through subjugation of the South, which but few think practicable; through universal bankruptcy of the North; through seas of their own blood as well as ours; through the utter demoralization of their people, and destruction of their Republican Government; through anarchy and moral chaos—all of which is more repulsive and intolerable than even the separation and independence of the South.

* Not found.

All the Democrat presses denounce Mr. Lincoln's manifesto in strong terms, and many Republican presses (and among them the New York Tribune) admit it was a blunder. Mr. Greeley was chagrined and incensed by it, as his articles clearly show. I am told by those who profess to have heard his private expressions of opinion and feeling, that he curses all fools in high places and regards himself as deceived and maltreated by the Administration. From all that I can see or hear, I am satisfied that the correspondence has tended strongly toward consolidating the Democracy and dividing the Republicans and encouraging the desire for peace. Many prominent politicians of the United States assure us that it is the most opportune and efficient moral instrumentality for stopping the war that could have been conceived or exerted, and beg us to refrain from any vindication of our course or explanation of our purposes.

At all events, we have developed what we desired to in the eyes of our people—that war, with all its horrors, is less terrible and hateful than the alternative offered by Mr. Lincoln. We hope that none will hereafter be found in North Carolina, or in any other part of the Confederate States, so base as to insist that we shall make any more advances to him in behalf of peace, but that all of our citizens will gird themselves with renewed and redoubled energy and resolution to battle against our foes until our utter extermination, rather than halt to ponder the terms which he haughtily proclaims as his ultimatum. If such be the effect of our correspondence, we shall be amply indemnified for all the misrepresentations which we have incurred or ever can incur.

Mr. Greeley's purpose may have been merely to find out our conditions of peace, but we give him credit for seeking higher objects. While we contemplated and desired something more, yet it was part of our purpose to ascertain Mr. Lincoln's condition of peace. We have achieved our purpose in part; Mr. Greeley has failed altogether. He correctly reports us as having proposed no terms. We never intended to propose any until instructed by our Government. We have suffered ourselves to be falsely reported as proposing certain terms—among them reunion—for reasons that our judgment approved, hoping that we would in due time be fully vindicated at home.

If there is no more wisdom in our country than is displayed in the malignant articles of the Richmond Examiner and Petersburg Register, approving of the ukase of Mr. Lincoln, the war must continue until neutral nations interfere and command the peace. Such articles are copied into all the Republican presses of the United States, and help them more in encouraging the prosecution of the war than anything they can themselves utter.

If I am not deceived, the elements of convulsion and revolution existing in the North have been greatly agitated by the pronouncement of the autocrat of the White House. Not only Democrats, but Republicans are protesting against a draft to swell an army to fight to free negroes, and are declaring more boldly for State rights and the Union as it was. Many say the draft cannot and shall not be enforced. The Democracy are beginning to learn that they must endure persecution, outrage, and tyranny at the hands of the Republicans, just as soon as they can bring back their armed legions from the South. They read their own fate in that of the people of Kentucky, Missouri, and Maryland. They are beginning to lean more on the side of our people as their natural allies and as the champions of State rights and of popular liberty. Many of them would gladly lock arms with our soldiers in crushing their common enemy, the Abolitionists. Many of them would fall into our lines if our armies occupied any States north of the Ohio for a month, or even a week. Many of them are looking to the time when they must flee their country, or fight for their inalienable rights. They are preparing for the later alternative.

The instructions of the Secretary of War to us and the officer detailed for special service have not been neglected. We have been arranging for the indispensable co-operation. It is promised, and we hope will soon be furnished. Then we will act. We have been disappointed and delayed by causes which I cannot now explain.

I fondly trust that our efforts will not be defeated or hindered by unwise and intemperate declarations of public opinion, by newspaper editors or others who are regarded as its exponents.

We have a difficult role to play, and must be judged with charity until heard in our own defense.

I am much indebted to Mr. Holcombe, Mr. Sanders, and Mr. Tucker for the earnest and active aid they have given me in promoting the objects of Mr. Thompson's and my mission.

Mr. Thompson is at Toronto and Mr. Holcombe is at the Falls. If here, or if I could delay the transmission of this communication, I should submit it to them for some expression of their opinions.

As I expect this to reach the Confederate States by a safe hand, I do not take the time and labor necessary to put it in cipher—if, indeed, there is anything worth concealing from our enemies.

I have the honor to be, &c.,

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, August 12, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have had the honor to receive from your Department the estimates of foreign supplies, and I submit for your consideration a report made upon the same by Col. T. L. Bayne, agent for the transportation of cotton on account of this Department. The sum of the estimates is £1,491,000; the monthly export required to meet the payments will be 6,000 bales of cotton, or 36,000 bales for the ensuing six months; the tonnage necessary for the transportation is 3,900 tons per month, nearly fifteen steamers per week, at the present average rate of freight capacity. This statement exhibits apparently the impossibility, in our present circumstances, of accomplishing importations of such magnitude, and I would with great respect suggest the propriety of reconsidering the estimates, and of sending out such orders as may prevent any embarrassment on the part of General McRae in the distribution of the funds to be placed at his disposal. By the orders of my predecessor, issued since the adoption of the sub-regulations of ———, all the funds in the hands of the depositaries at Liverpool are made subject to the control of General McRae for the supply of the purchasing agents of the several departments, except a balance of £10,000, which is to be reserved for contingencies. I suggest that in conformity with this arrangement requisitions be made in favor of General McRae for the amount of the several estimates after they have been reformed in the manner proposed. I will then cause warrants to be issued upon the depositaries, under which the funds will be made available to General McRae as fast as they accumulate.

From the estimates of each bureau should be deducted the amount and value of the stores expected to be received under existing contracts.

Colonel Bayne alludes to several of these, and there may be others of which he is not informed. The Collie contract alone will furnish supplies to the extent of £200,000, and this amount and all others of like character should be deducted from the estimates. Two steamers under this contract have already arrived. By the terms of this agreement 50 per cent. is to be added to the value of the goods, so that the sum to be allowed for these supplies in reduction of the estimates is in fact £300,000. And as payment is to be made in cotton at 6 pence, it will require 30,000 bales of cotton for this single contract. As 5,000 bales at present prices in England would have yielded £200,000, this unfortunate arrangement entails a positive loss of 25,000 bales of cotton, and places in a conspicuous point of view the necessity that existed for abandoning this mode of obtaining supplies. The estimates being made as moderate as the absolute necessities of the service will permit, every effort will be made on the part of this Department to place the required funds in England. The difficulties of this task must not be kept out of view. The chief is the constant interference of existing contracts giving special privileges, with the right of the Government to ship half the cargo, as provided in the regulations. Of 5,530 bales (Wilmington and Charleston combined 4,868 bales + 662 bales) placed by this Department in the hands of Mr. Seixas, at Wilmington, in the month of July, only 1,672 bales went out for the "general credit of the Treasury." The distribution was as follows: Treasury Department, 1,672 bales; Collie contract, 962 bales; Crenshaw contract, 1,943 bales; payment freight, &c., 953 bales. The payment to Collie & Co. being for supplies (part of the £200,000) actually arriving, does not bear so injuriously upon our resources. But in the case of Crenshaw our means are being absorbed in the purchase of steamers that may not come into active service until the present exigency has passed. I have sent to the depositaries in Liverpool $3,000,000 in the 6 per cent. non-taxable bonds, and if encouraged to do so will send in all $10,000,000. And I have authorized General McRae and Fraser, Trenholm & Co., depositaries, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of February 17, 1864, to borrow on the hypothecation of these bonds from time to time, to be repaid out of the proceeds of expected importations of cotton. A loan of $5,000,000 on $10,000,000 of these bonds ought not to be difficult, to be repaid out of the proceeds of cotton actually arriving from week to week. The loan made by Gilliat & Co. of the £150,000 is of this character, and as the new steamers contracted for will be gradually coming into active duty, our facilities for the exportation will be gradually increasing and our means of payment augmenting in proportion.

I have entered into these details in order that you may have a full and comprehensive view of the resources at the command of this Department for meeting the requirements of the War Department.

Yours, with great respect,

G. A. TRENHOLM,

AUGUST 16, 1864.

Referred for the special attention of the Quartermaster-General, Commissary-General, Ordnance Bureau, Surgeon-General, and Niter and Mining Bureau. It will be necessary to limit estimates, and, as far as the service will allow, anticipative purchases of supplies.

At no distant date means of shipment ought to be largely increased, and I have all confidence they will be, both by the Government and private parties.

RICHMOND, VA., August 12, 1864.

Hon. G. A. TRENHOLM,
Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the estimates made by the various bureaus of the War Department of the amount of foreign funds required by them in the next six months to meet their wants abroad. These estimates are as follows:

Quartermaster's Department.....	£570,000
Commissary Department.....	511,000
Ordnance Bureau.....	162,000
Niter and Mining Bureau.....	135,000
Medical Department.....	113,000
Total.....	1,491,000

I have deducted from the estimate the 100 per cent. added in to cover freight and charges. Assuming the net value of a bale of cotton in Liverpool £40, it will require to meet the aggregate of above estimates that upward of 6,000 bales per month be exported from Wilmington and Charleston, the only two ports now available. The tonnage at present commanded by the Government is entirely inadequate to so large an export. General McRae advises, under date of 4th ultimo, the purchase by him of fourteen steamers, the first four of which were to sail from England in the present month. These additional facilities may enable the Government to raise its exports to the requisite figure, provided in the meantime arrangements are perfected for the regular and prompt delivery of sufficient cargoes at the ports. I apprehend that in making their estimates the chiefs of bureaus did not take into consideration the supplies to be delivered under certain contracts.

First. The Collie contract places at the disposal of the—

Quartermaster's Department abroad .....	£150,000
Ordnance Bureau .....	20,000
Medical Department .....	22,500
Niter and Mining Bureau .....	7,500
Total .....	200,000

Second. The Davis-Fitzhugh contract will furnish at our ports between this and October some five or six cargoes of general supplies.

Third. The contract made by the Quartermaster's Department with Messrs. Rosenberg & Haiman provides for the delivery in Liverpool, payable in cotton at Wilmington, of 100,000 pair of shoes and a like number of suits of clothes, the whole to be delivered previous to 1st October next. Deliveries to the extent of £11,432½ had been made previous to 1st July ultimo.

Fourth. Other contracts for the delivery of supplies payable in cotton have been made. They will probably produce something, but they are so indefinite that no calculations can be based upon them. I would also call your attention to the fact that in making up their estimates the chiefs of bureaus do not seem to have considered the limited importing capacity that the Government is likely to command. This capacity is largely estimated, I think, at 2,000 tons per month. The estimate of the Commissary-General is based upon import per month for his department alone of 2,300 tons of freight; that of the chief of the Niter and Mining Bureau on the import for his Bureau alone per month of 1,600 tons.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. L. BAYNE,
Lieutenant-Colonel.

I have called out the militia; will get 4,000 or 5,000. I ask for 5,000 stand of arms, with accouterments and ammunition. Call was made by order of Legislature at urgent request of Major-General Maury. One thousand men already reported; cannot get arms without your order, although promised by General Maury. Fatal consequences may follow failure. The Confederate forces here cannot save Mississippi or Alabama. General Forrest reports enemy 25,000 in Lafayette County. You know our resources.

I. It having been represented to the War Department that there are numbers of foreigners entrapped by artifice and fraud into the military and naval service of the United States who would gladly withdraw from further participation in the inhuman warfare waged against a people who have never given them a pretext for hostility, and that there are many inhabitants of the United States now retained in that service against their will who are averse to aiding in the unjust war now being prosecuted against the Confederate States; and it being also known that these men are prevented from abandoning such compulsory service by the difficulty they experience in escaping therefrom, it is ordered that all such persons coming within the lines of the Confederate armies shall be received, protected, and supplied with means of subsistence until such of them as desire it can be forwarded to the most convenient points on the border, when all facilities will be afforded them to return to their homes.

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 66. } Richmond, August 16, 1864.

I. The extra pay allowed to men detailed from the Army under the "Act of Congress to provide for the compensation of non-commissioned officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines on detailed service," approved June 9, 1864 (General Orders, No. 53, current series), is established as follows:

1. The extra pay for extraordinary skill or industry, or for extra work contemplated in section 2 of the law, may be, in the city of Richmond, not exceeding the amounts named in the following schedule:

	Per diem.
Superintendent, not exceeding.....	$10.00
First-class foreman, not exceeding.....	7.50
First-class mechanics.....	6.00
Second-class mechanics.....	5.50
Third-class mechanics.....	5.00
Other employes showing uncommon skill or industry.....	4.00
Skilled clerks.....	6.00

2. The extra pay allowed in this schedule shall be regarded as pay for ten hours' work, and for all work requiring "uncommon skill" done in other than the regular ten hours the pay shall be 50 per cent. greater than the schedule price.

3. This extra pay may be increased or diminished at other posts or depots where workshops are established in proportion as the market price of provisions is greater or less than in the city of Richmond, the Secretary of War and of the Navy acting conjointly as to such increase or diminution at points where there are establishments belonging to each branch of the service.

4. No restrictions will be placed on the amount of pay to be given by contractors to detailed men, save that the wages shall conform as nearly as possible to the wages received by similar classes in the employ of the Government.

5. The extra compensation for piecework, where such work is to the advantage of the Government, shall be regulated in conformity to the classification of workmen in section 1, the commanding officer, with the approval of the chief of the bureau concerned, fixing what shall be regarded as a full day's work with "uncommon industry." Compensation for work turned out over and above the quantities so fixed shall be paid at the rate fixed by the "extra compensation" for full day's work.

6. This act is to be construed as applying to men detailed "from the field," and does not apply to those attached in any way to an army in the field. The allowance of $2 a day is optional with the chief of each bureau, and any less sum may be paid according to the nature of occupation and services of the detailed man. It will be paid out of the funds of the bureau employing him, and for the days in which work is actually performed, unless otherwise specially ordered by the chief of bureau. Payments to men detailed in the Medical Department, except those on duty with purveyors, will be made by the Quartermaster's Department.

7. The clothing and rations issued to all classes of detailed and enrolled men shall be the same in kind and quantity as is issued to soldiers in the field, and shall be issued by the proper officer of the War Department in such manner and at such intervals as may be directed by the Secretary of War. Whenever, from any cause, the ration cannot be issued in kind within ten days after it is due, it shall be promptly commuted at its current value by the Commissary Department.

8. In like manner, whenever the clothing allowed cannot for any cause be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, it shall be commuted by said department at the current local value of such clothing, to be fixed by the Quartermaster-General.

9. The other allowances, viz, fuel and quarters, will be commuted to each detailed man according to rates fixed by the Quartermaster-General.

10. These orders will take effect from the 1st of August instant.

By order:

S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General.

GENERAL ORDERS, }
No. 67. }

ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Richmond, August 16, 1864.

I. The ration specified in paragraph II, General Orders, No. 59, current series, on which the hospital fund is to be reckoned, is as follows:

A half pound of bacon or pork, one pound and a half of flour or corn-meal (equal quantities of both to be used in the reckoning), and to every 100 rations, ten pounds of rice, one gallon of vinegar, one pound and a half of candles, four pounds of soap, and three pounds of salt; and at that rate for any less number of rations.

II. All horses, mules, wagons, harness, and saddles in the hands of officers, soldiers, or citizens not authorized to retain them, branded "C. S." or "U. S.," or captured from or abandoned by the enemy, will be turned in at once to the nearest post quartermasters. But the rights of citizens, as established by General Orders, No. 61, 1863, are not intended to be divested by the operation of this paragraph; and persons having property under the conditions of that order, or who have property abandoned by the enemy of equivalent value to that taken from them, will not be molested without a special order.

Capt. R. V. Gaines, assistant quartermaster, in addition to his present duty, is specially charged with looking up and securing the above-described property. He will report through the inspector-general of field transportation to the Quartermaster-General.

III. Section 6, paragraph I, General Orders, No. 66, current series, is thus amended:

This act is construed to apply only to soldiers detailed from the Army and to conscripts detailed by the Bureau of Conscription for service in the several departments out of the field. The extra pay is not intended for soldiers detailed for duty in the field.

IV. All men enlisted in the forces for local defense will be held responsible in the money value of arms, equipments, &c., belonging to the Government and lost by them. All such men who are employés of the Government or of contractors under the Government will have the value of lost arms, &c., deducted from their salaries or wages—the amount to be turned over by the paymaster to the ordnance officer or other officer of the command who may be accountable for the property to the Treasury. These officers are charged with the execution of this order, will account to the Treasury for the money turned over to them under it, and will make quarterly reports of arms, equipments, &c., lost (giving names of parties losing them) to the chief of the Ordnance Bureau at Richmond.

V. Paragraph I, General Orders, No. 63, current series, is thus amended:

All detailed men (including those between eighteen and forty-five years of age) will report to and be commanded by the general of reserves in the States in which they have been assigned or detailed, who will organize them into companies and battalions. It is not anticipated that they will be called out except in emergencies occurring in or near the counties of their residence; nor will service be exacted of them beyond those counties and counties contiguous thereto, except that companies hereafter formed may be required to perform service in repelling raids along a line of railroad running through their respective counties. All exempts are allowed and invited to enroll themselves with such companies, so as to be prepared to aid in defending their homes when menaced by the enemy.

VI. Section 6, paragraph I, General Orders, No. 44, current series, is amended to read as follows:

Cavalry divisions and brigades may each have an assistant adjutant and inspector general (not to exceed, for divisions, the grade of major and for brigades the grade of captain) in addition to the number allowed infantry divisions and brigades.

VII. The commutation allowed enlisted men under paragraphs III, IV, and VI, General Orders, No. 8, current series, is fixed at $2.50 per diem, to take effect August 20, 1864.

VIII. Paragraph IV, General Orders, No. 96, 1863, is amended to allow sick and wounded men on furlough to draw rations or commutation therefor (at their option) from the date of their furloughs.

IX. Issues of clothing to soldiers in general hospitals located at posts where an officer of the Quartermaster's Department is stationed will be made by the post quartermaster or a subordinate officer designated by him.

By order:

SANDY GROVE, NEAR BARTOW, GA.; August 16, 1864.

[Hon. G. A. TRENHOLM,
Secretary of the Treasury:]

DEAR SIR: I see by the publication of a recent letter from you that you not only approve the policy of having a board of commissioners in the several States to fix and publish a schedule of prices to be paid by Government, but that you also recommend the adoption of the lowest scale of prices. I regret this. I did hope that a change of the head of the Department would bring a change of views upon this important subject, and that your counsels would be in favor of the abandonment of the policy. In my poor judgment Congress committed a great error in adopting it—an error which has produced serious injury, and is likely to produce greater injury for the future. As truth is elicited by interchange of views, pardon me for obtruding upon you a very brief statement of mine. The power of impressment is clearly conferred upon Congress by the Constitution; but it was evidently never intended that it should be exercised but from necessity. But the power of impressment does not carry with it the power to regulate prices. The Government may impress when its exigency demands it, but beyond that it cannot go. It must give just compensation for the property impressed. The impressment is confessedly an odious as well as an arbitrary exercise of power, and in all cases in which it is resorted to, where the circumstances do not clearly warrant it, it produces in the heart of the citizen more or less of bitterness and discontentment. If these positions be true, then is it not unwise for the Government to adopt and adhere to a policy which renders impressment necessary? That such has been and will continue to be the effect of these schedules of prices cannot admit of a doubt. I know that impressments had become necessary and had been resorted to before Congress adopted any law regulating the subject. That necessity resulted from the great depreciation of the Confederate currency. As long as that depreciation exists impressment to a greater or less extent will continue to be necessary. But the duty it inculcated and still inculcates upon Congress is to adopt a policy that will appreciate the currency and thus obviate the necessity of impressment. But Congress adopted precisely the opposite policy. They not only adopted impressment as a permanent means of raising supplies for the Army, but coupled with it a mode of fixing prices far below the nominal value of the articles impressed. The scale of prices is so low that citizens will not voluntarily sell to the Government, and therefore impressment is indispensable. This, therefore, is the first objection I have against the existence of the State boards. Low prices are greatly to be desired. It is a blessing to Government and people; but attempts to establish them by law always proved disastrous and always will.

The next objection that occurs to my mind is this: The maximum policy discourages production. Heretofore, when our agricultural area was very large, this was a matter of less importance. But now that it is so circumscribed as to require all our skill and energy to produce enough to support the Army and people it is vital. Every man ought to be governed by patriotism, and for the sake of our cause and country be willing to produce all that he possibly can, with or without price. Few, however, are animated by a spirit so noble and magnanimous. The great mass desire to be fully remunerated for their labor in time of war as well as peace. Indeed, I think the greed for gain was never so rampant as it is now. It is epidemic and chronic, nearly all are under its influence, and it is scarcely to be hoped that it can be cured by appeals to patriotic sentiment and duty, or suppressed by legislative devices. We must take things as they are and men as they are, and so shape legislation as to make the unfavorableness of the former and the selfishness of the latter subservient to the great cause in which we are struggling. Instead of being too eager to reduce prices it were better for Government to stimulate production by submitting to the prices which are incident to the condition of the currency and the abnormal condition of all the branches of trade and industry. A currency approaching the value of specie will reduce prices. Nothing else can. It is nothing but mere tinkering, financial charlatanism, to expect to appreciate Treasury notes by seizing the property of citizens and compelling them to accept as compensation half or less than half that it will command in the markets of the country. Looking to the history of the past three years, it seems to me that it does not lie in the mouth of the Government to complain of the ruling prices of everything that is for sale. It is all the legitimate fruit of war, and the great mistake of attempting to carry it on exclusively upon credit. Congress is responsible for this, not Mr. Memminger or the Cabinet. If a vigorous system of taxation had been adopted at the beginning and been kept up pari passu with the progress of the war, our financial condition had been entirely different to-day; our currency would have been better, our public debt infinitely less, and prices correspondingly lower. If these things be true, ought the Government to complain of prices? Especially it ought not when it is remembered that it is clothed with the taxing power to the extent of controlling for the exigencies of the war the entire property of the Confederacy. If it must pay enormous prices, it can also bring back to the Treasury by taxation sufficient to meet the demand.

The unequal operation of the schedule of prices fixed by the commissioners ought to secure its unqualified condemnation. In the nature of things impressment cannot be universal, i. e., every citizen cannot be practically subjected to it. It is applied mainly, indeed almost exclusively, to those who reside or have their plantations on or near our great lines of transportation or within striking distance from them. A large portion of the impressing officers are too lazy to extend their operations over the country generally. The consequence is that the hardships of impressment fall on comparatively few, while justice requires that all should bear their proportionate share of the burdens of the war. The hardship is great and grievous. A has 100 bushels of wheat over and above what is necessary for his family consumption. It is for sale. It will command $25 per bushel, but the Government impresses it at from $5 to $7.50 per bushel—that is to say, he is taxed or forced to contribute to the support of Government the amount of the difference between the schedule price and the price which he could obtain in market, which in the case supposed would be from $1,750 to $2,000 on this 100 bushels of wheat. If this policy operated on all in proportion to their means there would be no injustice or inequality, but as it touches only a few it is monstrous. Nothing can be conceived which is so calculated to produce dissatisfaction and discourage production. It ought to be at once abandoned. Labor and commerce are Siamese twins; Government should interfere with them as little as possible. If it interfere at all it should always be in a line parallel with the laws of their normal action to stimulate and encourage rather than to regulate and control. And as money is the blood of commerce, and useful only to equalize the differences of value in the exchange of the productions of labor, the only legitimate duty and function of Government is to preserve its purity and health, so that its circulation may be uniform throughout the system, regulated in volume and velocity alone by the laws of supply and demand. Labor should be encouraged by paying market value for its productions. Commerce should be encouraged by knocking off fetters, rather than cramping it by legislative restrictions. The currency can be preserved from dropsy by keeping down redundancy, and in no other way; and whilst the Confederate Government has the entire field of paper circulation, it can prevent redundancy only by making taxation in some degree commensurate with expenditure; or if this cannot be done (and I believe it cannot now be done), then in relying upon its credit for the deficit of receipts to meet disbursements. That credit should not be in the form of Treasury notes, but in bonds payable at a period sufficiently remote to allow posterity to share part of the burdens, as it will reap all the blessings, of this revolution.

Hence you will perceive (I will say in passing) that I do not approve the legislation of Congress imposing heavy restrictions upon our foreign commerce, impressing all the blockade-running vessels and compelling them to share their cargoes equally with the Confederate States. It will crush out in due time that branch of business. When existing vessels shall have been destroyed or fallen into the hands of the enemy few more, if any, will be built. Men will not hazard such large amounts of private capital as are required to put steamers afloat if they are not permitted by Government to reap all the fruits of their investments. This, at least, is my poor opinion. It were better for the Government to give the utmost encouragement to this branch of enterprise. It might pass such laws as would make it the interest of the blockaders to bring in necessities to the exclusion of mere luxuries, and in that way procure more copious supplies for the Army than will possibly result from existing laws and regulations.

Strictly this is a digression from the main subject of this communication, but as it is germane you will pardon it. I also beg pardon for troubling you with so long a letter—three times as long as I intended when I began to write. I thought I was done, but since writing the above I have seen the impressing officer of this county (Jefferson). He informs me that he cannot get wheat at schedule price ($5 per bushel). This is not singular, when it is remembered that Confederate money is worth only about 5 cents on the dollar, making the schedule price in fact but 25 cents per bushel. How are the farmers to pay their taxes? Why not pay something like market value for supplies? The taxing power enables the Government to reimburse itself amply and fully. Why persist in a policy that produces such deep and widespread dissatisfaction? Wheat is now selling in Augusta at $30 per bushel. Why not strike a fair medium and offer at once $20 per bushel? With this the country will be satisfied. They will not be satisfied with less. And to add to the discontent the Government is not paying for what it gets. It is simply giving the planters a receipt for the produce containing a promise to pay, which promise may be redeemed in a reasonable time, or in a year, or never. This is all wrong—suicidal in policy. The Government should pay cash for what it impresses and pay fair prices. In a revolution like this it is immensely important to keep the people satisfied and in good humor. They are reasonably patriotic and willing to make sacrifices; but their forbearance may be broken down. As matters now stand, I assure you and the Secretary of War that it will be difficult to procure supplies. The surplus of wheat is small in all this region of country. There is no surplus of meat. At the rates now offered for wheat those who have surplus will hurry it off to the markets in which they can obtain from $25 to $30 per bushel. They are doing it rapidly, and very soon it will have passed from their hands. The Secretary of War should act promptly and authorize his impressing agents to pay $20 per bushel, which is only $1 per bushel in real value. When it is notorious that in peace times wheat was never worth less than $1.25 to $2 per bushel; and with due respect and in all candor I will say that it is of the utmost importance that the Secretary of the Treasury should see to it that the funds be furnished to pay cash for supplies. I know what I say. I am of the people. I know their temper, and I assure you that what I say is worthy of consideration and prompt action. Pay no regard whatever to schedule prices. They are simply ridiculous. It is mere mockery to offer $5 per bushel for wheat and $4 for corn which is now selling for $12 to $15 per bushel. I hope you will not be offended at my urgency. I speak what I believe to be for the good of the country. We cannot pause now to count dollars and cents too closely. The Government, like the people, must submit to the necessities of our condition.

The Senate at the last session passed a bill to levy an additional tithe to be taken at schedule prices. It was a good measure, for no matter what the prices might have been, as all came within its operation, it would have acted equally and justly. But the House refused to pass it. The House committed a great mistake. It would have supplied the Army and abolished impressment. The Senate also passed a bill to pay for supplies in specie certificates payable after the war. The House refused to agree to it and thus committed another mistake. That form of credit would have been satisfactory to the people. I voted for both measures because I thought I saw in them that which would efficiently tend to the improvement of our currency. Thus we are left to higggle with the people by arbitration over prices for supplies. My dear sir, be bold; don't hesitate to take the responsibility to rescue us from disaster by all proper means.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

HERSCHEL V. JOHNSON.

P. S.—Of course, if you should desire, you are at liberty to show this to the Secretary of War or any other person by whose perusal of it you may think any good might be accomplished. No man is more thoroughly friendly to the Administration than I.

Hon. A. M. CLAYTON,

Judge of the District of the State of Mississippi:

MY DEAR SIR: Statements have reached me from Mississippi to the effect that the military commanders would receive valuable assistance in the proper administration of that department if a more active co-operation were extended to them by the civil authorities. It is thought that frequent sessions of your court would be specially beneficial if held near the lines, where trading with the enemy and other illegal practices are said to prevail, and where the necessary witnesses could be readily assembled. Canton, Brandon, and Jackson have been suggested as places suitable for the purpose. At this distance I cannot venture to do more than invite your attention to the matter, as your friend, and to mention to you that complaints have been made. You will of course exercise your own discretion in the premises. I shall be glad to hear from you always, and I sincerely trust that your health and strength enable you to bear the trials and discomforts to which you are necessarily subjected.

With my kindest remembrances to your wife and daughter,

I am, very respectfully and truly, yours,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

C. S. QUARTERMASTER'S DEPT., RAILROAD BUREAU,

Richmond, August 16, 1864.

General LAWTON,

Quartermaster-General:

GENERAL: Inclosed I have the honor to return you the papers relative to a reduction of employés on the North Carolina Railroad to the number required by law; and in reply have to say that such a step, in my opinion, would result in embarrassment to the transportation of supplies over this road. The demands of this road for labor have been always excessive and no doubt are so in this instance, but from my information as to the actual wants of a railroad doing so much work as the North Carolina company, I am satisfied that it is impossible to operate and keep it up with the one man per mile allowed by law. The worst feature in reducing the force upon a railroad is that the deterioration consequent upon such a step is so gradual that it is scarcely perceived before the injury is very serious, and to restore a badly worn road to good condition with the present difficulties is a most difficult matter.

In consequence of a reduction of force on the North Carolina road it became in the fall of 1862 and spring of 1863 nearly impassable, but the efforts of the superintendent, aided by all that you could do for him, have resulted in making it one of the best roads in the Confederacy. You surely cannot have forgotten, general, the frequent and anxious conferences had in regard to this very road, and it is proper to say that its present efficient condition is due to the liberal details secured through you and rendered necessary by its then deplorable condition. It seems very hard that when our efforts are meeting with success that the policy which dictated the efforts is to be totally ignored.

I can refer you for a similar case with similar results to the South Carolina Railroad. We have fostered it and encouraged it until its condition is vastly improved, but if this law is enforced depreciation cannot be avoided. You know how intense was your anxiety in regard to it and how every means was exhausted to supply it with men and material. How discouraging it is now, just as it has gotten on rising ground, to restrict its facilities.

The condition of every railroad in the Confederacy is affected by this law and if it is enforced many of them will suffer. It is a mistake to suppose that "other roads," entitled to not half so many exemptions, in more exposed situations, and as busily engaged in Government transportation, were successfully operated without calling for "details." Their trains run, it is true, but labor is needed by all and sooner or later must be given. It was a short-sighted policy that run the road's machinery down, and we were just recovering from the effects of it when the present law was passed. No lesson seems to have been learned by experience.

In the regulations carrying out the late law the subject of details is left entirely with the Bureau of Conscription. If the execution of the law is paramount to every other consideration, then applications are useless; but if it is thought that keeping up the railroads is a matter of sufficient moment to allow all consistent advantages to them, the application is worthy of very grave attention. But before any decision is given the wants of the road should be specifically stated. It is not in the correspondence.

I am, general, very respectfully, &c.,

F. W. SIMS,
Lieutenant-Colonel, &c.

[First indorsement.]

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
August 20, 1864.

The within papers are respectfully submitted to Honorable Secretary of War, with the earnest request that the Bureau of Conscription be instructed to allow to this road all the details applied for. They are believed to be absolutely essential to the efficiency of a road upon which we rely very much for all our supplies.

A. R. LAWTON,
Quartermaster-General.

[Second indorsement.]

AUGUST 22, 1864.

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL:

It is evident, I think, that the claim for details on this road are exorbitant. Whether the number should be reduced to the number allowed by law is more doubtful; there should certainly be a reduction, but there is not evidence afforded of the extent. You had probably better direct an officer capable of judging, yet not committed to consider primarily the railroad interests, to examine and report on this point.

OFFICE NORTH CAROLINA RAILROAD COMPANY,
Vance, June 28, 1864.

Col. PETER MALLET,
Commanding Conscripts, Raleigh, N. C.:

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of last week, covering a copy of the decision of Colonel Preston in relation to the large force we have on our road, I have nothing further to add to the facts and suggestions heretofore made to you, to the Bureau of Conscription, and the Secretary of War. If the Government can dispense with a large part of the transportation afforded by this road, then we will not need so many hands; but if it is desirable to have it worked to its full capacity, then we can spare none of them. The Government can take its choice—either have the men and let the road and Army suffer, or leave the men alone and let the road be worked as advantageously as possible. As soon as you take the men I must stop all other trains from running on this road. There are now six foreign trains at work here. We can barely keep enough wood on the road from day to day. We cannot do with less men than we now have. Take those we have and I know not where to supply their places, even so far as labor is concerned. Those who get wood off their own land are doubly valuable to us, for they furnish not only wood, which otherwise we cannot obtain, but the labor also.

Will you please refer this letter to the chief of the Bureau, that he may confer with the Quartermaster-General.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS WEBB,

BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, August 5, 1864.

Respectfully referred to the Secretary of War.

This communication is in reply to an indorsement on the report of an inspection of this road, which developed the fact that the number of employes liable to conscription was largely in excess of the number of exemptions authorized by law. It is considered that the number of exempts allowed was sufficiently large to include all whose services were indispensable because of mechanical or scientific skill, business experience, capacity, &c., and that what other labor was required it should be procured from other sources, and the commandant of conscripts was directed so to inform the officers of this road, that efforts should at once be made to make the changes indicated. It was observed that other roads entitled to not half so many exemptions, in more exposed situations, and as busily engaged in Government transportation, were successfully operated without calling for details, and no reason was perceived why an exception in favor of this one should be made, traversing, as it does, a fertile and large slave-holding region. It was not proposed to insist on a violent change, but that the reduction should be as gradual as circumstances permitted, while assurances were given that diligent and bona fide efforts were being made to effect other arrangements. The statements in this communication render arbitrary action necessary, but before adopting such a course the action proposed is submitted for approval. It is proposed to make a reduction of one-fourth at the end of thirty days and of one-eighth at the end of every succeeding fifteen days until the number of employés is confined within the limits recognized by law.

General B. BRAGG:

SIR: You will require the chief of the Bureau of Conscription to furnish you a list of all officers employed on conscript duty, the post of duty, order of assignment, and by what commission they are serving. You will also require to be submitted to you such report as has been received of inspections made, and of the enrollment and distribution of recruits within the last six months. While these returns are in course of preparation they will, as completed, be submitted for examination and such action as may be found needful.

GENERAL: Your letter of the 10th instant addressed to the Commissary-General has been referred to me. The mode of utilizing the surplus products of detailed or exempt farmers suggested by you, viz, by authorizing them to be sold to county boards of relief or other associations for the supply of indigent soldiers' families, has been in various instances sanctioned by the Department. Care, however, should be taken that the purchases from exempted and detailed farmers are either for the Government or the families of soldiers. The boards of relief have frequently wider duties than the relief of soldiers' families, and I have no authority to allow purchases except for the class specified in the law.

Very respectfully,

SPOTSWOOD HOTEL,
Richmond, August 20, 1864.

His Excellency President DAVIS:

SIR: There is a law, approved October 12, 1862, giving to the President authority to commission officers temporarily for recruiting service.

I believe that in the present condition of affairs in Kentucky, if you would commission me as colonel of cavalry and allow me to select, say, ten men, all Kentuckians, to operate with me, I could be the means of doing much good for our cause in Kentucky, and in a few months would raise certainly a regiment, and perhaps more men, for the service. I would select substantial, active men from different portions of the State—men who have some personal influence in their immediate neighborhoods—send them into the State, partly to recruit and partly to communicate with the discontents, and for them to this Government. I will myself go into the State and attempt the formation of a secret Southern society, the object of which shall be to throw all obstacles possible in the way of the Lincoln Administration in the State, to aid those who desire to come out, and if the occasion should offer to take up arms simultaneously all over the State for our cause. I believe, sir, that I could do much good in this way. I am satisfied that by the day of the Presidential election I would enlist a sufficient number of men and, holding them in the mountains of the State, could control that end of the State to such an extent as at least to allow the people to have a fair vote. I ask for the commission, sir, for the simple reason that I am not able to go on such an enterprise without some means of support for my family; otherwise I would desire only the authority to go into the State to recruit. I will assure you, sir, that as soon as I am satisfied that I cannot succeed in my endeavors I will return the commission. I think three, or at the most four, months will certainly determine the matter. An early answer is respectfully requested.

Respectfully,

ROBT. J. BRECKINRIDGE.

SECRETARY OF WAR:

This application is free from one objection, that of conflict with enrollment, but whether the others are such as to prevent compliance is submitted for your advice.

SIR: On the 6th of August I received a request from the Secretary of War at your suggestion to meet the commissioners from the other States in Richmond on the 10th instant for conference. benefit must result from such conference. Allow me to assure you of the hearty co-operation of the commissioners of this State in carrying out the suggestions of that conference, and an earnest desire to contribute by our action in sustaining the credit of the Confederate currency. I take the liberty of inclosing herewith the outline of a new mode of impressment, which should be properly addressed to the Secretary of War, and was intended to be signed by the commissioners from Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, but the mails are so uncertain I prefer submitting it to you for your consideration, and if you think well of the plan soliciting your influence in having it carried out. I am aware that the plan needs perfecting, but believe that if perfected and adopted it will result very beneficially in sustaining our currency by reducing prices of the leading articles of consumption. It may be urged that there is no authority for such action under the impressment law. Still, I would urge it as a war measure, and I believe that it will meet the approval of nine-tenths of the people.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

L. B. NORTHROP.

[Inclosure.]

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR:

The undersigned, commissioners under the impressment act for the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Georgia, having in view the best interests of the Government and speaking from daily observation, most respectfully recommend: That it is to the interest of the Government that orders be issued to the Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments to at once notify producers in each of the Confederate States that the whole of the surplus production of wheat, corn, oats, rye, fodder, bacon, beef, lard, &c., must be held subject to the order of the Confederate Government, to be paid for at commissioners' schedule rates, and to be delivered at the usual places of shipment only when called for by the agents of the Government. We most respectfully submit briefly the following reasons for this policy:

First. The Government, by becoming the purchaser of the whole surplus, at once removes all competition from either speculators or non-producers.

Second. That the private barns, cribs, and store-houses are the safest places for the Government to store such supplies, and the owners of the said supplies the best agents. As the Government will only pay for the amount delivered, it is safe to presume that producers will protect their [own interests].

Third. That but for speculators and non-producers offering higher prices than schedule rates published by the commissioners, producers would be entirely satisfied with these rates, and we believe prices could be in a few months materially reduced.

Fourth. There are a large number of distillers in each of the States manufacturing under contracts, either State or Confederate. To fill these contracts they are offering most exorbitant prices for grain, thereby causing dissatisfaction with schedule rates, and at the same time depreciating our currency. We further respectfully suggest that the whole matter of impressment and purchase of supplies should be in the hands of the officers of the tax in kind, and that they be instructed to supply non-producers at cost certain amounts, according to the number they may have in the family, which shall be ascertained by affidavit of the applicant; and also that they be instructed to furnish retail grocers in towns and cities, on their oath to the effect that the supplies are for the purpose of retailing, and binding themselves not to charge exceeding — per cent. above cost. Also, that distillers under contract to the Confederate States be allowed to draw their supplies of grain from the same source.

The above views are most respectfully presented to the consideration of the War Department, believing, as we do, that if perfected and carried into operation the plan will result in great benefit to the Government and people.

We have the honor to be, your obedient servants,

R. C. FARISS,

GENERAL ORDERS, } ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
No. 68. } Richmond, Va., August 26, 1864.

I. The act of Congress "to provide for the establishment and payment of claims for a certain description of property taken or informally impressed," approved June 14, 1864, and published in General Orders, No. 54, current series, does not prescribe any rule of decision to the accounting officers of the Government, but was designed to secure for the claimant an early method of obtaining proof for his claim. The Department, therefore, recommends to the commissioners appointed under the aforesaid act to receive the proof of the claims that may be made for the property designated in the act and embraced in its objects, with which any claimant may be prepared, although the same may not be, in their opinion, sufficient to support a claim against the Confederate States, nor conform to the directions in General Orders, No. 54. But all claims that are not supported by testimony as prescribed in the general orders just cited should be reported separately from the others and as being taken under this order.

II. Requisitions may be made by any commissioner appointed under said act upon a quartermaster of a post in his district for a reasonable supply of stationery to enable him to perform his duties, and also for the payment of six advertisements in two newspapers, to be published in the district, of the time and places at which he may hold his sessions. No allowances will be made for clerk hire or counsel fees.

III. The allowances to the commissioners will be paid at the Treasury, after being audited by the Second Auditor, from the fund for "contingent expenses of the Army," and claims for services under the act by a commissioner will be sent to the Second Auditor properly authenticated for allowances.

GENERAL ORDERS, }      ADJT. AND INSP. GENERAL'S OFFICE,
 No. 69.                      }      Richmond, Va., August 27, 1864.

I. The Bureau of Conscription will cause to be delivered from the proper officers of the Bureau to the chief commissary in every State a report containing the names of all the persons in the State, with the places of their residence, who have obtained exemptions or details as agriculturists, owners, overseers, managers, farmers, planters, or otherwise, as producers of grain or provisions, under the fourth paragraph of the tenth section of the military act of the 17th of February, 1864, published in General Orders, No. 26, current series, together with a statement of the terms of the contract, the sureties to the same, and with all other pertinent facts relating to the said exemption or detail. The officers of the Subsistence Department, under the direction of the Commissary-General and chief commissary of each State, are charged with the collection of the meat which any exempt or detailed men may have contracted to pay, and to give an acquittance therefor; also to make whatever commutations or reductions that may be authorized by the act whenever the conditions are established that justify the same, and to make all the purchases of the marketable surplus at the prices specified in the act, which the same authorizes to be made on behalf of the Government, the said Subsistence Department being hereby clothed with authority to represent the Government in the enforcement of its claims under the contracts and obligations that the act imposes upon the exempts and detailed men described therein.

II. In order that the regulation on the subject of the sale of the marketable surplus of the provisions and grain to the Government and the families of soldiers in the said act may have execution, the commissaries in the different States may be instructed to limit their purchases of grain and provisions of the marketable surplus in any district to some definite proportion, not to exceed one-half, and to leave the remainder for the persons who purchase on behalf of the families of soldiers.

III. All agents appointed by the public authorities of any State, county, or town to supply food for the families of soldiers are authorized to purchase the portion unappropriated by the Government for the object of their trust. The commanders of conscripts or the chief commissary of each State or district may authenticate the authority of such agents, and persons selling to agents thus authenticated shall be fully warranted to do so.

IV. The families of soldiers as described in the said act are the families composed of the wife or wife and children of any person who belongs to the Army; the widow or widow and children of any person who died while in the service; the mother and sisters of any soldier or soldiers in the Army and who resided with them as members in the same family or were dependent upon their labor or support; the parents or sisters of any person belonging to the Army who resided in the same family with them and who derived from them support.

V. Officers are authorized to purchase necessary subsistence for their families under this act.

VI. Every exempt and detailed man under this act shall render to the enrolling officer in his district a detailed statement of the marketable surplus produced and sold by him, with testimony that the sales were to the Government or to soldiers' families, which statement shall be sent to the commander of conscripts for the State, and thereupon satisfaction upon his bond shall be entered.

VII. The act of Congress aforesaid provides that exemptions in favor of the classes aforesaid shall cease whenever the farmer, planter, or overseer shall fail diligently to employ in good faith his own skill, capital, and labor exclusively in the production of grain and provisions, to be sold to the Government and the families of soldiers at prices not exceeding those fixed at the time for like articles by the commissioners of the State under the impressment act. It has been represented to the Department that there are instances of persons exempt or detailed under this act who pay but little respect to the obligations they have contracted; that they have become speculators in food and provisions; that they are negligent and careless as to the extent of their productions, and openly affirm that they do not mean to have any surplus. The Department is required in all such or similar cases to revoke the detail, and the performance of this duty is devolved upon the Bureau of Conscription, upon proper testimony being afforded to them or to their officers to be designated by them to perform this duty.

I. In consequence of the addition of fifty artillery officers for ordnance duty by act of Congress, approved June 10, 1864, the distribution of grades announced in General Orders, No. 110, 1863, is changed to the following: Five lieutenant-colonels, ten majors, eighty-five captains, sixty first lieutenants, and forty second lieutenants.

II. These officers, together with such officers of the regular Confederate Army and field officers of the provisional artillery as are placed on ordnance duty by the Secretary of War, will alone, hereafter, constitute the corps of officers for ordnance duty. All other officers on ordnance duty are only incidentally ordnance officers, and are liable to be replaced by the class of officers above enumerated.

III. All officers on ordnance duty will, without delay, report by letter to the Chief of Ordnance at Richmond, stating, first, their rank; second, date of commission; third, arm of service; fourth, the State to which they belong; fifth, date of assignment to ordnance duty; sixth, the authority by which assigned, furnishing date, and, if possible, copy of order of assignment. Officers of the Regular Army will report both their regular and provisional commissions or commissions conferring temporary rank.

IV. Appointments in the corps of artillery officers for ordnance duty established by acts of Congress approved April 21, 1862, September 16, 1862, and June 10, 1864, will be made to the grade of second lieutenants after the usual examinations. Candidates examined prior to the passage of act approved June 10, 1864, may, however, on recommendation, be appointed to grades for which they were recommended and in which they have been serving under General Orders, No. 12, 1863.

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES,
September 5, 1864.

Respectfully submitted to His Excellency the President.

There appear to be several points in this report inviting attention.

First. An able-bodied colonel has for two years done office duty, whilst his regiment has been on hard field service in the Army of Virginia. The duty could be as well performed by a disabled officer, of whom we have so many. In that event this colonel might see a little field service yet before the war is over and learn something of the rules of discipline and respect for his superiors, of which he appears to be much in need from the inclosed copy of a letter recently addressed to this office.*

Second. The officer charged with the duty of general inspection does not seem to devote much time to it. He has been in this city since March, except when absent as a volunteer on General Beauregard's staff for a short time. I have called for the reports of his inspections, but received none.

Third. The duties assigned Lieutenant Goldthwaite seem to be too important to be intrusted to so young a man without experience, and could better be performed by some older and good soldier disabled by wounds.

* See August 2, p. 568.

The whole organization appears to be defective and inefficient, and to a great extent explains the invariable reports of inspectors, that the duty of putting men in the Army is retarded by the want of prompt action on applications and appeals. It will be seen from the papers forwarded that there have been three acting superintendents of this Bureau within a few days past.

STATE OF VIRGINIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Richmond, August 29, 1864.

Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR:

SIR: I have carefully considered the case made by Major Boyle* in justification of his interference with our citizens in transitu to their homes and places of business with their purchases, made in this market or elsewhere, and I cannot see that it touches the grievance which I presented for your consideration. My complaint is that the citizens of Virginia, whose rights I am bound, as far as practicable, to protect, are not allowed to take with them to their homes and places of business such articles as they may purchase for their own use or for sale to their neighbors and customers, neither they nor such persons being within the enemy's lines, but all being within the jurisdiction of the State of Virginia.

* See August 26, p. 605.

The regulations made by General Lee and under which Major Boyle shelters himself will receive, of course, your careful attention; but I will call your attention to them particularly. By reference to the second paragraph, certain articles are not "permitted to pass the lines of this army to the territories of the United States, or to any part of the Confederate States occupied by the enemy, without permission," &c. In the letter of General Lee to Major Boyle will be found this extract:

It is desirable that the enemy should not be informed that the Government authorizes such a trade, as it would no doubt prevent it. If the carriers appear only as persons engaged in private ventures there will be less difficulties.

It is manifest without comment that these orders in no manner touch the trade to which I refer. The one, being ostensibly illegitimate but yet valuable to the Government, could of course only be carried on with the knowledge and permission thereof; but the other, being perfectly legitimate and altogether proper, is restrained by no law, and should be encouraged rather than restrained for the good of the citizen, so much and so seriously oppressed.

But Major Boyle says that "large quantities of cotton, tobacco, &c., are carried to the frontier for the purpose of being transported, when opportunity will permit, to the enemy's country." This may be true. It is, however, only an inference, and cannot affect the legitimate trade for which I contend. Violation of commercial regulations has prevailed in every country and age, and still it does not affect the rights of legitimate traffic. Those who violate laws must take the consequences when convicted; but surely those who are but in the exercise of their rights must not be denied them because of the rascality of others. Major Noland obviously has reference to his own regulations, the effect of which denies to the people of Northern Virginia the right to sell their goods except upon terms prescribed by him, when no such restrictions are imposed upon other sections of the State. But there is no difference between us about the law, as I understood you. Permits are necessary under the regulations referred to when the purpose is to go into the enemy's lines for supplies; but otherwise they are not necessary, and of course the citizens of Virginia within our limits are entitled to buy and sell at will.

The obstructions, then, of which I complain are not warranted by law nor by any regulation in pursuance thereof, and I respectfully ask that they may be removed. They exist in the action of your subordinates, and the only way that I know of is to instruct them accordingly. I respectfully ask your early attention to this subject, as it is daily called to my attention by citizens, who feel very keenly the annoyance and oppression of which they complain.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. SMITH.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA, WAR DEPARTMENT,

Richmond, Va., August 30, 1864.

His Excellency WILLIAM SMITH,

Governor of Virginia:

SIR: I have received your letter commenting upon Major Boyle's report in reply to my call upon him for the authority under which he was acting in imposing restrictions upon citizens of Culpeper and Fauquier desiring to carry to their homes articles of merchandise for their own use. In reply I have the honor to say that there must be some regulation to prevent the demoralizing trade with the enemy, to which there are so many and strong temptations, and this must be applied before the passage of our military lines, since beyond them there can be no effective control. This General Lee's order seeks to do, and I really see no better mode of accomplishing it. At the same time it is desirable that the legitimate wants of our loyal citizens in counties beyond the military lines, and yet not in the actual occupancy of the enemy, should be supplied. I know no better mode of effecting this than that permits should be obtained either from the Department directly, or that Major Boyle be instructed to allow citizens, whose loyalty is vouched or known to him to be true, to take to their homes such articles as they need, on the assurance that they shall be used for legitimate purposes and not for trade with the enemy. If you desire it, such instructions will be given.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War.

HEADQUARTERS GEORGIA RESERVES,

Macon, Ga., August 31, 1864.

[Col. WILLIAM M. BROWNE:]

COLONEL: I give you this memorandum in reference to the supporting force of the Conscript Bureau in response to your request.

The Conscript Bureau was authorized to raise for a supporting force one company in each Congressional district. In Georgia there are ten districts, and the companies are mostly cavalry and composed of non-conscripts; that is, men liable to service in the reserve. These companies are doing little or nothing, as their one business is to arrest deserters and skulkers, but could be made very efficient as a part of the reserve, and whenever required, details could be furnished enrolling officers. I have earnestly recommended that this should be turned over to me, with instructions that I should furnish details when called for. In my conversation this morning I gave you many details which you will bear in mind and hence I do not repeat them. We have too many independent organizations in the service. My opinion is that the number could be very much reduced with benefit to the service, and this would be a good beginning.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

HOWELL COBB,

Major-General

MURFREESBOROUGH, N. C., August 31, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,

Secretary of War, Richmond, Va.:

DEAR SIR: So many complaints reach me of the mischievous and demoralizing effects of the traffic in cotton, initiated under the auspices of the Commissary Department, which is now carried on across and beyond the Chowan River, that I deem it a duty to call your attention to the subject. The operation of the system as explained to me is this: The Government delivers on the river bank cotton in equal parts for bacon brought to the same place. The arrangement is expected to bring supplies of bacon from the enemy in exchange for cotton transported to points at which he can get it. In truth, most of the bacon received comes from our own counties, and but an inconsiderable part from the North. These supplies would mostly find their way to the Confederate States as the only market for a surplus, and for Confederate money, if trading with the enemy was strictly prohibited and prevented. The present system, of course, presupposes and therefore licenses the transportation and sale of the cotton to the enemy, and the object seems to be attained if the equivalent in bacon is delivered to the commissary officer, without regard to the source from which derived. Most of the cotton, or at least much of it, purchases not meat for the Army, but goods of Northern production and manufacture, which are thus introduced into the country. Large numbers of persons are said to be actively employed in the counties east of the river availing themselves of the opportunities afforded for private gain and advantage, and putting in their own pockets the surplus made by a more favorable exchange with the sellers of the meat. But larger profits still are derived from the introduction into the Confederate States of the numerous Yankee fabrics which, because of prevailing scarcity, now command very high prices. But the spirit of speculation engendered and the opportunities offered for its successful indulgence form a less serious objection to the system than some other of its fruits. It tends to discredit our currency, to impair and weaken the attachment of our people to their own Government, to diminish and soften the resentment felt for acts of disloyalty and unfaithfulness to our cause, to demoralize public sentiment, and to corrupt those engaged in it. Men will naturally conclude that inasmuch as their own Government permits and licenses the traffic with the enemy, there can be no great wrong in friendly dealing and communications with him, and teachings, however elevated, will not be able to counteract the effects of this practice. This district has remained true and faithful under most adverse circumstances. Left beyond the protection of their own armies, as many of the counties have been, and exposed to hostile raids, unchecked and destructive, they adhere to our fortunes and look confidently forward to the day of their deliverance. Nearly all their valuable slaves are gone, but these losses have not abated their patriotism.

Surely such consequences as I have pointed out are not to be permitted for the small and precarious additions which are gathered to our means of subsistence. If the trade must be carried on it certainly can be put under the restraint of such regulations as will prevent the abuses to which it now gives rise. I bring the subject before you for your inquiry and with a view to the correction of the evils of the system.

I am, most respectfully, yours, &c.,

W. N. H. SMITH.

[First indorsement.]

BUREAU OF SUBSISTENCE,
Richmond, September 8, 1864.

Respectfully returned to Honorable Secretary of War.

This Bureau cannot agree with the Hon. Mr. Smith in his opinion as to the evil results flowing from the trade conducted on the Chowan by officers of this Bureau. On the contrary, the natural results in subsistence gotten for the Army have been most satisfactory, for it is not conceded that these supplies would otherwise have come into the Confederacy at all.

L. B. NORTHROP,
Commissary-General.

[Second indorsement.]

SEPTEMBER 13, 1864.

I cannot concur in thinking the evils stated by Hon. Mr. Smith as resulting to the extent imagined from the trade established, and its results have really been so satisfactory in affording supplies that I am not, without further developments and inquiries, prepared to prohibit it.

J. A. S.,
*Secretary.*STATE OF VIRGINIA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
*Richmond, August 31, 1864.*Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of yesterday. I would respectfully suggest, to save you as well as myself trouble, that Major Boyle be instructed to permit persons with supplies obviously (from the quantity) intended for their own use to pass without question; secondly, where the quantity is more considerable, such as purchases for half a dozen or more neighbors, as is frequently the case, that the parties be permitted to pass upon being properly and satisfactorily vouched for as loyal and reliable, and thirdly, where the articles are purchased for sale, avowedly to neighborhoods in which the parties may reside and be conducting business as merchants, that they shall be required to have your pass, to be obtained upon being vouched for to your satisfaction. . It is thought to be very hard, indeed, that a gentleman coming from the country to this city should not be allowed to return home with such purchases as he or his neighbors may want, and it is thought very hard that the old and established merchants of the State should not be allowed to replenish their stocks when opportunity occurs. I hope it will be your pleasure to give Major Boyle the instructions suggested, and that you will adopt the rule above suggested for yourself. You will observe that I do not propose to pass our lines or to enter those of the enemy.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. SMITH.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY:

No objection is seen to these instructions, and they may be given.

J. A. S.,
Secretary.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OF NORTH CAROLINA,
Raleigh, September 1, 1864.

Hon. GEORGE DAVIS,
Attorney-General Confederate States:

DEAR SIR: Permit me to ask your attention to a matter that has bred some confusion and is likely to breed more. Until recently the Governor of North Carolina commissioned all officers of the line in the regiments from this State originally enlisted for the war and known as "State troops," in contradistinction to the "volunteers" or twelve-months' men. This was by virtue of an ordinance of the convention which gave the Governor also authority to commission all officers in both classes of troops. The authority of the President to commission any of the North Carolina troops was derived, I take it, from the first conscription act, which was held to operate only upon the twelve-months' men. Accordingly the Governor's claim to commission them was surrendered, and he continued to commission only the regiments originally "for three years or the war," with the consent and approbation of the Confederate Government. Latterly Adjutant-General Cooper has notified me that he will recognize no commission issued by this State whatsoever. Now, where does the President get the right to commission the troops from North Carolina not affected by either the first or the last acts of conscription? Many of our regiments were originally enlisted for the period of the war and could not possibly be so affected, and it seems to me the right remains with the Governor to commission them. Practically it is better they were all equally subjected to our laws, and I make no objection on that score. But I don't feel at liberty to surrender both a right and a duty committed to me by the State unless satisfied that the law has done it for me. Please let me hear from you.

Very respectfully, yours,

Z. B. VANCE.

RALEIGH, N. C., September 1, 1864.

Hon. JAMES A. SEDDON,
Secretary of War Confederate States of America:

DEAR SIR: In view of the late enormous advance and still advancing rates of railroad fares and freights, I have thought that they were very proper subjects of consideration by the commissioners of appraisement, both in their conventions and in their periodic State meetings. At present there seems to have been no check or even opposition to the unbounded rapacity of these companies, which equally with the high price of wheat and corn, &c., threaten to destroy the value of our money by again flooding the country with an inflated currency, and thus upsetting the admirable plans of our wise and experienced Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Trenholm, who undoubtedly, if aided by a reasonable support by the country, would soon reduce the recent chaos in our finances to order and value, if not to a perfect peace basis. I therefore propose at our meeting on the 30th instant to bring up this matter for consideration, and to subject the rates of fares and freights on railroads to the same scrutiny and action that the farmers and manufacturers have submitted to, and hope we shall be aided by the active support of your Department and that of the Navy and Government generally. To prove the extraordinary and excessive charges by the railroad companies of the Confederacy it is only necessary to state that a rapid and constantly occurring advance of fares and freights have taken place (and to which there appears to be no check) till prices have advanced from the usual rates of 3 to 4 cents per mile up to 18, and even as high as, in the case of the new Piedmont Railroad (from Greensborough to Danville), 20 cents per mile is now charged, while the dividends of these companies are as high as from 30 to 60 per cent. per annum. In short, I see nothing in the whole range of prices and of speculation that more demands restraint and scrutiny than the rapaciousness and greed of the railroad companies of our country.

Hoping to have your views,

I am, with high respect, your obedient servant and friend,
H. K. BURGWIN.

SEPTEMBER 2.

I have just learned that the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad have again more than doubled their rates, viz, from $10 up to $22 fare, and that the Petersburg and Roanoke Railroad Company have raised theirs from $10 to $15.

To Quartermaster-General for consideration and remarks. Is there justice in these strictures; and what think you of the proposed action for relief?

By order of Quartermaster-General:

W. F. ALEXANDER,
Major and Assistant to the Quartermaster-General.

[Third indorsement.]

RICHMOND, September 13, 1864.

Respectfully returned to Quartermaster-General.

The rates alluded to within are charged to individuals. Government is charged for troops from 5 to 7½ cents per mile, or about twice "peace prices," and on freights in about the same ratio. These rates are not excessive, but on the contrary extremely liberal. The roads find their profit in caring for individuals, and if the private rates are cut down by act of Government it is inevitable that Government rates must be advanced. Speculators, &c., are thus indirectly aiding in keeping down the price of one of the heaviest items of Government expense. Transportation by rail is beyond all question rendered to Government at lower rates than anything else in the Confederacy. It is true it is done at the expense of the people, and in that view it might be well to intrust the regulation of railroad charges to the commissioners, but it should not be lost sight of that the Government may be made to suffer by the operation.

F. W. SIMS,
Lieutenant-Colonel, &c.

[Fourth indorsement.]

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
September 15, 1864.

Respectfully returned to the Honorable Secretary of War, whose attention is invited to the views of Lieutenant-Colonel Sims. It is believed that the action of the commissioners could fix rates only for Government transportation.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA,
WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSCRIPTION,
Richmond, Va., September 5, 1864.

General B. BRAGG,
Commanding, &c.:

GENERAL: Your communication of the 30th ultimo, asking an additional list of the officers employed in the office of the Bureau in this city, with a statement of the particular duty which each is performing, and all inspection reports received since the 1st of May, ultimo, was received at the Bureau during my absence.

I am informed that the list of officers, with a statement of the particular duties to which each is assigned, has been sent to you as asked.

I have the honor to state in reply that the materials do not exist for furnishing you copies of inspection reports since May 1, 1864.

This Bureau has no file of inspection reports, the results of such inspections as are made being either reported not beyond the commandants of conscripts for the several States or being embodied, without formality, in the mass of current correspondence and indorsements, and are thus scattered through the body of miscellaneous office records, without any attempt at separate classification.

It was intended, if possible, to have a small corps of inspectors reporting to the Bureau through Lieutenant-Colonel Lay, its chief inspector, whose ordinary station is at this office, but the plan has been heretofore impracticable of execution, because there was no feasible mode of obtaining the appointment of the necessary suitable officers, or of securing, by assignment from the Army, officers with the requisite qualifications. The supply of officers for the conscript service is under existing regulations exclusively from the disabled list, and is altogether insufficient to furnish the Bureau with enrolling officers suitable for the ordinary duties to be performed by them.

It has been, therefore, impracticable to obtain from this source as many suitable officers for the duties of inspection as were required. The few who could be made available for such duty have been ordered to report habitually to the commandants of conscripts for States, these latter being select officers, having the full confidence of the Bureau, and under whose immediate orders the inspecting officers can be made useful for the instruction of subordinates imperfectly acquainted with their duties.

These commandants are themselves, in substance, ex officio inspectors, reporting results in the form of daily general or special correspondence. Arrangements have everywhere been made to relieve them from the immediate executive commands of camps, so that their time is free in part for travel in their respective States.

In arranging its department of inspection the Bureau looked upon it as a mere affair of internal policy and exclusive to itself, and did not consider the nomenclature adopted as binding it to any rules of form or precedent. There was at first but one "inspector of conscription" acting at the headquarters of the Bureau in Richmond, unless specially detached. When not so detached, his duties are the examination upon reference of all questions, in any way suggested, respecting the practical working of the service, and of all mooted issues in regard to or presented by its individual officers.

In presenting the results of his examinations no form has been observed, unless occasionally where a somewhat elaborate presentation of the subject was appropriate. The convenience of office working and record has best been consulted by his reporting, orally or informally, in unsigned written memoranda, or in the shape of instructions or indorsements, prepared to issue; if adopted, over the signature of the chief, or other executive officer of the Bureau. The results of his work are, therefore, distributed through the records in such a way that they cannot be disentangled.

When the system of appointing subordinate inspectors was instituted, the arrangement was informally adopted in the Bureau of distinguishing its chief inspector, for reasons of obvious convenience, by the designation of inspector-general of conscription.

The inspecting officers, commandants, and others were made aware that they would address themselves or be referred to that officer for information in case of doubt or difficulty as to the construction of orders or the general views of the Bureau, and the work of the office proper is thus lightened.

This inspector has made some long journeys in the several States, and aided the service by communicating instructions to its officers and assisting in the changes of organization called for by its wants. He has not been detached since May 1, 1864, owing to various circumstances, especially the pressure of office work during the recent absence of the superintendent.
